Mr. GORMAN. I am quite certain the Senator from Alabama does not intend that, and I ask him if that is not the effect of his amendment. I think it would stop everything that is contemplated in the first paragraph of the amendment until that agreement had been formally entered into by the majority of the Republics south of us.

Mr. MORGAN. That is precisely what I want to do; that is exactly what I am trying to do. I do not think we have got any agreement—I know we have not—that is binding upon anybody, and I do not propose to commit the President of the United States to executing an agreement or to commit Congress to the expenditure of money until we have an agreement. These people can "renig" at any time they please, and leave us with our appropriations and expenditures here, and all that, without any foundation, in fact, or any agreement to go on.

Mr. HALE. The President will not go on unless a majority of these States send delegates. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not know.

Mr. HALE. Therefore I do not think the amendment of the Senator does any harm.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to change the point where my amendment comes in. Let my amendment come in after the word "expedient" in the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, and not after the words "as follows."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. So as to read:

To enable the President to complete the work and carry into effect the recommendations of the International American Conference, as stated in his message of June 2, 1890, and so far as he shall deem it expedient when the same are agreed to by the Governments represented in such conference, or a majority of them, as follows, including compensation of translators, etc.

Mr. HALE. That is better, Mr. President.

Mr. COKE. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Alabama that if a majority of the Republics of Central and South America have to agree, and there should be others who did not join in the agreement, he would find it impossible to survey a railroad across the territory of the non-consenting powers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The fact is that these messages of the President were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations for consideration. So far as I am informed the committee has not yet had any opportunity to consider the reports and recommendations of the International Conference at all, and therefore the action of the Committee on Appropriations, without so far as I know any communication with the chairman or any member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, takes me somewhat by surprise. I am not prepared to say whether any part of this thing ought to be done at this present moment or not, for the committee to which the subject was referred has had it, by this report of the Committee on Appropriations, apparently entirely taken out of its hands for consideration.

So, while I am not going to affirmatively oppose these recommendations of the Committee on Appropriations (who undoubtedly ought to have everything concerning the safety of the Government in their hands) I think it right to mention that I wish to take these amendments sub modo, as the saying is, for the time being, and without being committed to any part of them, and for the reason that I have not had the opportunity, and I believe the proper committee has not, to consider the subject.

That is all I wish to say on that topic. I am not going to interfere. I merely wish to propose while I am up, on page 8, line 25, of these amendments, to strike out the words "complete the work and;" so as to read:

To enable the President to carry into effect, etc.

I do not think we ought to start with the proposition of completing any work which is not yet agreed upon. I presume my friend will have no objection to that.

Mr. HALE. It is my impression that the amendment we are on now was reported to our committee by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations. I will ascertain. I think this is one of those amendments.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Vermont and the Senate to the fact that the Committee on Foreign Relations will meet to-morrow morning, and we can have the subject brought up for examination, as I think ought to be done. I think we ought to understand exactly how far we are going before we take a step.

Mr. REAGAN. At the bottom of page 9, the paragraph which provides "for an international coin or coins" reads:

And the President of the United States is authorized to invite the Governments of the several other American Republics and the Hawaiian Kingdom to appoint commissioners for a like purpose to meet in the city of Washington on the first Wednesday of January, 1891.

It seems to me deserving of consideration whether there may not be something the Government of the United States will have to do before it can probably get a diplomatic agreement with other Governments, and we had better look carefully at that before adopting any provision of that kind.

Mr. HALE. Well, Mr. President, the committee has waited long and there has been ample opportunity for every Senator to look at these matters. I have no pride of opinion about them, neither has the Committee on Appropriations, but it has felt, and I feel now, that this is simply in the direction that we ought to move, and we ought not to lose any time. There may be criticism as to form and as to words in different places, and you may strike the whole out and say this whole operation may cease and nothing may be done. The proper place for it is on this diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and the committee only took what amendments were referred to it and conferred with the Secretary of State.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What committee referred these amendments to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. HALE. The amendments were referred to the committee direct.

Mr. EDMUNDS. From where?

Mr. HALE. From the floor of the Senate, which is a body almost as high as the Committee on Foreign Relations. The Committee on Appropriations has only dealt with amendments that it found before it.

Now, if there is a disposition to wait, and to delay, and to obstruct, and put amendments on here that will stop the operation of this thing, which we all claim to be for, I can not hinder it. I protest against any such action being taken, and I should be glad to have the bill finished to-night.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the pending question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is still pending.

Mr. HALE. I do not object to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On page 8, line 25, I move to strike out the words "complete the work, and," so as to read:

To enable the President to carry into effect the recommendations, etc.

Mr. HALE. I think that is an improvement. I do not object to that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. HALE. On page 12, line 1, after the word "Rome," I move to insert "and;" and in the same line, after "St. Petersburg," to strike out "and Vienna;" and in line 2, after "each," to strike out "twenty-one" and insert "eighteen;" so as to make the clause read:

Consuls-general at Constantinople, Ecuador, Frankfort, Ottawa, Rome, and St. Petersburg, at $3,000 each, $18,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. PLATT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAWES. I ask that the legislative appropriation bill may be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9066) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments to which the House has not agreed and consent to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. DAWES, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. CALL were appointed.

PREVENTION OF COLLISIONS AT SEA.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask that the pending business may be laid aside for the purpose of taking up the bill (S. 3917) to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea. The bill adopts the recommendation of the International Maritime Conference. It is strongly recommended by the Department of State. It will take, I think, only the time needed to read the bill. It is to take effect only on the proclamation of the President and the adherence of the other Governments. All the maritime nations were parties to the convention, and the Department is anxious that in communicating with the other Governments, which it will do soon, it can communicate the action of this Government. The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce. There are two bills. They are important public matters in which I have no personal interest.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HALE. What is that request?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To consider the bill (S. 3917) to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea.

Mr. FRYE. The bill ought to pass because it must be sent over to the other House before a grant while. Notice of acceptance by this Government will model the action of the other Governments. It is the report of the maritime conference.

Mr. HALE. All right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 6, section 1, line 24, after the word "such," to insert "a"; so as to read:

And of such a character as to be visible, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, section 1, line 13, before the word "prescribed," to strike out "a" and insert "as"; so as to read:

To be used as prescribed above.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, section 1, line 20, after the word "sailing," to insert "vessels"; so as to read:

Second. If sailing vessels, of 7 tons gross tonnage and upwards, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLLISION AT SEA.

Mr. FRYE. There is one other bill of the same kind.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask the Senate now to consider the bill (S. 3918) in regard to collision at sea. It is part of the same recommendation. The two measures ought to go together to the other House.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The first section provides that in every case of collision between two vessels it shall be the duty of the master or person in charge of each vessel, if and so far as he can do so without serious danger to his own vessel, crew, and passengers (if any), to stay by the other vessel until he has ascertained that she has no need of further assistance, and to render to the other vessel, her master, crew, and passengers (if any) such assistance as may be practicable and as may be necessary in order to save them from any danger caused by the collision, and also to give to the master or person in charge of the other vessel the name of his own vessel and her port of registry, or the port or place to which she belongs, and also the name of the ports and places from which and to which she is bound. If he fails so to do and no reasonable cause for such failure is shown, the collision shall, in the absence of proof to the contrary, be deemed to have been caused by his wrongful act, neglect, or default.

Section 2 provides that every master or person in charge of a United States vessel who fails, without reasonable cause, to render such assistance or give such information as aforesaid, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be liable to a penalty of $1,000, or imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years; and for the above sum the vessel shall be liable and may be seized and proceeded against by process in any district court of the United States by any person, one-half such sum to be payable to the informer and the other half to the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT BROOKE MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill (S. 2786) for the donation of Fort Brooke military reservation at Tampa, Fla., for free schools, and other purposes. An amendment to the bill was recommended by the Committee on Public Lands, and passed the Senate by vote, and I am authorized by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] to say that the opposition to it is withdrawn.

By unanimous consent, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate. It has been read, as in Committee of the Whole, amended, reported to the Senate, and the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole has been concurred in.

Mr. CHANDLER. What is the Calendar number of the bill?

Mr. GORMAN. It has passed the Senate heretofore.

Mr. CALL. The bill has passed the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. What is the Calendar number? I ask.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No. 488.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JACKSONVILLE, ST. AUGUSTINE AND HALIFAX RIVER RAILWAY CO.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. HALE. Let us adjourn.

Mr. HAWLEY. No, let me call up a bill that will pass without objection.

Mr. HALE. I give notice that after it is disposed of I shall insist on a motion to adjourn.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to call up a bill, and a word of explanation will make it easy. The same bill has passed both Houses. It passed the Senate, and I had it recalled from the other House in order that I might put it as an amendment on the House bill. It is in a little different form. The Senate bill is amended, perfected. I will now report favorably from the Committee on Military Affairs, if the Senate is willing, the bill (H. R. 9104) granting to the Jacksonville, St. Augustine and Halifax River Railway Company a right of way across the United States military reservation at St. Augustine, Fla.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator report the bill without amendment?

Mr. HAWLEY. With an amendment. I wish to call up now the bill (S. 2865) granting to the Jacksonville, St. Augustine and Halifax River Railway Company a right of way across the United States military reservation at St. Augustine, Fla., which is on the table, and I move to reconsider the vote by which it was passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I now move to strike out all after the enacting clause in the House bill and substitute therefor the Senate bill, which is the amendment of the Military Committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. Strike out all after the enacting clause in the House bill and insert:

That the Jacksonville, St. Augustine and Halifax River Railway Company, a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the State of Florida, be, and is hereby, granted a right of way across the prolongation of "the lines" or ditch on the United States military reservation at St. Augustine, Fla., for the construction, maintenance, and use thereon of one or more tracks and sidings, as may be approved by the Secretary of War: Provided, That the said right of way shall not exceed 100 feet in width, and shall be subject to such change, revocation, or removal as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, at the expense of the railroad company.

Sec. 2. That the said company shall provide and keep clear a sufficient channel at the proper grade for the flow into and out of the ditch in "the lines;" and shall, upon request by the Secretary of War, provide a grade crossing for teams and tram-cars across its tracks in the prolongation of "the lines."

Sec. 3. That the work hereby authorized and directed shall be done to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War.

Sec. 4. That if the right hereby conferred shall not be exercised and the road built within two years next after the passage of this act all the rights and authority hereby granted shall absolutely cease and determine.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported from the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. DAVIS, and Mr. COCKBELL were appointed.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives further insisting on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 9 and 10 to the bill (H. R. 7160) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the Senate recede from its amendments to the bill. This is the general appropriation bill for pensions. The disagreement is only on one item of amendment made by the Senate, providing for two additional pension agencies. The other House have after two conferences declined to agree to the Senate amendment, and there is no possibility of an agreement. I therefore move that the Senate recede.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland moves that the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 9 and 10 to the bill. The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 11th instant, a report from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs relative to the amount of claims heretofore presented to the Department on account of Indian depredations, etc., which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 54 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, June 25, 1890, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 24, 1890.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN, D. D.

APPROVAL OF THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the Journal as read will be approved.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that the Clerk has not read, as customary, that part of the Journal which relates to the resolutions and bills referred when the House is not in session. I notice on page 6925 of the RECORD this statement:

HOUSE BILL WITH SENATE AMENDMENTS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a House bill of the following title, with Senate amendments, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9086) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Appropriations.

I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that if the House decided anything in regard to the silver bill it was that it could not be referred out of the open session of the House, but that it must be referred while the House was in session, so that if the House desired to correct the reference at the time, by appealing from the decision of the Chair or otherwise, if it was not satisfied with the accuracy of the reference, it would then have the opportunity to do so. I had supposed from that action that the policy of the House in the future and the practice to be established under the rule would be as I have indicated. I also inferred this from the further fact that the Speaker stated, when the silver bill was referred in open House, that he "now referred" that bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, the assumption being that the bill was then on the Speaker's table. I think, therefore, the clause that I have read should be stricken from the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. SPRINGER. So far as I am individually concerned, I am somewhat indifferent as to what the practice shall be under the rule, and I only call attention to this with the view of securing uniformity. I think it desirable that we should have at least uniformity in our practice, because a bill of the importance of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill with Senate amendments ought to have been laid before the House, so that the House itself could pass upon the question of reference and concur or non-concur in the amendments of the Senate.

I understand this action to be a reversal of the policy of the House as laid down by the result of appeals from the decision of the Chair, and the action of the House taken itself, during the discussion of the silver bill on Friday and Saturday of last week. I merely call the attention of the House to the fact now, and as the Speaker has held that the reference in question is a proper one, I will not make any further objection.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the Journal will stand approved.

The Chair hears none.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Does the gentleman from Illinois claim that this bill would not have to go to the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. SPRINGER. I did not hear the remark of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I wish to know if you claim that this would not have to go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPRINGER. I claim that it should go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Then, of course, it is correctly referred.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say in this connection that it has not been customary to read the list of bills in the Journal because of the length of time it would consume, and also because of the fact that the list is furnished by the RECORD where every one can see it.

The Chair desires to state that it has never been the custom—

Mr. SPRINGER. No, not the custom to read the list of bills, but the references.

The SPEAKER. And this has been misunderstood in some quarters; and the fact that the silver bill was not read when the silver bill was referred has been made a handle of in some directions to criticize unfairly the action taken; but every member knows that it was not read because such has not been the custom of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have not made that criticism, Mr. Speaker, and if any person outside has made the assertion or is under that impression I hope it will be corrected.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes, also, that if any one outside has done it it will be corrected, because it is important that the public should not be misled as to the integrity of our record; and the action in that respect has, as the Chair has suggested, been made use of to create that impression.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have not seen such a statement myself in the papers, but I hope if it has been made that it will be corrected.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill with Senate amendments, and recommend concurrence in a part of the amendments and non-concurrence as to others.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9066) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes, together with the amendments of the Senate—

Mr. HOLMAN (interrupting the reading). Mr. Speaker, this reading of course will not suspend the point of order that this matter should have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to make that point.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the amendments ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order that the amendments should be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Permit me to say to my friend from Indiana, before pressing the point, that the differences, and the only ones, between the two Houses, relate to an increase of the forces in the several departments of the Government and an increase of salaries. The Committee on Appropriations has asked the House to non-concur in these increases, and has asked concurrence in those only the items of which are in their nature inconsequential and do not increase either the number of officials employed or the amount of salaries paid. Many of the amendments are mere verbal corrections, but wherever the Senate has increased the amount appropriated or the number of employes we have recommended non-concurrence, in deference to what we understand to be the desire of the House in that behalf, and in that regard the committee, I think, are unanimous.

Mr. CANNON. The committee are unanimous.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If there had been any substantial changes or modifications of the bill in any other behalf than those I have mentioned, we should have asked that it go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, with the understanding that all the amendments that increase salaries and officers are reported adversely, that is, with the recommendation that the House non-concur, I do not insist that the amendments shall be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I do not now recall one. There may be one or two, but I do not now recall one case in which we do not recommend non-concurrence in those amendments which increase salaries or officers.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the recommendation in regard to the Senators' clerks?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. We dissented from that and recommended non-concurrence.

Mr. HOLMAN. And the same as to the other increases of salaries?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not insist on its consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is the objection withdrawn?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, it is withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The House will then consider the bill in the House. The Clerk began reading the report of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the numbers of the amendments, which does not throw any light upon the facts, or furnish us with any information as we listen to them, may be dispensed with.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. There are some three hundred of them altogether.

Mr. SPRINGER. The reading of the numbers does not furnish any light.

The SPEAKER. They ought to be printed in the RECORD. The Chair suggests that they be printed in the RECORD, and without objection it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The report of the Committee on Appropriations is as follows:

Mr. BUTTERWORTH, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted the following report, to accompany bill H. R. 9066:

The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9066) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes, together with the amendments of the Senate thereto, having considered the same, beg leave to report as follows:

They recommend concurrence in the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 9, 10, 31, 32, 33, 35, 36, 37, 38, 45, 54, 55, 58, 63, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 80, 81, 83, 84, 88, 96, 99, 106, 112, 126, 127, 132, 151, 152, 153, 154, 166, 200, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, and 229.

They recommend non-concurrence in the amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 34, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 56, 57, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 82, 85, 86, 87, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 97, 98, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 128, 129, 130, 131, 133, 134, 136, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 188, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 226, and 227.

They recommend concurrence in the amendment numbered 30, with an amendment as follows:

"On page 12 of the bill, in line 30, strike out the words 'under the Chief Official Reporter.'"

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I will ask concurrence in all of those amendments in which the committee recommend it.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon concurrence in such of the amendments as are recommended by the Committee on Appropriations to be concurred in.

The amendments referred to were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The amendments in which concurrence is recommended by the Committee on Appropriations are concurred in. The question is now upon concurrence in an amendment with an amendment, which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk read as follows:

They recommend concurrence in the amendment numbered 30 with an amendment as follows:

"On page 12 of the bill, in line 30, strike out the words 'under the Chief Official Reporter.'"

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the purpose of that amendment?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I will say to my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that that simply is intended to make the law conform to the fact. There is no Chief Official Stenographer now, since Mr. McElhorne's death, and we simply eliminate that part of the bill which designated that officer and fixed his salary.

Mr. DOCKERY. The printed copy of this bill which came from the Senate yesterday reached the Committee on Appropriations at about 9 o'clock this morning; and in view of that fact I desire permission of the House to extend my remarks in the RECORD. It is my purpose to make an analysis of the increased appropriations asked by the Senate, and I have not up to this moment had an opportunity to do this.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, permission will be granted. There was no objection.

Mr. DOCKERY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit only a few observations in reference to the amendments of the Senate. This bill as it passed the House created one hundred and thirty-four new offices and appropriated $20,842,446.75. The Senate has provided one hundred and thirty-one new offices in the bill additional to the one hundred and thirty-four which it carried when it left the House, whilst the increased appropriation added by the Senate amounts to $496,422, making the sum total of the bill as it now stands $21,338,868.75. This very large and extraordinary increase arises in the main from the creation of new offices, the salaries they carry, and the increase of the salaries under existing law.

Inasmuch as there was some controversy in the Senate when this bill was being considered, as to the relative expenditures of the House and of the Senate, I desire to submit, briefly, a comparative statement of the expenditures of the House and of the Senate for the fiscal year which closes on the 30th of this month.

There are three employes in the office of the Vice-President and four employes in the office of the Speaker, the corresponding office here. The employes in the office of the Vice-President receive $4,860, whilst the corresponding employes in the office of the Speaker receive $6,804.80.

There is one Chaplain for the Senate and one Chaplain for the House, and, as I shall show a little further on, that is the only department in the House service in which we stand upon an equality with the Senate.

There are thirty-one officers employed by the Secretary of the Senate, whose salaries amount to $62,418.90, whereas the fifty-six persons who perform like service under the Clerk of the House receive $95,632.

There are employed by the Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate one hundred and eight persons, with salaries amounting to $119,221.20; while the Sergeant-at-Arms and the Doorkeeper of the House employ one hundred and fifty-nine persons, with salaries amounting to $144,144. There are twelve employes in the office of the Postmaster of the Senate, at a compensation of $15,788; twenty employes in the office of the Postmaster of the House, at a compensation of $22,420; thirteen employes in the engineer department of the Senate, with a compensation of $14,950; sixteen employes in the engineer's department of the House, at a compensation of $16,480; sixty-three clerks and messengers to committees of the Senate, at a compensation amounting to $107,860; sixty-one clerks and messengers to the committees in the House, whose compensation amounts to $94,192. The cost of reporting the proceedings of the Senate is $26,440; while the same service in the House costs $35,000, including two stenographers to committees at $4,000 each.

So that, Mr. Speaker, to sum up the entire cost of the clerical force of the Senate, it aggregates $389,326.10, whilst in the House it amounts to $415,672.80. Now, if to this be added the contingent expenses of the House and the contingent expenses of the Senate, we find that the total expenditures on account of the clerical force in the House and contingent fund amount to $524,709.80, whereas the same service of the Senate costs $461,446.10.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us analyze this hurried recapitulation. The Vice-President has three employes, and their average salaries are $1,620. The Speaker has four employes, and the average of their salaries is $1,701.20, the average being $81.20 more than those in the office of the Vice-President. I will say, however, for the Speaker, that the force for the present fiscal year is that which has been carried on that roll for a number of years. That, however, is the only branch of the House service where the average salaries of its employes exceed those of the corresponding service in the Senate.

The Chaplain of the House receives $900; the Chaplain of the Senate receives $900. This is the only branch of the public service upon which we stand upon the plane of absolute equality.

There are thirty-one employes in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, whose average salaries are $2,013; and fifty-six employes under the Clerk of the House, who receive an average salary of $1,707; so that the average salaries of the employes of the Clerk of the House are $306 less than the average salaries of the employes of the Secretary of the Senate.

There are one hundred and eight employes in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate, whose average salaries are $1,104; but the average salaries of the one hundred and fifty-nine persons employed by the House are only $900, or $193 less than those in the Senate.

The twelve employes of the Senate Postmaster receive $1,316 on an average, while the twenty employes here receive $1,121.

In the engineer's department the thirteen employes in the Senate receive an average salary of $1,150, while our sixteen employes only receive $1,030.

The clerks and messengers to the Senate committees, numbering sixty-three, receive on an average $1,712, while the sixty-one clerks and messengers to committees of the House receive $1,544, or $168 less.

The twenty-five annual clerks of the Senate receive $2,262 on an average; the annual clerks of the House are twenty and receive $2,100.

The clerks to Senators during the last year received (I mean those clerks who are not clerks to committees) $36,888. There is no force at this end of the Capitol that enables me to make any comparison in respect to that item.

So that, Mr. Speaker, the average salary of each one of the two hundred and sixty-one clerks employed by the Senate is $1,491, while the average salary of the three hundred and twenty-five clerks employed by the House is $1,275, or $193 less, on an average, than the clerks of the Senate.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman allow me to inquire whether the clerks to individual Senators are continued on the roll during the vacation or only during the session?

Mr. DOCKERY. There are in the Senate twenty-five annual clerks, twenty-five session clerks, and three that are classed as annual assistant clerks.

Mr. OATES. But I am speaking of the clerks to the individual Senators.

Mr. SAYERS. They only serve during the session.

Mr. OATES. What is the compensation of the clerks to individual members of the Senate, and are they continued on the rolls during the year or only during the session?

Mr. DOCKERY. They are only session clerks now, and receive, I think, the pay of $100 a month.

Mr. PEEL. They receive $6 a day.

Mr. OATES. Do they get $100 a month or $180 a month?

Mr. RICHARDSON. They get $6 a day.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am incorrect in that. I believe that the clerks to Senators do get $6 a day.

Mr. OATES. Does that salary continue during the vacation or only during the session?

Mr. DOCKERY. The salary is $6 per day during the session and does not continue during vacation. Again, Mr. Speaker, there are eighty-four Senators and two hundred and sixty-one employes, or an average of three employes to each Senator, whilst there are three hundred and thirty Members of the House and five Delegates, or less than one employe to each member of this body. The average clerical cost, including contingent fund in the Senate, based on the total membership of that body, is $4,473; whilst the corresponding cost in the House is but $1,278. The average difference, therefore, under the current law, amounts to $3,195 in favor of the House.

This sharp contrast, Mr. Speaker, is emphasized in the bill under consideration. The appropriations demanded by the Senate for its contingent fund and clerical force for the next fiscal year amount to $509,066.10, or an average, ascertained on the basis just stated, of $6,060, whilst the like appropriations asked for by the House for the same period amount only to $497,518.30, or an average of but $1,521, as against $6,060 for the Senate. Now, Mr. Speaker, this bill as it passed this body only made an increase of two employes for the House, and provided for a clerical force at a cost of about $393,000 or $29,000 less than was asked for the current fiscal year.

The bill comes back to us from the Senate with the clerical roll of that body increased from 261 to 291 employes, while the appropriations for the service of the Senate have mounted up to $422,296.10, or $57,970 more than during the present fiscal year, although the bill for the next fiscal year provides only for the short session.

Let me recapitulate. As I stated at the outset, I have not had time to analyze this bill fully; and can therefore only state at this time a few of the increases in the force of the Senate. One telegraph page for the Vice-President, $720; in the Secretary's office an additional clerk, salary $2,100; an assistant clerk to the Committee on Claims, at $1,440; the Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper, six additional employes at an expense of $8,640; three additional "skilled laborers" are provided at a cost of $3,000, and three "laborers," at a cost of $2,160; two additional mail-carriers, at a cost of $2,400; six additional folders, at $3 a day; and one clerk, at $1,800. This very large increase of force is supplemented by the increase of the compensation for clerks to Senators now provided for only during the session. In other words, this bill carries an increase of $26,112 on account of clerks to Senators who have heretofore been carried on the rolls as session clerks, but hereafter under the Senate amendment will be compensated with an annual salary of $1,800.

Mr. Speaker, if I had the time and the House the patience I could show that this entire bill, which comes to us from the Senate with nearly three hundred amendments, is honeycombed with provisions for increases of offices and increases of salaries. So great have been the increases, Mr. Speaker, that Senators themselves have protested against them.

I trust, sir, that I do not trench upon the proprieties of debate when I join with Senators in characterizing the greater number of the Senate amendments as extravagant to a degree that invites criticism. Senator INGALLS made the following statement when this bill was under discussion in the Senate:

Mr. President, the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman has an annual clerk at the compensation, I think, of $2,220 per annum. I therefore have no special reason to complain, but at the same time I feel justified in saying that, in my opinion, the whole committee and clerical force of the Senate requires readjustment. There are at least twenty of the standing and select committees of this body that are absolutely superfluous and unnecessary. It has been difficult to find names and invent functions for them. They have been created and established merely for the purpose of assigning some Senator to a chairmanship, giving him a room, and providing for him a clerk, and, in addition, practically a messenger also.

Senator HALE also protested against increasing salaries. Let me remark in passing that there was but one proposition, as I now remember, offered for an increase of offices or of salaries that failed of approval. It was to create the office of superintendent of Senate stables at a salary of $1,440 a year, but when the debate developed the fact that there were already more employes for the stables than there were horses, the amendment was rejected. [Laughter.]

Here is what Senator HALE said upon the subject:

Mr. President, the tendency all the while is to increase the force of the Senate and to increase its pay, and some day or other the result will be that public attention will be called to the expenditures of this body and, if a scandal is not created, at any rate grave public censure will be visited on this bill.

Further on he declares:

It is also a fact, Mr. President, that the best paid places in the whole range of the Government are the subordinate places about the Senate. For the same work, for the same time, for the same responsibility, they are better paid than any other employes of the Government in any Department. They are the most desirable places. There is no man holding a clerkship in any of the Departments or in the House of Representatives but what, if he could change to a corresponding place in the Senate, would not be glad to do it. The rates are higher, the vacations are long, the duties are not onerous, and in my judgment the Senate will make a mistake if it adds to its expenditures now in the direction the Senate is evidently inclined.

Again, Mr. Speaker, when efforts were made to increase the salary of an employe out in Oregon, which had been cut down under a Democratic Administration, Senator ALLISON protested against it in the following language:

In 1885-'86, when the House of Representatives was under the control of an opposing party and when the Administration was under similar control, they cut down the salary of the surveyor-general of Oregon to $1,800 on the ground that that was a sufficient compensation in view of the small appropriations being made for surveys of the public lands. When the Republican party came into power in the executive and in the legislative departments your Committee on Appropriations, following the precedents that have been laid down and have been incorporated in your statutes year by year, are confronted with one amendment after another increasing the compensation of officers appointed under this Administration, when similar officers have served under prior Administrations for the compensation proposed to be appropriated by the bill.

Now, all I ask is that Senators will understand that if this is to be pursued to the logical sequence of the amendment of the Senator from Oregon then this appropriation bill must be practically reorganized as respects these salaries, and we shall be confronted with the question of undoing what has been done for the last twelve years in the way of reducing compensation; and we are called upon now to do this as Republicans at a time when there is complaint, whether just or otherwise, as to the extravagance of Congress, and when there is complaint, whether just or otherwise, of the extravagance of the Senate. We are doing this at a time when there is prevailing over this country a belief that those who are engaged in laboring pursuits are not receiving that compensation which their labors require. We are doing it at a time when a great many people in this country feel the oppression of low prices and of no or but little employment.

I submit to my fellow-Senators on both sides of the Chamber that this is not the time to run through this appropriation bill and increase salary after salary in the Senate above and beyond what has been the rule for the last twelve years.

Then Senator PLUMB, of Kansas, said—

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I think it proper to call my friend's attention to the fact that his remarks, as to their form, are subject to a point of order, because it is not it order to refer to Senators or the Senate in discussing these matters.

Mr. DOCKERY. Why, Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that the rule is subject to any such construction. I am reading from the RECORD, and if I have a right to read this RECORD privately, certainly I have a right to read it in open House.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I am not disposed to criticize my friend at all, but I think he could make the comment he desires to make and still keep within the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman has no right to read from the record of current debate in the Senate. The object of the rule, as the Chair understands it, is to prevent irritation arising between the two bodies.

Mr. DOCKERY. Very well. I shall defer to the views of the Chair. Now, Mr. Speaker, I shall quote from a distinguished Republican, who also commented upon the question at issue in the following terms:

I hope that the Senate will be satisfied, as I said, to stop where they are, and that when we have taken a careful account of the expenditures of this body, we can apply the pruning knife and reduce the expenditures $100,000.

Mr. Speaker, I could multiply quotations in the line of the ones presented, but I forbear, and have briefly adverted to these facts because in due time a conference report will be made, and I hope that in the light of these unquestioned facts—for if I can not quote the statements made in the other body, I can at least refer to the figures—the conference committee which is to be appointed on this bill will stand firm and not recede from the position taken by the Committee on Appropriations in their recommendations that the House non-concur in all the amendments of the Senate which create new offices and increase existing salaries.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I now ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon concurring in the amendment of the Senate with the amendment which has been reported to the House.

The question was determined in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon non-concurring in the amendments recommended for non-concurrence by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendments were non-concurred in.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I now move the appointment of a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER subsequently announced the appointment of Mr. BUTTERWORTH, Mr. CANNON, and Mr. FORNEY as conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH moved to reconsider the several votes in relation to amendments of the Senate to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FUNERAL EXPENSES OF HON. JAMES LAIRD.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to make a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House the sum of $600, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay in full the funeral expenses of the late James Laird, Representative-elect from the Second district of Nebraska.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Accounts, was read:

Strike out the word "sixty" and insert in lieu thereof "thirty-five," so as to make the amount to be paid $335.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed acts of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 1188) granting a pension to Elizabeth Cheesman;
An act (H. R. 3066) granting a pension to John Dunn;
An act (H. R. 4522) granting a pension to J. N. Jordan;
An act (H. R. 0097) granting a pension to James Goff, of Tennessee;

An act (H. R. 8326) granting a pension to Benjamin F. Douglass;
An act (H. R. 8431) granting a pension to Sarah Ann Nos;
An act (H. R. 4807) for the relief of Lydia G. Carnes;
An act (H. R. 5719) for the relief of Harrison Tryon; and An act (H. R. 7367) for the relief of Sarah M. Williams.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER announced the change of reference of a bill of the following title, from the Committee on Military Affairs to the Committee on the Public Lands:

A bill (H. R. 7507) to grant the Mesilla Valley Irrigation and Land Company the right of way for an irrigating ditch across the Fort Selden military reservation in New Mexico.

ANN RUFFNER.

The bill (H. R. 3458) granting a pension to Ann Ruffner was laid before the House with the following amendment of the Senate:

In line 5 strike out the word "cavalry" and insert "artillery."

The amendment was concurred in.

BRIDGE OVER MISSOURI RIVER.

The bill (H. R. 4570) to authorize the Leavenworth and Platte County Bridge Company to substitute a pivot draw-bridge over the Missouri River in place of a ponton bridge was laid before the House with the following amendment of the Senate:

Strike out lines 13 to 22, inclusive, on page 1, and lines 1 and 2, on page 2, and insert the following:

"Not be built or commenced until the plan and specification for its construction have been submitted to the Secretary of War for his approval, nor until he shall approve the plan and location of said bridge; and if any change be made in the plan of construction of said bridge at any time such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War; and any change in the construction, or any alteration of said bridge that may be directed at any time by Congress or the Secretary of War, shall be made at the cost and expense of the owners thereof; Provided, That said Leavenworth and Platte County Bridge Company shall at its own expense build and maintain, under direction and supervision of the Secretary of War, such wing-dams and booms or other works necessary to maintain the channel within the draw span or spans of said bridge, and shall, at their own expense, maintain a depth of water through said draw span or spans not less than that now existing at the point where said bridge may be located; and if said Leavenworth and Platte County Bridge Company shall fail to maintain such channel as aforesaid, then the Secretary of War may cause said channel to be opened and maintained at proper depth for navigation through said span or spans at the expense of the owners of said bridge.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the House non-concur in the amendment of the Senate and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

GEORGE W. MADDEN.

The bill (H. R. 1474) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of George W. Madden was laid before the House with the following amendment of the Senate:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to remove the charge of desertion standing on the records of his Department against George W. Madden, late a private in Company I, Thirty-third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and substitute therefor 'Absent without leave; enlisted April 7, 1863, for four years, in the United States Marine Corps; discharged September 3, 1864, by order of Secretary of Navy, having been enlisted illegally; enlisted again in same corps September 4, 1864; honorably discharged September 4, 1868; re-enlisted November, 1868, and honorably discharged December 13, 1872, at Mare Island, California;' and the charge of desertion so removed and the substitution thereof of 'absent without leave' shall be no bar to his claim for pension."

Amend the title of the bill so as to read "An act for the relief of George W. Madden."

Mr. CAREY. I move that these Senate amendments be concurred in. The motion was agreed to.

KING THEOLOGICAL HALL.

The bill (S. 884) to incorporate the King Theological Hall was laid before the House with the notification that the Senate disagreed to the amendments of the House, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. SPOONER, Mr. HIGGINS, and Mr. HARRIS.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move that the House insist on its amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, COLUMBUS, GA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 188) for the erection of a public building at Columbus, Ga., with request of the Senate for a conference thereon.

Mr. GRIMES. Mr. Speaker, I move to non-concur in the amendments of the Senate and agree to the conference asked.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on bills of the following titles, namely:

On the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 389) granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents.

Also, to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6034) for the relief of Mary Alice White Ogden.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution requesting the President to return to the Senate the bill (S. 145) for the relief of the legal representatives of Henry S. French.

PITTSBURGH, COLUMBUS AND FORT SMITH RAILWAY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 344) granting the right of way to the Pittsburgh, Columbus and Fort Smith Railway Company through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Page 3, line 20, strike out "district."
Page 7, line 23, strike out "and district courts" and insert "courts."
Page 7, line 24, strike out all after the word "Arkansas," down to and including "Congress," in line 26.
Page 7, line 24, after the word "shall," insert "except as provided in section 3 of this act."
Page 9, lines 18 and 19, strike out "prior to the construction and completion of the road."

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the amendments of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM J. BRYAN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1110) granting a pension to William J. Bryan.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 4, strike out all after "United States," down to the end of the bill, and insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension law."

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I move concurrence in the amendments of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

BETSY E. COLE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1405) granting a pension to Betsy Cole.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 4, after the word "Betsy," insert the initial letter "E."
Amend the title to read: "An act to grant a pension to Betsy E. Cole."

Mr. MORRILL. I move concurrence in the amendment of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The title will be amended in accordance with the action of the two Houses.

CHRISTOPHER C. ANDREWS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1452) for the relief of Christopher C. Andrews, with request for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The amendments of the Senate were read at length.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. ALICE A. CUNNINGHAM.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1783) granting a pension to Mrs. Alice A. Cunningham.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

In line 3, strike out the sum proposed by the bill, and insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

Mr. MORRILL. I move concurrence in the amendment of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

HENRY L. POTTER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7263) to increase the pension of Henry L. Potter, with request of the Senate for a conference thereon.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate and agree to the conference asked thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

ENTRY OF PUBLIC LANDS FOR CEMETERY PURPOSES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8247) to authorize the entry of public lands by incorporated cities and towns for cemetery and park purposes, with request for a conference with the House on the said bill and amendments.

Mr. PAYSON. I move that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate and agree to the conference asked thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

LIGHT-HOUSE TENDER, THIRTEENTH LIGHT-HOUSE DISTRICT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 461) making appropriations for a new light-house tender for use in the thirteenth light-house district, with headquarters at Portland, Oregon, with amendments of the House, disagreed to by the Senate, and request for conference on the disagreeing votes thereon.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist upon its amendments to this bill and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

CUSTOMS-COLLECTION DISTRICT, PUGET SOUND.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3163) to reorganize and establish the customs-collection district of Puget Sound, with amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill S. 3163 and ask a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Ordered, That Messrs. DOLPH, CULLOM, and GORMAN be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. WILSON, of Washington. I move that the House insist on its amendments and ask for a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF TIME TO PURCHASERS OF LAND OF OMAHA INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 5974) extending the time of payment to purchasers of land of the Omaha tribe of Indians in Nebraska, and for other purposes, with amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, June 13, 1890.

Resolved, That the bill from the House of Representatives numbered 5974 do pass with the following amendments:

Page 1, line 15, after the word "due," insert:
"And the Secretary of the Treasury shall retain in the Treasury all moneys heretofore and that may hereafter be paid as principal, under the act approved August 7, 1882, and shall pay over 5 per cent. thereof annually to the Secretary of the Interior, to be expended by him annually for the benefit of said Indians as prescribed in section 3 of said act, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay all interest that has been paid on lands sold under said act to the Secretary of the Interior, to be by him paid over to said tribe, to be distributed to the members thereof pro rata by the agent of said tribe, and all interest hereafter coming into the Treasury shall be paid over and distributed to said tribe annually in like manner."

Page 1, lines 15 and 16, strike out "above mentioned" and insert:

"Of August 7, 1882."
Ordered, That Mr. MANDERSON, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. MORGAN be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the amendments be concurred in without conference.

Mr. CANNON. What is this bill?

Mr. DORSEY. The bill extends the time of the payment of the purchasers of land on the Omaha Indian reservation. The bill passed the House and went to the Senate, and the amendment provides simply that 5 per cent. of the money paid in under the act of August 7, 1882, shall be expended by him annually for the benefit of the Indians.

The amendments were concurred in.

BOARD OF MANAGERS NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED SOLDIERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the joint resolution (H. Res. 138) with amendments:

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, June 19, 1890.

Resolved, That the joint resolution (H. Res. 138) to increase the number of members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers and to fill vacancies in such board do pass with the following amendment:

In line 11 strike out "Augustus B. Farnham" and insert "Thomas W. Hyde."

Resolved, That the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on said joint resolution, with amendment.

Ordered, That Messrs. HAWLEY, MANDERSON, and WALTHALL be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendment and agree to the conference asked for.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire—

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] to non-concur in the Senate amendment and agree to the committee of conference.

The SPEAKER announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. SPINOLA. How many voted "ay?" I voted "nd."

The SPEAKER. Unless there are some more vigorous measures taken the Chair will announce that the motion is agreed to.

WILLIAM P. ATWELL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 209) to authorize the Secretary of War to cause to be mustered William P. Atwell. The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, June 20, 1890.

Resolved, That the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 209) to authorize the Secretary of War to cause to be mustered William P. Atwell, and ask a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Messrs. MANDERSON, DAVIS, and COCKRELL be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is this bill?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title again.

The Clerk again read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House insist upon its amendment and agree to the committee of conference?

The question was taken, and it was decided in the affirmative.

THE SILVER BILL.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Rules to make the following report and ask immediate action thereon.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the accompanying resolution of the House relating to a time for the consideration of House bill No. 5381 (the silver bill), have considered the same, and beg leave to report the following substitute:

Resolved, That immediately after the passage of this resolution the House proceed to consider House bill No. 5381, with Senate amendments, and at 2 o'clock Wednesday, June 25, 1890, the previous question be considered as ordered.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I demand the previous question.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman is willing to allow twenty minutes' debate on each side on this resolution and will agree to that before the previous question is ordered—

Mr. MCKINLEY. I yield to the gentleman such time as he may want, to distribute in his own way.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let us have the twenty minutes.

Mr. MCKINLEY. If the gentleman from Georgia wants twenty minutes' debate I would rather consent now to twenty minutes' debate upon each side instead of taking up the time in ordering the previous question. With the understanding that we can have a like time on our part, if we desire it, I am perfectly willing to consent to that.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am perfectly content with forty minutes' debate, twenty minutes on either side now, instead of after the previous question is ordered.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Is it in order to offer an amendment to the resolution at this time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I move the previous question, and then withhold it, so that gentlemen on the other side may take their twenty minutes now; that it shall be considered as ordered or my right to demand the previous question, and gentlemen on the other side can take their twenty minutes.

Mr. BLOUNT. That the previous question be considered as ordered?

Mr. McMILLIN. Let them order it.

Mr. BLOUNT. There is objection on this side.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Then let us order the previous question and take the time for debate after the previous question is ordered.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. There are twenty minutes for debate on either side.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague and I on the committee were not able to concur in this resolution for the reason that we thought the time had come when there ought to be some opportunity of unrestricted consideration of a measure so important as the silver bill. The House will remember that when it was considered before it was under a special rule, which took it out of the Committee of the Whole, which limited beforehand the time when debate should cease, which limited in the beginning the time when amendments should any longer be in order, and which had the effect, whether intended or not, of preventing amendment.

In that way it was put through the House. It was passed without amendments or without opportunity to amend, which ought to be the right of the House, and went to the Senate. It is disclosing no secret to say that gentlemen who voted for it did so under protest; did so, stating to the House that they would not support it but for the fact that the Senate would have a chance for deliberate consideration and amendment. I submit to the House whether this is a proper method of legislating for sixty-odd millions of people? Why abdicate in behalf of the Senate and dump our immature measures upon the Senate?

It went to the Senate; it was amended there; it came back to this House, and the proceedings by which it was referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures are a part of the history of this House. That committee, I understand, have reported it back this morning. Now, before even their report is printed, before it has been read, before it has been considered for one moment, it is proposed to apply a new iron-bound rule and to again cut off the right of amendment and to again cut off the right of debate. Now, it was thought by a good many when this bill came to the House that it was not subject to consideration in Committee of the Whole, but that when laid before the House by the Speaker, under the second clause of Rule XXIV, the House might determine what should be done with it; but in the course of three days' parliamentary fight, it was determined that it should go to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and, having gone there, the House had the right to consider it in Committee of the Whole. But that is taken off by this rule, and we are to have the previous question ordered on it to-morrow and a final vote upon the Senate amendments. If the power is artfully used, the enemies of free coinage can again defeat the will of the people and free coinage.

When the present code of rules was adopted there were very radical changes made in those rules, the most radical that ever have been made since the organization of the Government.

Those changes were made under pretense that it was done to enable the House to transact the business, but in the face of that the code of rules has been utterly ignored and has been allowed to fall into "innocuous desuetude," and we have from time to time had new rules for the consideration of each important measure. The House ought to have notice of the rules under which measures are to be considered. It ought not to have one rule to-day and another rule to-morrow and another the next day. Against this constant change and uncertainty and the tying of our hands before we begin the conflict of legislation we have entered our protest and have not joined in the report.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. Do I understand, under this rule, that the vote to be taken to-morrow, in the regular order, would be, first, to concur in the Senate amendments and then to non-concur and ask for a committee of conference? If I understand the parliamentary situation, that is the way; and that is what I desire to know.

The SPEAKER. That will be the case. Provided a motion to concur should be made, that would have precedence; but that might be open to amendment.

Mr. BLAND. I want to give notice that I desire to move to concur in the Senate amendments.

So far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, the bill as amended by the Senate is entirely satisfactory to me, and I am ready to vote upon it to-day or to-morrow, whenever the House sees proper. It is very true I would have liked in the beginning to have more time for the consideration of the bill and more time for amendments when it was before the House, in order that the House might have sent a better bill to Senate; but that was not conceded. Now we have got a good bill, and I hope the House will concur in it. I am quite willing to fix to-morrow at 2 o'clock or to-day at 2 o'clock or any other day for that purpose.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will now proceed.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I only want to say a word in conclusion. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned the only difficulty we have about this matter is a right which I think has been restricted without reason on several occasions—the right of considering Senate amendments, which, under the rules, have to go to the Committee of the Whole—the right to exercise that privilege.

Now, it is well known, sir, that only a few days ago, on this very silver bill, there was a restraint on the part of the majority of this House by reason of an order made and agreed to in advance of debate. There was a restraint on the rights of the majority of this House to do what it wanted to do. There were three days afterwards wasted on a parliamentary question, fought with intense earnestness, because the majority of this House believed it had been wronged on this question.

We have gotten into the habit on every question of any importance, before any debate is had, before the House is enlightened by debate, to see what amendments are desirable, before there has been any debate had to indicate whether or not the subject has been sufficiently elaborated in order to reach the truth; there has been a habit—in advance of all this, by an order, by an edict emanating from the Committee on Rules—of declaring that there shall be a limit to the amendments and a limit of debate. We have seen it on various propositions. The Committee of the Whole took time for amendment, time for discussion, legitimate discussion, and legitimate amendment; but the Committee on Rules are weary of that and have inaugurated a system in this House which takes from the minority the power it has under the rules of the House in relation to important questions, which rules were made in the interest of sound legislation. Why, sir, we had better at once abolish the Committee of the Whole. I have in my hand the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the Forty-ninth Congress, in which an order of this sort was sought to be made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT], and the present distinguished Speaker of this House, then on the floor, objected to it. He objected to it because, he said:

Under this resolution we had no debate under the five-minute rule, which is the most valuable debate there is. We get no consideration of particular measures.

Mr. HERBERT. We do.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Alabama knows as well as anybody else that in the consideration of a bill like this the best debate is the five-minute debate, because there is more consideration of particular points.

I read this, Mr. Speaker, because it was based on sound reason, and the present Speaker of the House before he was the Speaker was always in favor of fair debate and opportunity for amendment; but, now that he has the power to do his own will without debate, it is much easier to do it in that way. It is perhaps a little inconvenient for men who have opinions of their own, but is all right for the majority. [Laughter.] I have instanced this, I say, because it illustrates the proceedings that we had here only a few days ago on the silver question. I do not know what may come next, but I am not willing, in the face of the fact that in all parliamentary bodies in England and in this country, with the best parliamentarians of the world, there has been a general insistence upon the importance of the Committee of the Whole in the consideration of certain classes of questions—I am unwilling, I say, at any time to consent to any order the purpose of which is to do away, in impatience, with this wise principle of legislation. I do not know, sir, what may take place here in relation to this silver bill or what may be the special inconvenience in the operation of this order in this case. I do not know what amendments the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures may offer to the bill; I can not anticipate the parliamentary situation; I can not know in advance what motions will be made, and therefore I do not believe it is right or wise, in the outset, before knowing the situation, to deliberately tie our hands in this way.

In the debate on the silver bill previously had, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY], when I stated that there would be no right to vote on the question of free coinage, that there would be four amendments offered, all coming from the other side and all following one line of thought, responded: "Why, you have all the rights you have under the rules of the House." Well we did have all the rights we had under the rules of the House as the rules were administered, and when we had it, with all its seeming fairness, with all the demand there was for the free coinage of silver in this country, we never had an opportunity to vote upon free coinage. The disciplinary process has been steadily going on in Republican caucuses, in Republican councils, and in the Republican Committee on Rules, to prevent such a vote.

Now, what will be the situation when we shall execute this order and come to a vote? The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY] has declined to take any portion of his time to make explanations or suggestions to which I might make such reply as seemed to me proper, but I can see, and I fear the members of the House will see, that the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures will come in with their cut-and-dried motion to concur, not in the Senate amendments to the House bill, but in the Senate amendments with amendments, and the previous question being ordered on the same we shall never reach a vote on the question of free coinage. And when we shall have done that, with the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures of this House adverse to it, with the presiding officer of the Senate adverse to it, with the conferees of the two Houses adverse to it, I can see how this Congress may never reach a vote on that question. I am not willing, therefore, in view of the situation on the silver question, to vote for this order; but even if I saw no difficulty in this case, I would still urge upon the members of this House—for they know now when the differences between them shall cease to be differences of party—I would urge upon the majority of this House, I would urge upon the minority of this House, to execute and preserve that rule which requires a certain class of legislation to be considered in the Committee of the Whole, to preserve it as one of the most important rules of this House, having its sanction in the precedents and the practice of all the other great parliamentary bodies in the world. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this resolution must be manifest to both sides of the Chamber. It is that we may have some definite and speedy action touching the subject of silver, and give to the country a larger use of silver as a circulating medium and do it at once, and I am very much surprised to find gentlemen on the other side of the House to-day engaged in opposition to this bill who, three or four days ago, were insisting that this question should not go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, but should be considered immediately in open House, because, as they said, they and the country were ready to vote upon it. They said in that debate, Mr. Speaker, that the purpose of this side of the House was to smother the silver bill, to send it to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, where it would sleep during the remainder of this session, and that we should have no silver legislation at all.

We have given to-day a direct refutation of that unfounded charge made last week, that the purpose of this side of the House was to delay and indefinitely postpone silver legislation. We did not choose to abdicate last week in favor of the other side of the Chamber and give them control of this House. We determined on one thing, namely, that the business of this House should be conducted in accordance with the parliamentary law and the rules which were made at the beginning of this Congress, and that this bill should go to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, where it belonged under the rules and where the Speaker properly referred it; and, so far as we were concerned, that was the whole object of the parliamentary struggle of last week. That was our purpose and our only purpose. We said over and over again that it did not mean delay of legislation upon the silver question, and that, as the Speaker himself said, it was not a question of currency or of coin, but it was a question of the orderly procedure of this House under the rules of the House.

The Republican party having taken possession of this Chamber again [laughter] bring this bill back at once, and what do they invite you to? They recommend non-concurrence in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. They invite you by their report to concur or non-concur in the Senate amendments as you shall determine. If a majority on that side of the House, with gentlemen on this side of the House, desire to concur in the Senate amendments and give us free and unlimited coinage of silver, not only of the silver of our own mines, but the silver of the entire world, and to give the bullion-owners the seigniorage rather than to the Government, as now provided by law, making this Government coin the silver of the world without charge, then by this order we give them an opportunity to do it. That is what concurrence in the Senate amendments will mean.

If the House shall non-concur in the Senate amendments, then a committee of conference will be had, and out of it will come, as we believe, such legislation as will be satisfactory to our whole people of every section and interest, and conform to the majority sentiment here and throughout the country. I am for the largest use of silver in the currency of the country. I would not dishonor it; I would give it equal credit and honor with gold. I would make no discrimination; I would utilize both metals as money and discredit neither. I want the double standard, and I believe a conference will accomplish these purposes.

Mr. Speaker, if it is practical legislation we are after, if it is the desire to coin every dollar of the silver product of the United States and make the Treasury notes issued in payment for that bullion a legal tender for debts, public and private, redeemable in coin, if that is what the people of this country want, they can have it by a vote concurring in the recommendation of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures to non-concur in the Senate amendments and have a committee of conference.

I say to the gentleman from Georgia what he has been pleased to quote from me a number of times, "it is results we are after" on this side of the House and it is politics you are after on the other side. [Applause on the Republican side.] We have passed the period of political maneuvering on this question. We have passed the parliamentary struggle.

We are confronted face to face with the practical question whether we shall have free and unlimited coinage of the world's silver product, before any international arrangement for the monetary use of silver is made, or whether we shall have legislation that will absorb every ounce of silver produced in the United States and make it a part of our monetary system, and accessible to the business uses of the country, and yet not interfere with future international arrangements. That, Mr. Speaker, is what is involved in the report this morning. We give you time for debate, all the time you want. Why, even the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], who has been leading the Democratic party for the last three or four days, says it is all the time he wants, all he needs, that he is ready to vote at 2 o'clock to-day. So are we. But last week we were not ready to vote in opposition to rules and parliamentary laws for the financial policy of that part of the Democratic party led by the gentleman from Missouri. A party like ours, that for thirty years has had control of the financial legislation of this country, that has given the country the best monetary system known to the financial world, was not willing to be stamped by the other side of the House and to give up its splendid record in obedience to the leadership of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], the two great financial statesmen of the Democratic party on the floor of the House. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. BLOUNT. I believe I have two minutes left, which I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. MCKINLEY. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Fourteen minutes.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I reserve that time.

Mr. SPRINGER. In the brief time allowed me—two minutes—I can not answer all of the arguments of the gentleman from Ohio; and it is not necessary.

I concede [addressing the Republican side] you are now offering, according to your statement, what this side of the House has been demanding for the last four or five weeks and what you have persisted in denying. If you are so anxious to give us a vote upon concurring with the Senate amendments or upon free coinage, as you state now, why did you not give it when this bill was before the House on the report of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, when the amendments offered were all agreed to outside of this House and were put to the House in such a manner as to prevent a vote on the question of free coinage? Why did you not give it to us last week, when for three days we were contending in this House, in a very spirited parliamentary contest, for this privilege? Why did you not give it to us then? I will tell you why. You had not heard from the people yet. You have now had your ears to the ground, and you have discovered that the people of the country are demanding that their representatives shall have a vote on this question; and you have tardily consented to give it to us. We accept it. We will take that vote tomorrow at 2 o'clock; and then you will hear from the representatives of the people on this subject. And I warn the gentlemen on the other side who are now seeking nominations from the people that if they expect to be in the Fifty-second Congress they must vote in the affirmative on this question or their places will be taken by Democrats who are in favor of the free coinage of silver.

A MEMBER on the Republican side. Good-bye!

Mr. SPRINGER. Good-bye! I shall have to say it to a great many of you before the meeting of the next Congress.

Mr. McKINLEY. There seems to be nothing to reply to [laughter] and I will ask for a vote.

The question being taken on adopting the resolution, it was adopted.

Mr. McKINLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I now call for the reading of the report of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, to whom was referred House bill No. 5381, directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes, with various Senate amendments, having given the same due consideration, report the same back to the House with a recommendation that the House non-concur in each and all of said amendments and request a conference on the same.

Mr. CONGER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments and request a conference. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. PAYSON. Let us have order.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to move to concur with the Senate amendments. I wish to have that motion pending.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER] moves that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments and ask for a committee of conference. Pending that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] moves that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. McMILLIN. I presume we shall be entitled to a division of the question. There are a number of amendments.

The SPEAKER. The amendments will have to be voted on separately, if demanded.

Mr. BLOUNT. They are all pending?

The SPEAKER. They are all pending.

Mr. BLOUNT. So that we shall get a vote on both questions.

The SPEAKER. If the motion to concur is negatived—

Mr. BLOUNT. That is the first vote?

The SPEAKER. If that motion is negatived it is equivalent to a vote to non-concur.

Mr. BLOUNT. That will be the first question submitted?

The SPEAKER. That will be the first question submitted, the question on concurrence.

Mr. SPRINGER. That will be at 2 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. McCREARY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Does the motion to concur apply to all the Senate amendments on the first vote?

The SPEAKER. The motion covers all the amendments, but any member will have the right to demand a separate vote.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, I came to the beginning of this Congress fully impressed with the necessity of some legislation upon this important question which we have under discussion before us to-day, and I believe I can safely speak for a majority of the members of this side of the House when I say that they came here fully impressed with the same spirit and belief. To that end the committee over which I have the honor to preside have continually and patiently labored.

We gave to the matter before any report was made to the House the fullest possible consideration. We listened to the statements and arguments of every member and of every man who desired to appear before the committee. We had first before us a committee representing the national silver convention that met in St. Louis last fall. General A. J. Warner, of Ohio, came here to represent and speak for that convention, and he came with full authority as expressing the wishes and the views of the convention. We listened to Mr. Warner, we took his suggestions, and we found that upon the date of his appearance before our committee he was practically in accord with the bill which was afterwards reported by that committee and placed upon the Calendar of this House. He indorsed and advocated the commercial instead of the coining ratio between gold and silver, and also the principle of bullion redemption, which are the main features of the House bill. And I understand, Mr. Speaker, if he does not still believe in the principles which were acted upon by the committee in the adoption of that bill, there certainly has come a great change over the spirit of his dream, as well as that of the great crowd of silver men for whom he spoke.

Now, Mr. Speaker, following in that line we reported that bill to the House. We reported a bill which we believed was for the best interests of the whole people of this country—not simply for the bullion-owners, not simply for the holders of capital, but for the interest of every man, woman, and child in this country, for there is nothing upon which the prosperity of a community or a country depends so much as upon safe and judicious financial legislation. For that reason and so believing, while we were all in favor of the additional and enlarged use of silver as money in this country, we tried to find some method in which that enlargement and that additional use could come about without creating great or disastrous financial disturbance. We believed we had arrived at a proper and safe conclusion in that respect when we reported the House bill, and have seen nothing to change that conviction. We still believe it.

I speak for myself when I say that the action of the United States Senate has not changed my views upon this question in the least. Why, Mr. Speaker, the Senators did not discuss the bill that they sent over to us, and they do not want the bill passed. Many of them are ashamed of the legislation which they enacted and sent over here, and they have acknowledged it.

Mr. Speaker, just let me for one moment compare some of the sections of these two bills for the information of the House. The first section of the House bill provided for the purchase of four and a half million dollars' worth of silver bullion each month, four and a half millions of dollars, which is practically the entire product of all the silver mines of this country and of all the ores that are imported and smelted in this country, less the quantity that is used in the arts. Upon this bullion we propose the issue of Treasury notes, which are made by the bill a full legal tender, and which shall be redeemable in coin, gold or silver, because every lawyer knows and will admit that when you specify coin you must mean either kind of coin. Then we provide by our bill some means by which either gold or silver, or both, may be obtained to redeem the notes so issued. That we do by the proviso embraced in the second section of our bill, which provides that upon the demand of the holder the Secretary of the Treasury may exchange silver bullion for these certificates. This enables him, if by reason of this legislation or any other cause gold should rise to a premium or become scarce, to exercise the privilege and thus have an opportunity to procure the gold with which to redeem these circulating notes, if that should be demanded.

Now, it is proposed by some to strike out this feature of bullion redemption. If that should be done what condition are we in? You propose to purchase bullion and issue Treasury notes, making them redeemable in gold or silver coin, and yet you provide nothing but silver with which to redeem them—nothing but silver. If you are going to do that then you want to simply promise to redeem them in silver, and let the people understand just what sort of money they are to get when these notes are issued.

But what does the Senate do with the first section of their bill? They simply come at once to the free and unlimited coinage of silver. They open our mints, not only to the production of our own silver mines, but open them freely to the production of the silver mines of all the world, if it should come here to be coined. This means—and I tell you, gentlemen, the people of this country who are clamoring for free coinage do not understand the full import of immediate free coinage—this means that the man who has $100 worth of bullion can bring it to the mints of the United States and get $130 for it, walking away with $30 profit on each $100. Why, it means a profit to the bullion-owners of this country in a single year of $13,000,000. Are you ready, gentlemen, to put this burden, this tax upon the constituency which you represent on this floor? I, for one, am not at this present moment.

It is proposed by some, and possibly such an amendment may be offered here, to limit the free coinage of silver to the product of our own country. What does that mean? It simply means that you fix a price upon the bullion of this country which is one-third above its actual value and say to the bullion-owner that he can bring it to the mint, can deposit it, and "we will give you 30 per cent. more than it is worth in the markets of the world, and more than you can get for it anywhere else in the world."

Now, there is no more reason for doing that, Mr. Speaker, than for passing a law and advertising to the wheat-growers of the country that we will by law fix the price of their wheat at 30 per cent. above the market price and take it all if they choose to deposit it with us and pay them cash for it.

Under our bill we propose to take the silver of the country at what it is worth, pay for it at what it is worth, and then, if in the coining of it there should be a profit, the Government shall make the profit itself and use it to lessen your taxes and the taxes of your constituents and mine, instead of putting it into the pockets of the bullion-owners.

I want, in connection with this section, to show you the effect of section 5 of their bill which must go with it. Section 5 provides that the owners of bullion deposited for coinage shall have the option to receive the coin, or its equivalent, in the certificates provided for under the provisions of this act; and such bullion shall be subsequently coined. Now, what does that mean? That not only the bullion-owners of our own country can bring the products of their mines to the mints and get legal-tender notes for it, but that all the bullion capital can command, in this country or elsewhere, can, as rapidly as it may be gathered together, be brought here and paid for in legal-tender notes, which are redeemable in gold, not waiting for it to be coined.

Under this provision it is not only possible, but easy, for hundreds of millions of foreign bullion to be brought to our mints in the next ninety days bought with our gold, thus increasing our supply of silver at the expense of gold. Two million five hundred thousand dollars' worth of gold has been sent abroad for this purpose within the last ten days, and the speculators are busy scraping together all the gold they can for the same purpose.

I believe in the policy as announced in the Republican national platform of 1888, of using both gold and silver as money, and I believe the House bill will insure this. The Senate amendments, if at once enacted into law, will drive us to the use of one alone, and that one silver.

Now, gentleman, your constituents do not ask for such legislation as that, neither do mine; and it is not a course that men charged with legislating upon the financial matters of this country ought to accede to. Gentlemen have said upon this floor and elsewhere that in 1878, when the Bland bill was passed, dire prophecies were made as to what would be the result if we coined two or four millions of dollars' worth of silver per month, and they tell us that none of those prophecies ever came true. Well, I know they have not come true, neither has the prophecy of a single free-coinage man, made at that or any other time, come true. The prophecies of the men who opposed free coinage at that time, or who opposed the Bland-Allison bill, or who advocated these measures, have not come true upon either side. And if you would study all the conditions through which we have passed since that time you could easily find the reasons why.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CONGER. Certainly.

Mr. BLAND. What prophecies do you allude to as having been made by gentlemen favoring free coinage at that time?

Mr. CONGER. The prophecy that if that bill was passed silver would at once appreciate to the value of gold.

Mr. BLAND. Another question. Have you ever seen a single statement of that kind on the part of any free-coinage man then or at any other time?

Mr. CONGER. Oh, yes.

Mr. BLAND. I never did. I participated in that debate and I never heard any such claim made, and there was never any such claim, that I remember, made in the House or the Senate.

Mr. CONGER. The country was full of it, and prophecies have been made this winter that under any sort of legislation, that upon either of these bills, silver will at once appreciate to a parity with gold.

Mr. BLAND. I did not make any such claim.

Mr. CONGER. It will appreciate to a parity with gold at the mints under free coinage, simply because you fix the price of what shall go there by law. If under our measure it does appreciate, then of course we are willing to pay for it, because it will be worth it in the markets of the world, and the Government must pay for it what it is worth as well as for any other product; but under free coinage you absolutely agree to pay for it at that price, whether it appreciates in the markets of the world or not. Now, it has been the history of this country that at one time gold has gone up, that silver has gone down, and that at another time silver has been above gold and that gold has gone down, and it has never been true that for any considerable time they have stood side by side at the same value fixed by legislation; and to keep them together the Government has more than once been compelled to change the legal or coining ratio. And it is not likely, if history repeats itself, that it will be true under this Senate proposition. If we shall adopt the policy by which we forcibly by legislation raise the price of silver and put it in circulation as a legal tender, upheld simply by law, without reference to its value anywhere else in the world or without any attention being paid to what the legislation in regard to its use shall be in other parts of the world, you will find that silver will be plenty and cheap in this country, but that gold will of necessity be scarce, and when this is discovered gold is bound to go to a premium and then be hidden, hoarded, or sent abroad.

Then you have got to depend upon your silver money. Now, there are many misfortunes that can and will be likely to come upon us under such a condition of things. I had occasion to say in my remarks the other day that if this condition of things comes about the men who are now the debtors, who are paying the interest upon mortgages upon their farms or homes, will be forced to pay them off at maturity or else renew them payable in gold. Not only that, but there are hundreds and thousands of dollars' worth of mortgages already upon the Western farms to-day that are payable in gold. Legislate in the direction of these Senate amendments and you absolutely prevent these debtors from discharging their debts except at a very great cost and sacrifice, because by the terms of their contract they must pay in gold, and pay a high premium to obtain it.

Mr. FUNSTON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CONGER. Yes.

Mr. FUNSTON. Will you kindly tell us how much better off the farmer will be under your bill which requires them to pay in gold or its equivalent?

Mr. CONGER. Yes, I will tell you that under the Senate proposition you require a man to pay in gold and then by legislation you make it absolutely impossible for him to get it, but under our bill we make gold just as easy to get as silver and it does not matter what his mortgages are payable in. Under our bill it is just as easy to get gold as it is for him to get silver.

Mr. FUNSTON. I beg your pardon—

Mr. CONGER. I grant it.

Mr. FUNSTON. Your bill makes it payable in gold or its equivalent in silver which is really the equivalent of gold. Now, I want you to show how much better off the farmer will be.

Mr. CONGER. Now, I have told you very plainly, and if you have not got hold of it I think you are probably the only one in the House who has not. There is another class of people who will be forced into calamitous circumstances by the passage of the Senate bill, that is the four million savings-bank depositors, nearly fifty thousand in my own State, men, women, and children, who have earned small pittances and saved them out of the sweat of their faces, and deposited them in savings-banks to be called upon in times of sickness or distress. These savings, which ought to be sacred, under our proposition will be paid and can be paid in money that is just as good as that which they deposited.

Under the Senate proposition they have deposited money which is just as good as gold, and they will be paid, if this proposition passes, in money which is largely depreciated by this legislation, and very much less in value than that which they deposited. The laboring men in this country, whose only capital is the sweat of their brows and the exercise of their muscles, receive their pay and must receive it in the current money of the country. To-day they receive it in money which, either by its intrinsic value or by legislation up to this time, is worth 100 cents on the dollar. Pass the Senate bill, and you drive us to a silver basis, to the position of all silver-using countries, and you must pay in silver.

There are nearly 400,000 pensioners on the rolls of our Government, to whom we are paying every year, or will after the bill becomes a law which has just been agreed to by the Senate, $150,000,000. Every dollar in the hands of those men to-day means 100 cents, and its purchasing power is of the very highest. Under this legislation and the condition which it will drive us to, you propose to pay these gallant men, whose scars are their glory, in a currency worth from 25 to 30 per cent. less than its face.

Mr. FUNSTON. Do you not pay them in silver certificates and silver dollars now?

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir; but these silver certificates are just as good as gold.

Mr. FUNSTON. I am glad you have come to our side.

Mr. CONGER. They are worth as much as gold, and always will be worth as much as gold if the condition of things we propose is agreed to.

Mr. FUNSTON. I understood you to claim that the silver dollar was 25 or 30 per cent. depreciated.

Mr. CONGER. No, sir; I have said that it was yet equal to gold, but it would not be so long if we shall attempt singly and alone to coin all the silver of the world.

Mr. FUNSTON. We have always gotten 100 cents for it.

Mr. CONGER. No, sir; I have said that the bullion-owner can take 75 cents' worth of bullion to the Mint and walk away with a dollar that to-day is worth 100 cents, and we want it to continue to be worth that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe that if silver can in any way be brought to a parity with gold then our mints should be opened to its free coinage. If under the operation of the bill proposed by the House silver shall appreciate to a parity with gold, we have provided by the sixth section that our mints shall then be opened to its free and unlimited coinage.

Mr. Speaker, this bill, as we believe, answers every demand of the people of this country. What are those demands? That we shall have an addition to our currency which shall take the place of the rapidly retiring bank notes. This we will get in our proposition. We respond to the demand of the increasing population and of business by a large increase in the circulation that we will get in this bill. We respond to the idea that free coinage ought to come to pass in this country by the section which provides that whenever the conditions are such that it can safely be resorted to it shall be established.

Now, what more do the people of this country want? Gentlemen, the people of this country, outside of the bullion-owners, do not want anything more than this. They want an ample currency, equal to the increasing population, equal to the increase of business, and to supply the deficiency made by the retirement of bank notes, but they want it good and they want it safe. Our bill gives them all that, and without taking any chances whatever.

As I said before, the bullion-owners were not satisfied with this, and I wish that my colleagues upon this floor could understand, as I believe I do and as I am sure they do not, the pressure that has been brought to bear by the men who own or speculate in bullion in this country to have some sort of silver legislation, and that legislation immediate, free, and unlimited coinage. You can not point to a single locality where free-coinage resolutions have been adopted, nor a single paper which has advocated the free coinage of silver, except you find in that locality the foot-prints of the silver-bullion owner or his agents or else the mark of the men who are employed by them in pressing this legislation.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him there?

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Illinois. I wish to deny that so far as my district is concerned. My constituents are decidedly in favor of free coinage.

Mr. CONGER. I think if a disinterested party will go out there and make examination he will find the statement I have made is true.

Why, Mr. Chairman, during this winter there has been about this Capitol the most persistent, courageous, and audacious lobby upon this question that I have ever seen since my term of service here began.

Mr. MCCOMAS. And worse in summer than in winter.

Mr. CONGER. Yes. It has been as bad all the time as it could be; and not only have these paid lobbyists been plying their avocation here, but various other means have been resorted to by the men interested in raising the price of bullion to secure the legislation they demand. Pool after pool has been organized here in this city to speculate in this metal. Money has been deposited in banks in this country by the thousands and hundreds of thousands, lying there ready to purchase bullion with as soon as this legislation shall pass. But they oppose our bill. Why? Simply because if our bill passes they have got to trust to the market value of their product for the profits; while, if free coinage passes Congress, the Government of the United States fixes the value at 30 per cent. above what it is worth and they may bring in all the bullion they can buy. Why, Mr. Chairman, I have been invited time and again to join silver pools, but as long as I hold a seat upon this floor or stand here, my vote shall be cast and my voice raised for the people of this country, for the laboring men of this country, for the savings-bank depositors of this country, for the crippled and scarred soldiers of this country, instead of for a few bullion-owners.

Mr. BLAND. Does not the gentleman know that the free coinage of silver would stop all speculation in it and that that is the only way it can be stopped?

Mr. CONGER. No, sir, I do not; neither does the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BLAND. There is no speculation in gold, and that has free coinage.

Mr. CONGER. I have repeated over and over again, Mr. Speaker, that the speculation, whatever there may be, whatever there can be, will be in the hands of the bullion-owners, who will get it all. None of it will reach the pockets of the people.

Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures have reported this bill back to the House, as some gentlemen think, with indecent haste, but when I made the promise on last Friday that, so far as I was concerned, the bill should come back as soon as it was possible to get it back, I intended to fulfill that promise, and it is now fulfilled. The bill is here before the House with the recommendation of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures that this body non-concur in the Senate amendments. We have made that recommendation because we believe that is the speediest and surest way to secure some legislation upon this silver question. If the Senate amendments are non-concurred in and a conference committee is appointed, the bill goes at once into the hands of that conference committee. It is then privileged, and some sort of legislation will come out of that committee upon which the Senate and this House can agree and the signature of the Executive will make it a law. I am in favor of some sort of silver legislation. But if it shall come about that there shall be no legislation upon this question the responsibility will rest upon the advocates of free silver on this floor, because the delay largely up to this time rests upon their shoulders. Now they have an opportunity to secure the best possible legislation that can grow out of a conference, if this motion to non-concur is agreed to, and I hope, for the sake of revived business and for the general good of the country, that the recommendation of the committee will be agreed to, and early legislation be thus secured.

I reserve the balance of my time.

HENRY S. FRENCH.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DINGLEY) laid before the House the following concurrent resolution of the Senate:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, June 23, 1890.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return to the Senate the bill No. 145, for the relief of the legal representatives of Henry S. French.

The resolution was concurred in.

THE SILVER BILL.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER] assumed that the great pressure for free coinage in this country comes only from the owners of silver mines, and he has alluded to the St. Louis convention and the efforts there made to educate the minds of the people of this country upon the silver question. As for the lobby of which he speaks, I know nothing about it. I have not seen it myself and I have never heard of it unless he applies that term to gentlemen who have printed documents on this subject, who have addressed the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures upon the subject, and who have adopted every means within their power to give us information upon this very important question. In that way and to that extent I suppose we are always beset by "lobbyists." Indeed, in that sense we might be called lobbyists ourselves—if such a term could be applied to gentlemen upon this floor—because it is our duty to give each other all the information that we have upon subjects of legislation and to obtain information from all legitimate quarters.

My friend [Mr. CONGER] has also alluded to a silver "pool" and silver speculation. Mr. Speaker, there is but one way to prevent speculation in silver bullion, the same sort of speculation that you have in wheat, the same sort of speculation that you have in corn, the same sort of speculation that you have in iron and steel and in other products. There is, I say, but one way to prevent it, and that is to give it an unlimited coinage at the mints of this country. In that way you establish for silver, as you have established for gold, a price as money which will always fix the value of the bullion at the mints, and beyond that price it can not go unless other countries should desire to pay a higher price for it. Any legislation that restricts the coinage of silver offers an opportunity for speculation, and that was the difficulty with the legislation of 1878, to which my colleague, the chairman of the committee, has referred. At that time it was contended that silver was depreciated, and that therefore it ought not to have the privileges of the mints of this Government. The House at that time passed a free-coinage bill, pure and simple. It sent that bill to the Senate. There it was amended so as to provide for the coinage of not less than $2,000,000 worth of bullion per month and not more than $4,000,000 worth.

That was the great mistake made when this question was up for solution in 1878. There is no question in my mind that had the Congress of the United States at that time done its duty with regard to this subject and opened the mints to the unlimited coinage of silver it would have settled the silver question, and settled it satisfactorily to the people of this country, and we would have no such question to deal with to-day. But gentlemen contended then, as they contend now, that gold was the only proper measure of value, that gold was the only safe coin, that gold was to dominate the silver question, and that silver as a standard of value should play no part in our coinage system or in our currency system. First it was resolved that gold and gold alone was the dollar, the measure of value, and because silver bullion, after having been denied the privilege of free coinage, is not worth as much as gold which has that privilege, for that reason it is contended that silver ought not to be coined, but should be left to be a mere object of speculation. What has been the consequence? Gentlemen who live in the great Northwestern and Western States have been the sufferers. The cry for gold has been raised by Eastern capitalists and bondholders for the purpose of collecting from the tax-payers of this country enormous sums of money in excess of what the laws of the country have promised them and in excess of what justice and right would dictate.

How is this and why is it? They say that if we coin silver here this country will be supplied with silver circulation to such an extent that our gold will leave us and we shall have nothing but silver as our currency. What of it? Mr. Speaker, even had that occurred in 1878 and we had been practically upon a silver basis—that is, had coined silver almost exclusively and coined but little gold—what would have been the effect upon the products of the agricultural people of this country? Why, sir, we know that the moment we resumed specie payments and gave but a limited use for silver we compelled a flow of gold from European countries to this country, depriving them to that extent of a circulating medium. We have brought here since that time gold to the amount of four or five hundred million dollars. What effect has that upon prices in this country? What effect has it upon all exports from this country to foreign countries? We send abroad our cotton, our wheat, our breadstuffs; they constitute our chief articles of export to foreign countries. Now, is it not to the interest of the agriculturists of this country to have high prices in foreign countries for their products? Certainly it is, because it is the price obtained abroad that fixes the price at home. If we had better prices abroad for the products of the farms in this country there would be better prices at home and a larger surplus to export. How has that prevented higher prices, or, in other words, how has it operated to continue in this country lower prices, especially for all farm products? It has been done in the way I have indicated. We have been drawing upon the stock of circulating gold of European countries. We have to that extent decreased their circulating medium and lowered prices there—lowered prices in the very markets where it is our interest to increase them. Had European countries to-day five hundred or six hundred million dollars more of gold in circulation than they have, the effect would be, as a matter of course, to increase to that extent or in that proportion the price of every article we export and sell in those markets. It would increase the price of farm products in foreign markets at least 15 per cent. and would prevent the fall of such commodities in this country to a corresponding extent.

Then, sir, suppose all that is claimed with regard to the coinage of silver should be true—that our currency would practically consist of silver, that our gold would go abroad—the effect would be to raise prices abroad and also to raise the prices here; and that is the very object of the free coinage of silver. Unless that should occur there would be but little benefit from it. Now, what do we find to be the case in all silver-using countries? Take India, for instance. The statistics show that, since we have demonetized silver here and since the European countries have discontinued its coinage, this policy has acted as a bonus for the export trade of India. She to-day is coming in sharp competition with the wheat-fields of the West. Why? For two reasons, the main reason being that her currency has not been contracted; her prices have kept up; her business enterprises have been in a prosperous condition; and thus she has been enabled to produce largely beyond what she did before. Secondly, she did not have par exchange with European countries; to send her silver to Europe and undertake to settle her balances with it would entail a loss; therefore she is raising wheat, she is raising cotton, and thus producing articles of commerce that have not lost their purchasing power in those countries; and she is sending to them those articles instead of money. In this way she not only retains her money at home, but is shipping largely to the European countries articles that we ought to ship. Thus we are brought in direct competition with her.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Does my friend contend that raising the prices of articles in India and other countries gives them better opportunities to contend in the markets of the world against us?

Mr. BLAND. I state that prices have not fallen in India, measured by silver, while of course they have, measured by gold. The gentleman did not understand me. My claim is that silver-using countries have not felt the steady decline in prices that we have. The fact is that when they send their products—cotton and other similar articles—to be sold in European countries at a gold price, they gain the difference between silver and gold; and it pays them better to send their commodities than to send their money.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman. The point I wanted to bring out was simply this: If in the manner the gentleman has stated those countries have been able to keep up their prices, I do not understand how they can contend with us in the markets of the world so well as if they were selling their commodities at lower prices.

Mr. BLAND. They are not selling their commodities at lower prices; they are selling them at gold prices; and on account of the demonetization of silver they recoup by purchasing silver in the London markets.

I want to impress this point upon the agricultural interests of this country: that it is not to their advantage to have low prices in European countries, because agricultural products constitute nearly all of our export trade; and by draining those countries of their gold, of their coin, we are constantly reducing prices there; and there is a reaction upon prices here, which continue to fall and fall.

Now, I propose, Mr. Speaker, to have read a letter that I received two or three days ago, if the Clerk will do me the kindness, to show that the agricultural people of this country fully and completely understand this subject, and to show, also, to my friend from Iowa that there are lobbyists in the interest of free coinage of silver even out as far as upon the prairies of Nebraska. I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NEBRASKA STATE FARMERS' ALLIANCE,
President's Office, Cornell, Neb., June 19, 1890.

DEAR SIR: Seeing by the papers that a conference on the silver bill has been called, I take the liberty to address you to let you know that the farmers of Nebraska are not careless spectators of the struggle for free coinage of silver.

We feel that although the House bill presents a little temporary relief there should be no temporizing or compromise. But I believe the farmers and working people generally of the country demand a larger increase of money, and that there is less prejudice and objection to the increase by the free coinage of silver than by any other way.

We would urge you then, most respectfully, to stand by the principle, and if it is defeated we will use our best efforts to bring its enemies before the bar of the country for sentence and condemnation.

Yours, with respect,

J. H. POWERS,

President Nebraska State Farmers' Alliance.

Hon. R. P. BLAND.

Mr. BLAND. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think if gentlemen will take pains to inquire into the state of public feeling on this subject, and especially as to the feeling existing in agricultural communities throughout the West, they will ascertain the fact that these people believe we ought to have a large increase in the circulating medium, and they believe that this increase should be based upon something that is permanent, something that is constitutional, that is legal, and that the experience of the past warrants us in resorting to.

The statement is made that they desire a large increase of the circulating medium; they believe that the most practical mode of getting that increase is by the use of silver and by its free coinage; and that statement comes from an organization that can not be denounced on this floor as "lobbyists;" and you may go into Iowa, the gentleman's own State, and Wisconsin, and Michigan, and you may go into Illinois, Indiana, in Missouri, in Kansas, leaving all the Southern country out, and find that the same sentiment prevails, the same demand is being heard, and I have not yet read a single resolution passed by these farmers in all of these States upon the currency question in which they have not directly demanded the free coinage of silver. The gentleman from Iowa and other gentlemen can denominate them as lobbyists if they please; they are not interested in the question as silver men or silver-bullion holders. They are interested in the increased circulation of the volume of money in this country, and they are interested in that direction to have good money in circulation, which is silver.

From 1792 to 1873 we had that system of money which the Senate bill will re-establish. We tried it in this country for over eighty years. It is no experiment, then, because we know its results; but, simply because of the fact that Congress saw proper in 1873 to suspend the coinage of the standard silver dollar, and simply because gentlemen who desire to collect from the people, the tax-payers of this country, an enormous tribute in the way of low prices and high money, because they are demanding gold, and gold only, we are to surrender the history of the past and we are to surrender one of the money metals of the world to accommodate a few Shylocks in America. Mr. Speaker, I hope it will not be the pleasure of this House to agree to such a proposition.

As I stated before, when this question was under discussion, the act of 1878, when this question was discussed in the House and acted upon, had we settled it then as we ought to have settled it, we would have had no silver question with us to-day. Now the opportunity is presented to us to remedy the evil. Now again is the opportunity offered to do right by repealing virtually the laws that demonetized silver and rehabilitate it in its proper position as a money metal in this country.

How shall that be done? The Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures have recommended non-concurrence in the Senate amendments to the House bill. They insist upon the passage of the House bill without amendment. They insist upon a bill that in reality makes a commodity of silver. They insist upon a bill that provides for the purchasing of silver bullion at its market rates, four and one-half millions per month, and the issuance of certificates upon the bullion, redeemable in coin or in silver bullion, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. I had occasion, Mr. Speaker, to allude to this bill when it was being considered before and to call attention to the fact that it was a departure from all past history with regard to the use of gold and silver as money in this country. I called attention to the fact that under the Constitution Congress was given the sole power to coin money and to regulate the value thereof and of foreign coins; that no State could make anything but gold and silver a legal tender in the payment of debts. It was contemplated by the framers of the Constitution that Congress should coin the money, gold and silver. But this bill, if enacted into a law, makes silver bullion not a subject for coinage, except that part of it which it is claimed may be necessary to redeem the notes. But it also provides that the notes may be redeemed in the bullion itself on deposit, and thus afford an opportunity of expanding or contracting the currency of the country at the will of the "speculators" the gentleman from Iowa a moment ago alluded to.

Now, if there have been organized combinations or syndicates of individuals for the purpose of speculating in silver bullion, having that object in view, it must have been in contemplation of the passage of this House bill, because that opened the doors to the widest speculation in silver bullion. To-day, for instance, you may have ten millions of bullion under this bill in the Treasury, to-morrow not a million, not a dollar, not a cent. You put silver bullion into the Treasury at one door and issue notes upon it, and then go right straight to the next door and take the whole of it out. You may have a hundred millions in the Treasury four or five years from now, and under the bill, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury (to enable the speculators to speculate and realize fortunes in silver bullion), you can turn it out daily to the amount of fifty millions until it is all gone, if he sees proper. So the bill as it passed the House was an invitation to the formation of these syndicates and gentlemen who desire to speculate in silver bullion; and the doors would have been wide open if the Senate had agreed to the House bill.

But there are other objections to it, Mr. Speaker. As I stated before, it is a departure from all the traditions, from all the principles of bimetallism. It measures silver by gold and gold only in the purchase of the bullion. It measures the amount of certificates that may be in circulation upon the gold value of the bullion. In other words, there can be no bimetallism under that system. The bill provides that the notes, when issued, shall not exceed in circulation the cost of the bullion, or, in other words, that you will not be permitted to have in circulation in this country the coinage value of the bullion, but only its gold value. Thus, practically, you fix the market rate of the two metals as the ratio of issuing money, instead of that established by the law fixing the legal rate or ratio as we have it to-day at 16 to 1.

Now if the bill provided that the bullion should be purchased at its market rate and that the notes outstanding should not be less than the market rates of the bullion on hand nor exceeding its coinage value, you would then keep up a legal ratio. The Secretary of the Treasury would have some discretion possibly, but you would have the power to issue notes up to the coining value of the bullion; whereas under this bill the Secretary of the Treasury is absolutely prohibited from keeping in circulation a dollar in notes beyond the gold value of the bullion deposited. Now, in that I say we establish a new ratio of issuing money upon silver. We depart from the ratio of 16 to 1 entirely. We issue notes upon silver bullion at the gold value of the bullion, and not upon its coining value. Now, the present law—and I want to call gentlemen's attention particularly to that, because it is an important part of the discussion of this bill—the present law provides for the purchase of the bullion, but it also compels the coinage of that bullion into standard dollars of 412½ grains, which are a legal tender, and on this coin a note is issued, so that under the present law we have a circulation equal to the coining value of all the bullion purchased. In other words, we maintain the ratio between the two metals, that ratio being 16 to 1 (or 15.98, more correctly speaking), and in the issuing of the money and putting it in circulation we recognize that legal ratio between gold and silver and maintain it. Under this bullion bill, that is the House bill, we depart from it and we not only purchase the bullion at its market rate, but we prohibit the issuing of money upon it except at its gold value, thus permanently fixing for this country the gold standard and the gold standard alone, whereas the present law is a modification of the gold standard. It is a modification of the gold standard in so far as we issue silver and put it in circulation at a fixed ratio of 16 to 1, and every silver dollar that is a legal tender for every debt, public and private, at the ratio of 16 to 1 comes in competition with the gold dollar, and to that extent competes with the gold dollar and maintains the ratio between the two. But this House bill and all the bullion propositions that I have seen yet depart from that ratio, an important matter to be considered by this House, and one which must be considered by the Senate if we undertake to get up a conference committee. It is an important matter for those in favor of silver, whether you deposit bullion and issue notes upon it or whether you coin the money, that you maintain the ratio and insist upon the right and power of the Government to issue notes equal to the coining value of the bullion on deposit.

Mr. HERMANN. Will the gentleman kindly reply to the proposition made on the other side, that for 72 cents' worth of bullion the bullion-owner gets $1 in certificates?

Mr. BLAND. I did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. HERMANN. The proposition is made that for 72 cents' worth of bullion the owner gets a certificate worth a dollar. Will you kindly reply to that?

Mr. BLAND. I will reply to the general proposition later on. What I claim is this, that if we are to have the limited coinage of silver, if we are to have this House bill agreed to by a committee of conference, which provides for the purchase of $4,500,000 worth of silver bullion every month and the issue of $4,500,000 in notes on the bullion so purchased and purchased at its gold value and the notes issued at its gold value—I say, after it is purchased, we ought to insist upon the right and the power and we ought to give the power to the Secretary of the Treasury to issue beyond that; not to the bullion-holder, because the Government when it purchases the bullion owns it and has paid for it at its gold value, at its cost; but after the bullion is paid for and is the property of the Government we ought, to keep up the ratio, to permit the Secretary of the Treasury to increase the notes to the coining value of the bullion.

You understand the proposition. I say we get the benefit of the seigniorage now, because we purchase bullion and coin it into 412½ grain dollars, and the notes are issued upon this coin and in that way the Government and the people get the benefit of the seigniorage. In other words, $2,000,000 of silver bullion, if silver is worth 72 cents, will coin $2,280,000. That is to say, the Secretary of the Treasury purchases two millions' worth of bullion and that two millions' worth of bullion yields a circulation of $2,280,000. That is the gain, and that gain goes into circulation under the present law. Four million dollars' worth of bullion each month, coined into standard money, will put into circulation about $80,000,000 per year. That is, forty-eight millions' worth of silver bullion will coin about sixty million standard dollars, or more than this bill will put into circulation in its present state. In other words, we get the benefit of the seigniorage; so we get the difference between the cost value and the coining value. And it is important to keep up that as a principle, not only in order to gain the benefit of that outside circulation, but in order that we may not here establish a precedent; because this bill will establish this precedent, if it is enacted into a law, that we have abandoned the ratio of 16 to 1 in issuing money on silver; that we have established a new relation and a new ratio; that we have established its gold value as the ratio, whatever that may be, for the notes outstanding; and when contracts are based upon it, years hence, when we want free coinage and come before Congress demanding it, it will be claimed that you have established here a market ratio between gold and silver, that all contracts are resting upon, and that you can not now go back to the ratio of 16 to 1.

It will be claimed that it will be unjust to creditors, that debtors would have the advantage, and that it would be unjust to go back to the ratio of 16 to 1 in issuing money. Hence, I say it is an important matter, if this bill is to become a law, that gentlemen watch that point, that we do not depart from our ratio; and, although you may put in your bill that the notes outstanding shall not be less than the cost of the bullion, let it further provide that the issue may be to the limit of the coining value after the Government has purchased the bullion. Then if we should have a deficit in the Treasury Department and we want more money issued upon that bullion, you have the power to do it. Reserve that power in the bill to increase the notes to the amount of the coining value of the bullion, and do not depart from that, but insist upon it. Now, that is the general proposition. If the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN] desires to ask any further question, I will yield to him.

Mr. HERMANN. I think you have substantially answered the proposition. I understand your proposition is that the same advantage should be retained to the Government as at the present time, so far as any profit may accrue. The proposition made by the chairman of the committee, as the gentleman remembers, was that it only takes 72 cents' worth of bullion to make a dollar and that the bullion-owner receives one dollar in the certificate, and, therefore, that the profit goes into the pockets of the bullion-owners, and not to the advantage of the Government.

Mr. BLAND. Well, I suppose that the chairman of the committee, in arguing that proposition, meant that it would be so if you had free coinage. That was my understanding. Certainly he could not claim that where the Government purchased bullion at its market rate that bullion would get any more than the bullion was worth in the market, as I do not insist after purchasing the bullion that the Government shall issue notes at its coin value, but at its cost.

The defect of the bill is that it goes further than that. It proposes that the amount of notes in circulation may not exceed the cost of the bullion. Now, I say, after the Government has purchased the bullion at its cost and the notes are issued for its purchase, it shall then reserve the power and the right in the Secretary of the Treasury to issue on it notes equal to its coin value, and the Government gets the benefit of the difference between the bullion value and the dollar. I say that we propose that point, first, because it is necessary, so that we keep up the ratio of the two metals and not permit gold to be the whole measure, as it is being made by this bill; not to establish the gold standard entirely, and use silver only as a commodity, and as having no part or parcel in the measure of the circulation of the country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the other point is this, that the bullion-owner—

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him there?

Mr. BLAND. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. I have not had the benefit of all the gentleman's remarks, and perhaps I did not understand him entirely in his position. The question which I desire to ask him is this: The owner of bullion presents at the mint 72 cents' worth of silver; if free coinage were adopted would not the bullion-owner get the benefit of the seigniorage?

Mr. BLAND. I was coming to that, and the gentleman will bear in mind that I was discussing the House bill and the purchasing of $4,500,000 worth of silver per month. My point was this: That the bill provides that there shall be purchased $4,500,000 every month. Now, the bullion-owner gets what? He gets the market rate for the bullion in notes, which will pay to him the market price for his bullion. Well, now, the bill provides that no more notes shall be outstanding than the market price of the bullion.

Mr. HILL. That is the House bill?

Mr. BLAND. That is the House bill; and therefore I insist that this changes the ratio of issuing money upon silver. Instead of making the legal ratio of 16½ to 1, it is establishing a market ratio on which money shall be issued, changing the whole theory of our coinage and changing the ratio of 16½ to 1 to the market ratio, which to-day is 22 to 1. Now the gentleman sees the point. In other words, this bill proposes to change the ratio from 16 to 1 to 22 to 1 in issuing money on silver.

Now, I say if the bill is so amended that after the bullion is purchased notes issue at its market price, but after it is purchased giving the power to the Secretary of the Treasury or reserving it somewhere, either in Congress or in the Secretary of the Treasury, to authorize the further issue of the amount of the difference between the market value and the coin value of the bullion, then I say to you we get the benefit of the profit or seigniorage, for certainly no one will claim that it is not safe to issue money on silver bullion when it has behind it dollar for dollar the coin value of bullion, and I am claiming and am demonstrating that that is safe enough. We have a currency based dollar for dollar on 412½ grains of silver with a paper-dollar note behind it. It is safe. Do we want to depart from that and issue notes and say notes shall not be outstanding in greater amount than the actual value of the bullion?

Mr. DARLINGTON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question there?

Mr. BLAND. Certainly.

Mr. DARLINGTON. If the bill is amended in that particular would the gentleman support it?

Mr. BLAND. I will cheerfully, if I can not get free coinage. I want to say right here, in order that I may be understood—

Mr. DARLINGTON. That is a very frank answer.

Mr. BLAND. Of course, every gentleman understands that I have been arguing all the while that the only proper mode of settling this question is by free coinage, and I wish to do whatever is in my power to secure that. If it is impossible to get that and we can get this with two amendments, I will vote for it. Those particular amendments are simply this: First, that the notes outstanding shall not be less than the cost price of the bullion and not exceeding its coin value. Second, in order to keep up the coinage, that the notes shall be redeemed in coin, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall coin, if necessary, for its redemption, no less in amount than two millions per month.

In other words, let coinage go on. Do not stop that. Now, gentlemen, I insist upon that. It is an important matter. I object to continuing piling up and piling up bullion in the Treasury without ever coining it; for it will not be coined. You will set a precedent that will come home to trouble you. It will be a boomerang. I insist upon coining this money, and there ought to be coined not less than two millions a month; and if you can not get that, get one million. It is an important point that you must have it coined. Take from the note the legal-tender feature and probably there will not be presented for redemption one million, probably not half a million; and if they are not presented for redemption there will be no coinage. There will be no coinage in any event. Mark that; and I will tell you why. You have about two hundred millions of standard silver dollars already coined, and on them you have notes outstanding almost equal to the amount of the coined dollars, except the dollars in circulation—probably fifty-six or fifty-eight millions.

There is nothing in this bill or in the present law to prevent the Secretary of the Treasury from canceling the present silver certificates to whatever amount he sees proper. The law simply provides that they may be reissued. When these certificates come in for the payment of taxes they are canceled or reissued at the pleasure of the Secretary, and he will simply cancel a sufficient number of the certificates and will leave the resulting coin for the redemption of legal-tender notes. I see nothing at all to prevent it, and we know that the present Secretary of the Treasury has already stated, as all Secretaries preceding him have stated, that we ought not to coin another dollar; so that not another dollar will be coined under this bill unless there is compulsion in it, because the coin on hand will answer all these purposes. The notes outstanding will be canceled for that purpose. The eight, ten, fifteen, or twenty millions of silver dollars already coined will be kept on hand for the redemption of the notes, and you can not get another dollar coined under this bill.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman explain to the House what is the necessity for coining the dollars when they do not circulate and when the certificates are what are wanted and do circulate everywhere instead of the dollar?

Mr. BLAND. I was coming to that. Our national banks are insisting upon maintaining their legal status by a small issue of circulating notes and they are desirous of reducing their circulation and having a system that will permit them to exist with as small a circulation as possible, keeping within the purview of the law. On the same principle the friends of silver ought to insist on the continued coinage of silver in order to keep it within the purview of the law and the Constitution; for, mark you, unless silver bullion is coined, if it is simply bought as a commodity and put into the Treasury simply as a commodity, as it would be under this bill, you will have it said, and said truly, by the people that you have as much right to put iron there, that you have as much right to put lead there, that you have as much right to put zinc there, that you have as much right to put wheat there, as you have to put silver bullion; and you have the same right and you can not answer the argument.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. BLAND. In a moment. But, on the other hand, if the mints of the Government are continually coining this silver bullion into money the case will be entirely different. That is what the Constitution contemplates. It contemplates silver as money, because it can be coined. Cotton can not be coined, neither can lead, nor zinc, nor any other commodity, and therefore they are not money; but, under the Constitution of our country we can legally make money out of silver bullion, and silver is good as bullion in the Treasury simply because your mints are open to its coinage, and when you stop that the principle is abandoned.

Mr. CONGER. But will the gentleman please explain the necessity for coining the silver bullion into dollars when the dollars would not circulate and when the certificates are what the people want and are circulating in place of the dollars? What is the use of coining the bullion into dollars to be stored away?

Mr. HILL. And in that connection let me call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the Senate bill, which he is in favor of, provides in terms for the issue of Treasury notes upon the silver after it is coined into money.

Mr. BLAND. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. Now what is the difference in principle between issuing the notes upon the bullion and issuing them upon the coin?

Mr. CONGER. Let him answer my question first.

Mr. BLAND. I can answer them both. In the first place we have free coinage of gold. There can be no objection to issuing notes on gold at its coinage value. You do not take its bullion value, but you take its coin value at the mint, and you can issue notes upon it. Why? Because if I have a gold note I can take it to the Treasury, if I wish to do so, and take out the gold bullion and go to the mint and have it coined into money. I do not care whether a piece of gold is bullion or coin in the Treasury, in fact it is money, and the miner who extracts gold from the earth does not extract a product, a commodity, but he extracts dollars and cents, because he can take the gold to the mints of the country anywhere and have it turned into money. So as to silver bullion, when you give it free coinage at your mints, then the party can deposit his bullion or he can have it coined. It is no longer a commodity, because it is monetized. The free coinage of silver has the same effect as the free coinage of gold. It monetizes the metal, and all the Government does is to put a die upon it to show what the coin is. Whether in bullion or in coin, such a metal is worth precisely what it will coin, neither more nor less.

Mr. HILL. If silver bullion is, in effect, as much money before it is coined as it is afterwards—

Mr. BLAND. I say it would be under the Senate bill.

Mr. HILL. I understand; and you are in favor of the Senate bill?

Mr. BLAND. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. If that be so, then what is the difference between issuing Treasury notes upon the silver bullion before it is coined and issuing them upon the silver after it is coined? What is the difference, so far as the principle is concerned?

Mr. BLAND. I have tried to make the distinction plain. I repeat that until silver has free coinage it is a commodity, and not money.

Mr. HILL. You have just stated that it is not a commodity.

Mr. BLAND. I say that the moment you provide for the free coinage of silver it is no longer a commodity; it is monetized. Why? Because every man who has got 412 grains of silver will refuse to take one cent less than a dollar for it, knowing that he can take it to the mint and have it coined into a dollar. That fixes a price below which it can not fall, but when silver is not monetized, when it is a commodity, as this bill makes it, the case is different. You pile it up in the Treasury as a commodity, and when you take it out by a note you can not go and have that silver coined; it is a mere commodity. On the other hand, when you take out a piece of gold bullion with a note, you can take it directly to the mint and have it coined. There is a vast difference between a metal that is monetized and one that is demonetized. Silver is now monetized. It is now a commodity, and when you issue notes upon it you issue notes upon it as a commodity.

Unless you have some compulsory coinage of that bullion you can not maintain the proposition that it is any better as a basis for coinage than wheat, except that it is not perishable, or any better than lead or zinc, which are not perishable. You can not coin lead or iron or zinc, nor can you coin the silver that is piled up in the Treasury Department unless you authorize it by law.

Hence, I claim that it is a matter of great importance to the friends of silver, to those who are in favor of the true theory of money in this country, to insist that silver shall have the right of coinage to some extent, however limited it may be, so as to contradict and distinguish it from commodities. That is what I mean. When you say that silver bullion shall not be coined, that practically no coin shall be issued upon it, but it shall be placed in the Treasury and notes issued upon it, you treat it as a commodity; it is no more entitled to coinage than iron or zinc or any other metal.

Mr. REILLY. The practical effect of such legislation is the demonetization of silver.

Mr. BLAND. Yes, by such measures you demonetize silver; you make a commodity of it. When you gentlemen on the other side go home to your constituents and undertake to explain this point and tell them why you provided for the deposit of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes upon it, and why you would not treat cotton or wheat or iron or lead in the same way, you can not explain your position. But if you say to your constituents, "We have put bullion in the Treasury, it is true, but we have compelled the Secretary of the Treasury to coin it under the Constitution," however limited the coinage may be, you then draw the distinction between silver bullion and other commodities. You then point to the Constitution of the country which makes silver money; you point to the law which recognizes it as money at a fixed ratio of coinage; you keep up the ratio as well as the coinage. Thus you educate the people of this country in the true theory of monetary science. But when you undertake to select any particular commodity on which to issue notes without coinage you are departing from all the theories of bimetalism, and you are giving silver a stab in this very bill, which is claimed to be friendly to it.

Mr. CONGER. Under the present law does the Government buy silver as a commodity?

Mr. BLAND. Certainly.

Mr. CONGER. Then when does it become money? What makes it money?

Mr. BLAND. The coinage of it.

Mr. CONGER. Then if under the bill proposed by the House we buy silver, we buy it as a commodity, do we not?

Mr. BLAND. Certainly.

Mr. CONGER. Then if it shall be coined (as the bill provides it may be, if it should be necessary for purposes of redemption) it becomes money, does it not?

Mr. BLAND. But I insist there never will be a dollar of it coined; that is the very point.

Mr. CONGER. It has got to be coined, if needed.

Mr. BLAND. That is not the question. I say it will not be coined, and you will find my prediction true. You may think it will be coined, but it will not, unless there should be a change which will make the administration of the Treasury Department different from anything that has been witnessed there since the coinage of silver commenced. The present Secretary of the Treasury himself says that this coinage ought to be stopped.

Mr. CONGER. Will coining the silver make the certificates of any greater value?

Mr. BLAND. Certainly not. I am not talking about the certificates.

Mr. CONGER. Those are what we are going to use. They are what we have used, we are using now, and what we would use under the Senate bill.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman, it seems to me, can not appreciate my argument or else I do not appreciate it myself; I do not know which. [Laughter.]

But I am trying to impress upon the House, if I can, one point; it may be good or it may be bad, but I want it understood. It is that there ought to be some provision in this bill for compulsory coinage; the question whether silver shall be coined or not should not be left to the discretion of anybody. I am willing the bill shall say that so much silver as may be necessary to redeem the notes may be coined, but it ought to go further and compel the coinage of a certain amount, so as not to permit any discretion in this matter; for, as I remarked before, to provide that so much as may be necessary to redeem these notes shall be coined means practically none at all, because the Secretary of the Treasury—

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. Unless silver be coined how will the Secretary of the Treasury redeem these notes if they be presented?

Mr. BLAND. He will redeem them with the present stock of silver.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. That is impossible.

Mr. BLAND. There is nothing impossible in this country with regard to defeating silver legislation. The bill simply declares that a sufficient amount for the redemption of the notes shall be coined. That might mean that coinage should begin after you had utilized the $300,000,000 of coin you already have. There is nothing in the bill to prevent the present supply of coin from being used for this purpose.

Mr. CONGER. There is in the present law.

Mr. BLAND. How? Where?

Mr. CONGER. Because the law requires that those silver dollars upon which the Secretary of the Treasury has issued certificates shall be kept for their redemption.

Mr. BLAND. But he is not compelled to keep the certificates out. There is the loop-hole to which I tried to call the attention of the House. The present law provides that the silver certificates, when returned to the Treasury, may be released, but there is nothing compulsory about it; and it has been the practice of the Treasury Department to cancel them whenever it pleased; and we remember a time when there were 60,000,000 or 70,000,000 of silver dollars in the Treasury on which not a note was issued. There is nothing in the present law to prevent the Secretary of the Treasury from calling in a hundred million dollars of certificates and holding a hundred million of coin—not reissuing one dollar of those certificates.

Mr. CONGER. How will he call them in?

Mr. BLAND. They are coming in every day.

Mr. CONGER. How will he call them in?

Mr. BLAND. By canceling them when paid in for taxes. They come in now as payments for taxes. What I mean by calling them in is canceling them.

Mr. CONGER. You said, "Calling them in."

Mr. BLAND. That is practically calling them in. They come in as payments of internal-revenue taxation or customs dues. The Treasury is full of them, has been all the time, and will be. Now, the Secretary of the Treasury can cancel them as they come in and hold a hundred million dollars of the silver already coined for the redemption of these notes, you see. And hence I say it is indispensable that we should not overlook or slight these points, because here we are considering a great and important question. We are legislating upon a vital subject, and if free coinage is to be defeated here—I will not say it will be, but the indications are not favorable—and this bill goes to the committee of conference, I want gentlemen to understand that these are essential points to be considered with reference to the theory of our money upon which we proceed.

Then, Mr. Speaker, I say in order to meet that difficulty, in order to prevent the utilization of silver already coined for the purposes contemplated by this bill, we must keep on coining. It may be limited in quantity; but it will be for the purpose of monetizing the bullion. It shows what was the purpose in view, the intention of Congress in the passage of the bill. It keeps up the fixed ratio between the two metals. It is important in every sense of the word, and the cost is very little, because the mints are kept open almost all the time anyhow or ought to be. They are carried on; they have their employees; the appropriations are made for them, and they will be there, and the expense will be but little, or it will be about the same whether we coin it or not, and therefore they had just as well be put at work as to be allowed to do nothing. But I do not want Congress in legislating upon this subject to lose sight of this important fact, that if we proceed with the House bill without the amendments of the Senate, simply making a commodity of silver, the effect will be to use the silver in the Treasury for the purpose of the redemption of these notes and no more will be coined.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. REILLY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be permitted to conclude his remarks.

Mr. CONGER. To come out of the time belonging to that side of the question?

Mr. REILLY. To be taken out of that side.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. BLAND. Not more than ten minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman will proceed for ten minutes longer to come out of the time of that side.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. But, Mr. Speaker, I hope that this free-coinage bill will not be voted down. I trust this House will do what the Forty-fifth Congress seemed to be unable to do, and that is to grapple with this great question. The longer we postpone it the greater becomes the difficulty. It was postponed in 1878, and a provision was put into the bill asking a conference of foreign Governments for the purpose of coming to some agreement upon the subject, and some understanding by which France, England, and Germany could open their mints to the free coinage of silver. We were told then—that was the prediction that defeated free coinage then—that we could have this agreement which was promised us. But instead of that we were met, especially by England and by Germany, with an absolute refusal even to consider the proposition.

If we have free coinage of silver now we are in this position: We are in the position to control the metals of this country in our own interest. Instead of London being the great center where you find gold and silver exchanged and instead of England controlling the value of the two metals, New York will become the exchange for the world as between gold and silver. France, that occupied that position for over seventy years, with the coinage between the two metals on a fixed ratio of 15½ to 1, was the clearing-house of the world for the money metals, and has to-day more metallic money within its borders than any country in the world, this country not excepted. There you could go and exchange your gold for silver and silver for gold at a fixed ratio of 15½ to 1; and if we had that ratio and free coinage here to-day this country would simply be the clearing-house of the world upon the metallic question, and would stand in the position of controlling the value of gold and the value of silver, as established by law for all the world. Because, Mr. Speaker, having, as we do, the South American countries and China and India, constituting over five-sevenths, or about that number, of the people of this world using silver, and the other part using gold, we would simply be the clearing-house for the silver-using and the gold-using countries of the world, and stand in the position of masters of the situation, instead of being, as we are to-day, simply a tail to the London kite.

Mr. HILL. If it would not interrupt the line of the gentleman's argument, I would like his view in regard to what the effect would be of opening our mints to the coinage of all the silver of the world at the ratio of 16 to 1, when the foreign ratio is 15½ to 1.

Mr. BLAND. I understand this is an important question, and one that we will hereafter be called upon to consider. That is a question that originated in 1878. The fact that European governments are coining at a ratio of 15½ to 1, and ourselves at 16 to 1, and they open up their mints to free coinage, of course all of our silver would go there, as it did then. But the difficulty we were then in still confronts us, and it was especially so at that time because our bonded debt was issued and made payable by the act of January, 1870, and amended in July following. The bonds were made payable in coin of the standard value of that date. The coin of that date was the standard silver dollar of 412½ grains—we had free coinage then—and the gold dollar of 28.8 grains. We were under the bimetallic system. We had the two metals side by side. We had the right to pay in gold or silver. That was the law and the contract, and when we came to legislate in 1878 on that question it was said, "You can not change the ratio between your metals, because if you put less silver in the dollar"—as we would be compelled to do to change to the European ratio—we were told we could not pay our bonded debt with silver; that we would have to make the silver dollar legal tender for private debts, but not public debts, and that was the difficulty that confronted us at that time. Besides, other countries were not coining silver then at that ratio.

The fact that we proceed to coin at this ratio at this time is a guaranty that none of the silver of European countries can come to our mint, if there is any danger of that. A great many gentlemen are opposed to the free coinage of silver, because they say the silver of the world will come here to be coined at our mints. Our ratio prevents that. They are compelled to lose at least 3 cents on every dollar, their silver being on a par with gold, and, as has been said by the Secretary of the Treasury, every cent of it is needed and every dollar, and they can not spare it; and if they were to undertake to bring it here to be coined into the standard dollar they would lose 3 cents on every dollar besides the transportation. But if we open our mints to the unlimited coinage of silver and take this step, like the great nation we are, we are in a position to bring other countries to our ratio. But if we postpone it we will find ourselves twenty years from now in the same condition that we are in now, after eleven years have elapsed since we commenced the coining of silver. All that time has gone by and we are no nearer to a common ratio than we were then.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman has not quite caught the point of my question. If we open our doors to free coinage and make a market for the silver of the world, perhaps raising the market value of silver to par, increasing the value of silver from 72 cents to 100 cents on the dollar, could not the foreign producers or owners of silver, even of silver coin, afford to bring it here and sell it at our mint and get the 25 or 28 cents, even if they had to lose 3 cents?

Mr. BLAND. I presume the gentleman does not allude to coined silver which is in circulation. As to the product of silver bullion his question might hold good, but you will find that the silver is needed in other parts of the world. India needs about thirty millions, Mexico twenty-five or thirty millions. The South American States are compelled to have a certain amount of it, and according to the figures of the Secretary of the Treasury himself, in his bullion scheme, wherein he proposed to take all of the silver of the world at its market rate (I do not mean at its coinage rate), he could only figure about fifty millions of silver that would come to this country, because other countries are bound to have silver to use themselves. So that it would be impossible, so far as this Government is concerned, to receive all the silver of the world.

But my friend must remember one thing and that is, when we establish the free coinage of silver we have simply given to the people of this country the opportunity of exchanging their commodities. They are not going to give them away. Silver can not come here to be coined at the mints unless they buy something. If they bring silver here and put it into our mints to be coined into standard dollars they are bound to buy something or there is no profit. We have billions of dollars of products of this country every year, and especially agricultural products, that the people are glad to exchange for good silver dollars, more than we will ever get by free coinage. The free coinage of silver will not supply this country with enough money, and it is a great mistake to suppose that it will. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the bill that comes back here from the Senate contains some provisions that it seems to me are very dangerous. I would not, perhaps, have any objection to the free coinage of silver, subject to such limitations as would naturally be placed upon it by the measure of the ability of the Government to coin silver dollars, because the limitations of our mints' capacity would be an important restriction upon free coinage. Under its present capacity, without an amendment to our laws, it might not be possible to coin enough silver to cause any very great danger. But with the amendment in this bill provided for in the Senate giving the owners of silver bullion the absolute right to go to the Treasury of the United States and receive from the Treasury of the United States, not only coin, but its equivalent in certificates, not silver certificates, but coin certificates, it seems to me there would be a very great danger.

I wish to address my remarks to this side of the House—the Democratic side—for a few minutes. It is well known that there existed in this country a determined opposition up to 1860 against the issuance of anything but gold and silver by the Government as a legal tender in payment of debts. It was considered to be beyond the power of the General Government to make anything but gold and silver a legal tender. This bill makes all of these Treasury notes legal tender in the payment of debts, and it provides that the holder of silver bullion anywhere in the world can go to the Treasury of the United States and demand either coin or, at his option, certificates for the whole product that he may bring to the Treasury. Now, I can see very clearly that it would be possible in the period of three months to bring to the Treasury of the United States the entire silver product of the world that is now subject to sale and which this bill offers a premium of 25 per cent. upon and require from the Treasury of the United States the issue of certificates payable in coin for that entire amount. And when these certificates were sold to the owners of the certificates might present them to the Treasury of the United States and demand a redemption, and thereby take from the Treasury of the United States, within the period of three months, every dollar of gold in the Treasury before there would be time or opportunity to coin the necessary silver to redeem them. This would leave this country with only silver in circulation when the necessary amount should have been afterwards coined.

I think that is a great danger. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] does not apprehend that that is a danger. He did not seem to think that the entire banishment of gold from the United States would be any great national injury; but while I as a Republican am in favor of the use of both of the metals for currency and for money I am not in favor of a proposition that would reduce us to a single metal in violation of the policy as declared by the party in its platform, which emphatically declares for the use of both as money. I have no doubt that, considering the premium that we would be required to pay foreign nations or foreign owners of silver bullion in the purchase of this silver, this would be the result. The gentleman did not answer the question whether this would not in fact be paying to the present owners of the bullion of the United States about $13,000,000 as a bonus for their property; not to the laborers in the mines, but to the money kings who hold the bullion.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman if he will yield to me for a moment.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAND. It may be that I did not answer that, but the gentleman is aware that I was asked a good many questions and that I was turned away in my remarks from covering some of the points. I claim that the free coinage of silver will cheapen gold; that is to say, that gold will fall in value and fall more than the silver will rise. Silver will probably rise 10 or 15 per cent., and that would give perhaps to the owners of silver mines five or six millions of dollars. But if the gentleman will calculate the loss to the farmers alone in the State of Iowa on account of the dearth of money he will see that the free coinage of silver would be worth to them millions of dollars, while the silver men have not lost a sou.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I agree with the gentleman from Missouri that demonetization was a great injury and the continued use of both the metals is necessary for public prosperity; but I think the gentleman will be able to see that the banishment of gold from the United States would be just as disastrous in effect and perhaps more disastrous in effect upon the public prosperity of this country than would the banishment of silver alone.

Mr. BLAND. How could that be?

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. When we take into consideration the fact that the greatest commercial nations of the world are using gold and that some of them have demonetized silver, but have not demonetized gold.

Mr. BLAND. If you had the same volume in circulation of silver that you have of gold, would not that answer all purposes?

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. So far as the volume is concerned; it is a question of value. Sir, years ago I was in favor of equalization of the values so as to bring gold and silver down to the actual cost of production; and I believe ultimately that will be the way in which this matter will be settled. If it costs a dollar to produce or to dig from the dirt a dollar's worth of silver, then a dollar's worth of silver will have to be the proper measure of value for a dollar coined; but if silver should become so very abundant that it will only require a half-dollar's worth of labor to produce a dollar in silver in the markets of the world, ultimately silver will be reduced in value, and it will be necessary in order to equalize the values, perhaps, to put a smaller amount of the precious metal in the gold dollar and a larger amount in the silver dollar.

Mr. BARTINE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question there?

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTINE. Does not the gentleman know that gentlemen of information in monetary matters state that it cost two or three dollars to produce every dollar in silver?

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I know the gentleman and his friends from the West tell us that, and I have heard it stated, but I doubt it very much. We are told that it costs more to produce a dollar in silver by mining than in any other manner possible in the world; and yet I am informed that the mine-owners of Colorado pay their hands $5 a day and make money by the mining of silver.

Mr. GEAR. From two and a half to three dollars.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. My colleague informs me that it is from two and a half to three dollars. I have heard others state it as high as five.

Mr. BARTINE. Does not the gentleman understand perfectly well that in silver-mining there is a great deal of uncertainty and that there is a large amount of dead work that makes it difficult to estimate the cost? But I have given him the estimates, not of miners and men engaged in the production of silver, but of writers on monetary affairs.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I am not sure about that. I may say to this proposition that the value of gold and all money is dependent upon its cost of production.

Mr. BARTINE. And on its rarity.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Its cost of production depends on its rarity. Mr. BARTINE. And the question of demand and desire has a good deal to do with the cost and value of silver.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I admit that; and I repeat my proposition that if silver shall become very abundant and there shall be found to be a very great deal larger proportion of silver than of gold in the world above former comparisons silver will necessarily be reduced in value, and either the silver dollars will have to be coined with more of silver or a gold dollar with less of gold in it in order to preserve the equilibrium between both metals; and I think that will finally solve the question, when we have settled the question that in this country both metals are to be used.

As I said, the Senate amendments to this bill provide that we shall at once issue certificates redeemable in coin for all the silver in the world if it is offered; and the man who brings it to the mint to-day when it is worth 75 cents gets a certificate for it on which he can receive payment in coin, either gold or silver, and by that means the entire money in the Treasury of the United States may be taken, if the demand shall be sufficient to take it all, and if that were done it would leave us in this country entirely without gold, and that is a danger to be apprehended if the Senate amendments shall be adopted.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make another remark in connection with this subject. It seems to me from the method in which the matter has been treated that there is an endeavor to make it a political question, and mainly with a view to embarrass this side of the House. Otherwise how shall we account for the solid vote on that side of the House on some preliminary questions a few days ago? How shall we account for the fact that the men on the other side, when it appeared to be a matter of politics, came up in solid phalanx and went, in some instances as they afterwards confessed, against their own feelings? Up to this moment it has not been a political question, and I hope that for the future it will not be a matter entirely of politics.

But how is it as a matter of politics? Our friends on the other side know very well that this act of 1878 has been indorsed in practice by the Democratic party ever since it was enacted into law. How is it to-day? Why, one of the gentlemen upon this floor from Illinois went out, as I understand, a few days ago to attend a convention in that great State with the view of having a resolution passed indorsing the free coinage of silver, and he came back after having suffered an overwhelming defeat in an Illinois Democratic convention. In the State of Illinois a convention of the Democratic party voted down a resolution in favor of free coinage of silver.

I have alluded frequently heretofore, and I allude again, to the fact that during the last Administration not only was no effort made in the direction of the greater coinage of the precious metals, but, on the contrary, the organs of the late Administration advised that the coinage of silver should be absolutely discontinued. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] the other day, when I alluded to this subject, stated that the late President had changed his mind on this question, and intimated that Mr. Cleveland was now in favor of the free coinage of silver. Why, sir, we have been waiting and listening with the utmost patience for the last three or four days to hear from the gentleman who will probably be the Democratic candidate for the Presidency on the subject of the free coinage of silver, waiting for a manifesto taking back his Warner letter, receding from the policy which he and his Secretaries adhered to for four years without protest from his party, and saying that hereafter he would be found in favor of the unlimited coinage in our mints of the silver product of the world, but that manifesto has not appeared.

Mr. BAYNE. He has been writing upon every other subject.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Yes, sir, he has been writing upon almost every other subject that is before the American people, but he has written nothing about this. He has failed to utter a single syllable upon this question of free coinage. Not only that, but Representatives on this floor from the great State of New York, representing the great commercial State of the Union, come here, when the question becomes a matter of judgment, and say, by speeches and by votes, that they are not in favor of the free coinage of silver. So, also, with other leading gentlemen on the other side of the House for whom I have the highest respect, gentlemen representing the great State of Pennsylvania.

I hope that there will come in this country a time when there will be a free coinage of silver. I do hope that both parties, in their national platforms, will be in favor of judicious measures looking in that direction, although the Democratic party has not heretofore favored it. But I do not think the Democratic party at least will ever declare in favor of the issue of an unlimited amount of Treasury notes based upon the entire silver product of the world to be coined throughout the coming generations at the cost of the Government and to be redeemed from the United States Treasury. I do not think there is a man on the other side of the House who believes that that proposition will ever be sustained in a Democratic national convention or by the men who are the doctrinaires of the Democratic party. If they took that position, they would abandon every part of their party's history up to the present time. If they took that position, they would turn their backs upon the entire record of Democratic history in the management of the finances of this Government, and they will not be likely to do that.

We are informed that the entire product of the silver mines of the United States amounts to from forty-five to sixty million dollars a year. This House bill proposes to coin $54,000,000 worth of silver every year or to pledge the Government to its coinage by the issuance of certificates. A large portion of the silver product of our mines will be necessary for use in the arts and for various purposes, and if the demand shall come up to what it has been in the past it will consume the entire product of the American mines and at the same time save us from any danger of being deluged with the entire silver product of the world.

In that view of the case, Mr. Speaker, I do think that we fairly represent the demand of our Western people who are in favor of the use of both gold and silver as money when we say that we are willing and desirous that this bill shall pass, so that the entire product of the American mines can be put into American circulation. Gentlemen say that we ought to coin more silver than we do now. If we have its representative in certificates it will answer the same purpose. I think we ought to examine a little into the history of silver coinage. I think there are many men on this floor who had not given the matter full previous consideration who have been surprised to find, upon examination, that up to 1873 there had never been coined in this country more than eight millions of silver dollars.

Mr. KELLEY. They are not surprised when they understand the reason.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Well, in so far as it may be charged that silver circulation caused high prices formerly and its absence is the only way in which we can account for the absence of high prices since, I think I may come to that conclusion, because if prices were high when there were only eight million dollars of silver in the United States, it certainly ought not to be claimed that they should be very low as a result since over three hundred and sixty millions of silver have been put in circulation.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman says there were only eight millions of silver dollars coined, but he should remember the large amount of subsidiary silver coin.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I know there were forty or fifty million dollars of subsidiary silver coin in circulation, and I suppose there is something near that amount at present.

Mr. POST. I do not suppose the gentleman intends to be unfair or to make any statement to the House that is incorrect.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I do not.

Mr. POST. The only reason that silver was not coined in this country was because we coined it at 16 to 1, whereas all the other countries coined it at 15½ to 1.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Yet we know there were very few silver dollars in circulation in this country at that time except American dollars. We occasionally saw a Mexican dollar; but the great bulk of the money then in circulation was of American coinage. The gentleman knows that as well as I. If we now have $360,000,000 of silver in circulation, either in the form of coin or silver certificates, we certainly ought not to have hard times when previous to 1873 we had good times, as it is claimed, when the entire circulation of silver dollars was only eight millions. The hard times will have to be accounted for on some other ground. I concede, however, that the increase of the silver circulation, if it shall be done in such a way as not to banish the more valuable metal, will be a great relief to the business interests of the country and will tend to enhance prices of the products of labor.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, it is with great diffidence that I rise to address the House upon the silver question. I am free to confess at the very outset of what little I can say upon this subject that I have not made it a study, that I have not examined the question with that care which other gentlemen on the floor of the House have undoubtedly devoted to its consideration, especially the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] to whom we have listened this afternoon, and the members of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, as well as other and older members of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I should be glad to be a free-coinage man. I am a gold and a silver man and a greenback man, about equally divided. I believe in all three of those moneys, or coins, if you choose to call them so, because a greenback, under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States is placed very nearly upon a par, as constitutional money, with gold and silver. I hope we shall never see the time, whatever else this House or this country may see, that these three moneys—gold, silver, and greenbacks—will part company.

I have said that I should be glad to be a free-coinage man. If the conditions were such as to warrant it I would vote for free coinage of silver to-day, and my only regret is that the conditions do not warrant it. Now, what is free coinage? There seems to be a great misapprehension, not, perhaps, on the floor of this House and with members here, but with the country at large, or at least a considerable portion or element of the country at large, in regard to the meaning of free coinage. The impression prevails, I will not say the general impression, but the impression prevails that free coinage means the right of a bullion-owner to take a dollar's worth of bullion to the mint and have it coined into a shining dollar. I say that is a very prevalent impression to-day, not merely with the unreading and unthinking class of American citizens, but even with the leaders, or so-called leaders, of public opinion. I hold in my hand an editorial clipped from one of the leading papers of my Congressional district, a paper edited by gentlemen of ability, gentlemen honest and earnest in their convictions. Without naming the paper I will read what they say free coinage means:

To illustrate: There are 412½ grains of standard silver in a silver dollar. The Mint requires that amount of pure metal for every such coin it turns out, but as there are only 371½ grains of pure metal in such coin the Government adds 41½ grains of alloy and displaces 41½ grains of pure metal, which goes to the Government in the shape of toll, and is known as "seigniorage." It is the same with gold as with silver, so that in reality the miner pays for coinage, but the Government gives him in lieu of his bullion the same weight in coin with the difference that instead of being pure metal it is what is called standard, or nine-tenths fine, and passes current for just what it is stamped.

The Government therefore charges a tenth of the metal for coining it into money. The miner loses nothing by free coinage, while the Government is a large gainer. Free coinage, therefore, it will be seen, means that it costs the miner nothing, while the Government gets a tenth of his bullion for coining it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that fairly represents the general impression or opinion of a large per cent. of our constituencies as to what free coinage means. In fact it means, as you and we all here know, something entirely different. A standard silver dollar—the "dollar of the daddies," as it is called; the dollar that has been coined and has passed current as a silver dollar for more than fifty years—contains 412½ grains, not of silver, but of silver and alloy; in other words, 371½ grains of pure silver and 41½ grains of copper. That makes the silver dollar, the dollar of the fathers when shaped and fashioned by the Mint into the form and semblance of a dollar.

Now, what are we asked to do by the bill as it comes from the Senate? We are asked to open the mints of this country to the bullion and mine owners and holders—not merely in fact to the mine-owners and bullion-holders of this country, but of all the world, inviting them to bring 371½ grains of pure silver to any one of the mints of the United States and there, at the expense of the Government, by machinery and by workmen hired and paid by the Government of the United States, have it shaped and fashioned by the introduction of 41½ grains of alloy into a shining dollar. That dollar goes into all the channels and avenues of trade as a dollar. It buys all that a dollar can buy. It will buy as much as a gold dollar. In other words, as silver, according to the present market prices I have heard it stated, I think, by the great father of free coinage here in this House, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], is at 72 cents on the dollar—I understand that since this discussion began on the floor of this House and in the Senate it has risen gradually until perhaps it may be worth in the markets to-day 75 cents on the dollar—we are asked to permit these bullion-owners, these mine-owners, to bring the product of their mines and the bullion they own to these mints, 72 cents' worth, and get it coined or fashioned into the silver dollar at the expense of the Government and take it home with them, the act of coining making it worth 100 cents. In other words, it is proposed to give, not to the Government of the United States this difference, not to the great people of the United States this seigniorage, but to add it to the wealth of the mine-owners or the bullion-owners of the country.

Mr. Speaker, I have been a little amused as well as instructed by the arguments and suggestions of my friend from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], and I always listen to him with a great deal of interest, if not with much profit. But since he closed his hour and ten minutes' speech I have turned to the "Bland act," so called, of which he is regarded as the father, passed by Congress in 1878. That Bland act, as it is called—and I suppose the gentleman is responsible for it and that he will not disown the child—that Bland act provides in express terms that the Government shall do just what the present House bill provides to be done; in other words, to purchase from two to four millions of bullion per month and have it coined into shining dollars, and upon that issue Treasury notes, or silver certificates, as they are called.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield for a correction?

Mr. HILL. Certainly. If the gentleman is not the father of the Bland act, I am perfectly willing to hear his disavowal.

Mr. BLAND. The bill that passed the House might possibly have been called the Bland act, for that was a free-coinage act. The law as it is now, however, is the result of an amendment put on in the Senate by Senator ALLISON, to substitute the two millions' worth for the four millions' worth, and hence his name is connected with it. Now, that part of it is the Allison part and the Bland part is the free-coinage feature.

Mr. BREWER. In other words, the Bland bill when it came back from the Senate was not as Bland as when it went over?

Mr. BLAND. No, sir; Mr. ALLISON took the Bland-ness out of it, [laughter], and the Allison part and the Bland part are essentially different.

Mr. HILL. Well, I am glad to be corrected and instructed; and I hope hereafter my friend [Mr. BLAND] will not have the reputation of being the father of this act, because he has expressly disowned it here this afternoon, in part at least, on the floor of the House.

Mr. BLAND. The Bland dollar is all right, but it is not the Bland act as I would have had it.

Mr. HILL. But the point that I wanted to call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri to is this, Mr. Speaker, that this act, which he now says he helped to fashion and shape, provides in express terms for the purchase of silver bullion by the Government and says in express terms that the object is to save this seigniorage to the Government of the United States.

Now, I will read for the benefit of the gentleman from Missouri, because his memory may be failing somewhat, what the so-called Bland act does say:

And any gain or seigniorage received from this coinage shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury, provided under existing laws, relative to the subsidiary coinage.

Has the gentleman seen any new light since that day? Has he taken a step forward or a step backward, or is his position here in relation to this House bill the result of the fact that this is a Republican measure and that Mr. Bland is to-day in opposition?

Now, Mr. Speaker, what was the condition of things when the so-called Bland-Allison act was passed? We have been told that in 1873 silver money was demonetized. It was not demonetized in full. The act at that time simply omitted a provision for the coinage of the silver dollar, but it did provide in express terms for the coinage of the subsidiary coins ranging from 10 cents up to 50 cents. It was only the silver dollar that was dropped out at that time. It is called, however, the demonetization of silver. We are told that at that time silver was worth 103 cents in the markets.

I am not going to stop here to discuss, and I probably would not be able without more careful preparation to enlighten any single member of this House, as to the reasons for this so-called or supposed demonetization of silver, or the motives that prompted it, or the condition of things that warranted or seemed to warrant the so-called demonetization. We know, however, that up to that time the United States, during all the period of its history, ranging clear back to the organization of this Government, had only coined in silver a little over $8,000,000.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman now is speaking of the coinage of the silver dollar.

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has exhausted seventeen minutes.

Mr. BREWER. I move that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. As the gentleman's time has been extended, right in this connection I would like to make this statement: That from 1779 to 1855, I think it was, an immense amount of silver, half dollars down to half dimes, all of them being full legal tender for all debts, public and private, had been coined. Silver was coined in halves and quarters, but not in dollars. There was a vast quantity, some hundreds of millions, coined, but not in dollars, but it was a legal tender for all debts.

Mr. HILL. I understand the aggregate amount, whatever form it may have assumed, was a little over $8,000,000 during that entire period.

Mr. BLAND. That was the standard dollar.

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAND. But taking the half dollars and similar denominations of the coins amounted to a great many millions.

Mr. HILL. Yes; but I am speaking of the dollar. This act—the Bland-Allison act of 1878, at that time I am informed, and informed also by the gentleman from Missouri, to whom I turn as authority on the matter of silver coinage, that in 1878 silver was worth about 85 cents on the dollar.

The Bland-Allison act was passed providing for the coinage of from two to four millions of dollars per month. That coinage has gone on at all the mints of the United States, and we have rolled off since that time, I understand, in silver dollars, about three hundred and sixty millions as against a little over eight millions in all the prior history of the Government. Every month during all this period of time the Secretary of the Treasury has purchased and had coined into dollars two millions in value of bullion and upon these silver certificates have been issued. Those certificates pass at par. They are sought after even by members of Congress on pay days. They are good, if not in the markets of the world, at least in the markets of America. What is the result? To-day, in spite of this increased coinage, silver is worth only 72 cents or at most 75 cents on the dollar. And yet with that brief history in view—and my time is too short to attempt to enlarge upon it—we are now asked by the opposition to adopt free coinage, practically placing at once in the hands of these mine and bullion owners the seigniorage of from 25 to 28 cents on the dollar. And for one I am not prepared to vote for it. I would be glad, as I said, to vote for free coinage if silver was at or even near par. But I can not see how I can go before my constituents and state the facts as they are and in effect say to them that by my vote I have enacted such legislation as will place in the pocket of these bullion and mine owners of the great West from 25 to 28 cents on every dollar of silver bullion that is coined.

Mr. BARTINE. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. POST].

Mr. POST. Mr. Speaker, the real question before this House is whether silver shall be recognized as a money metal. I listened with great attention to the opening speech of the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures [Mr. CONGER], and a gentleman at my side said it was an excellent speech. I said it was, indeed, a splendid argument from a gold-standard point of view. And striking out that single gold-standard point of view you will find that there is nothing whatever in the argument. Unless we are willing to recognize silver as a money metal we might as well, as some have said, increase the currency by a paper money. That is the real question.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I want to refer to one other matter mentioned by the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and that is to the silver lobby, the lobby representing the silver miners, that is supposed to be about this Capitol. I want to say that I know nothing of them, I have heard nothing of them, have seen nothing of them. There are no silver mines in my district. I never had any interest in silver bullion and have no interest in silver in any form, except the few coins which happen to be in my pocket. To state my connection with this proposition whether gold and silver shall be used as money, I will say that it commenced back in 1868, when the discussion went on in Europe that if it were possible to induce the principal commercial nations of the world to use gold alone as their standard the immediate result would be to increase the value of gold 38½ per cent.

I put that statement in the speech which I made some days ago on this question, and I have expected that possibly it would be controverted. I have not seen it controverted, and I know that right here in the library are documents by which I can prove every word of it. It was then pointed out that it would be a disadvantage to the producer and to the advantage of the fund-holder. I took my stand with the producer and against the fund-holder at that time. I was absolutely amazed when I found that the United States in 1873 had fallen into the trap which England had laid for it, and I think this Government was not aware of the change, for in truth the officers of the Treasury did not seem to find out that silver had been demonetized and the single gold standard adopted until nearly a year afterward. They continued silver all the while during that time as the standard of these United States. And let me say right here, when people are talking about their fear of what will happen when silver comes into use in this way by its free coinage, that we had free coinage of silver from the commencement of this Government down to 1873. We had more, than that; we had the single silver standard, and gold was simply a legal tender, precisely like the greenbacks.

Mr. CONGER. Will it interrupt you if I ask you a question?

Mr. POST. Not a particle.

Mr. CONGER. Will you please tell me if it was not also true that the other commercial nations of the world were at that time coining and using silver and are not coining it now?

Mr. POST. The other commercial nations of the world were at that time coining and using silver, except England. England demonetized it in 1816. France was the other bimetal country and it uses silver to-day just as much as it ever used it.

Mr. CONGER. It does not coin any.

Mr. POST. It does not give the unlimited coinage of silver.

Germany was a single-standard country also, and owing to the results of the war with France it thought it had more gold than silver, and consequently it determined to have the single gold standard, but it has abandoned its proposed policy and is not selling silver. But when you come to the commercial nations of the world I take it that all nations are more or less commercial nations. You talk scornfully sometimes of India, and yet India is a great commercial nation, and you talk scornfully of a great many other countries that use silver, and I have never heard any good reason for it, because certainly nine-tenths of the nations of the earth are single-standard, silver-coinage countries.

But now, Mr. Speaker, my objection to this discussion, or rather to the form in which this matter comes before us, is that it is proposed to continue to buy silver at its gold valuation. Almost all the bills that have been presented have come in that form. It is true that the Senate have sent over a bill here for the free coinage of silver or what is equivalent to it. I think it has one very serious defect, and that is in the use of the word "coin" in reference to the certificates. Let every tub stand on its own bottom. Issue a silver certificate when silver bullion is brought to the mint and issue a gold certificate when gold is brought to the mint.

Let me say, in reply to one suggestion that was made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER], that I can not imagine any possible objection to making contracts in gold. I can not dream or imagine that it will work out any harm. Let them make contracts in any kind of money that they see fit. The one thing that I want to obtain here is to return to the position we occupied in 1873. It has never done us any harm, and there is no possible reason why we should not return to it. But we are told: "Oh, that would be flooding us with the silver of the world." But where is this silver to come from? There is very little bullion in the world to come here, and certainly silver that is already coined at 15½ to 1 of gold is not going to be brought here to be recoined at 16 to 1, a loss of one-sixteenth in the coinage, in order to secure gold. That certainly can not happen. But it has seemed to me, since there are people who believe in ghosts when there are no ghosts, men's apprehensions are entitled to consideration. I recognize that feeling, and for that purpose at the beginning of the session—

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him there?

Mr. POST. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. It seems to me that that is a pretty substantial kind of ghost. [Laughter.] When these owners of bullion in Mexico, or on the continent, or anywhere in the wide world find out that we pay here 100 cents for silver that is worth 72 cents, do you not think that that will bring foreign silver to this country?

Mr. STRUBLE. Is not the gentleman mistaken about the value of bullion at the present time? Is it not worth about 80 cents?

Mr. POST. Let us take it at 72. What are the other nations to do? Are they going to take their own coin that is already coined at 15½ or 16 to 1, as it is in India, and bring it here to be coined at 16 to 1? Are they going to come here and give more silver for 1 of gold than they are paying elsewhere. On the contrary, it will be likely to occur, just as it occurred in the past, when other nations coin 1 of gold to 15½ of silver and we 1 of gold to 16 of silver, that the silver will continue to go to the people who coin it at the less ratio.

Mr. HILL. What is the objection to them bringing their bullion here and getting it coined into a shining silver dollar? We say that they can not take American silver away, but they can take American gold. They can go to the banks and exchange it for gold and take that gold away.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BARTINE. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. POST. Mr. Speaker, I only want to say, in order that this matter may be fully understood, that in connection with this matter, at the beginning of the session, I introduced a bill that would meet that particular objection. It was a provision that would allow the present law to stand just as it is; that we should continue to buy $2,000,000 worth a month. It provided that the silver production of the American mines might be brought to the Mint and coined. In that respect it recognizes the principle of free coinage, and that is all in fact that there is in the present discussion, the principle of the free coinage of silver, the principle of recognizing silver as a money metal. The question is whether you will go back to that as it has always been prior to 1873 or whether you are going to treat silver as a commodity. You are doing that now. It is true at present that it is bought at its gold value, carried into the Mint and stamped as money. Once in the Mint it ceases to be treated as a commodity; it becomes money, and that is the principle it is important to preserve. The vital defect in the House bill, if it shall again go before the House, is that provision by which silver after it has gone into the Mint, where it should properly go only for coinage purposes, can be taken out as commodity at value again fixed by gold.

Mr. BARTINE. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TOWNSEND].

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, there is evidently a very great misapprehension with reference to the value of silver bullion. We hear and we have heard frequently statements in regard to the "72-cent dollar." Now, as a matter of fact, since the discussion of the silver question has arisen in Congress at this session and by reason of that discussion the price of silver bullion has been raised so that at the quotations of to-day it is worth 83 cents. We say that the moment free coinage is made the law that moment gold and silver bullion are at a parity.

Mr. CUTCHEON. What market does the gentleman quote?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Colorado. The New York market.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. It is not worth 83.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Colorado. It is worth from 81 to 83 cents.

Now, the moment we have free coinage that moment gold and silver are at par. Then there is no seigniorage; then there is no difference between the value of the two metals. Now, this apprehension in regard to gold being driven out of the country is to my mind a very ridiculous thing. The question has been discussed very ably at the other end of the Capitol by the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS], who demonstrates that there is no danger of gold leaving the country except as the balance of trade shall happen to be against us. When gold goes out of the country it goes out to pay for something. There is no ground for apprehension as to gold leaving the country, although that seems to be the bugbear which frightens a great many people.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. If they can bring their silver here and get a hundred cents for it, why will they not do so and take away our gold?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Colorado. Does not the gentleman know that the silver coined in foreign countries is coined at a ratio below ours?

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. Does not the gentleman know that it is not all coined?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Colorado. It is not all coined. That is true. It was stopped in 1873. It is an historical fact that up to 1873 the fact that the mints of France were open to the coinage of silver at 15½ to 1 preserved the value of silver so that for two hundred years there was not a difference of more than 3 per cent. between silver and gold. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] spoke about the large increase in silver production causing a difference in the ratio. Why the ratio of difference prior to 1873 was much more marked than since that time, there being at one time a great increase in the production of gold, at another time a great increase in the production of silver, yet in all that period there was not a difference of over 3 per cent. between gold and silver.

Mr. CONGER. The ratio was changed to prevent it, though.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Colorado. Not seriously.

Mr. CONGER. But it was changed.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Colorado. Now, Mr. Speaker, up to 1873 the mints of some countries were open to the coinage of silver on a given basis, in some cases 15½ to 1 and in other cases, like ours, 16 to 1, and the fact that our ratio was 16 to 1 was the reason that we coined no silver, because it could be coined abroad at 15½ to 1. The moment we make free coinage a part of our system, it will compel the people of every other country who wish to retain their silver to open their mints, and the moment they do that at the ratio they have heretofore adopted there will be no more coinage in this country.

Mr. CONGER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that if we open our mints to force coinage at 16 to 1, that will compel European countries to open their mints at 15½ to 1?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Colorado. I think it will compel them to do it in order to retain their bullion, not their coin.

Mr. CONGER. If they should do that, would it not necessarily follow that our silver would all go there to be coined, and that if France should open her mints at 15½ to 1 which is her ratio, ours being 16 to 1, our silver would all go over there and overwhelm her? And would not that fact alone keep France from opening her mints?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Colorado. I do not think so.

Mr. STRUBLE. The gentleman said a moment ago that the bullion of foreign countries would leave them under certain conditions.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Colorado. Yes, sir.

Mr. STRUBLE. Where would it go?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Colorado. I think it would probably come to our mints, but I do not think that any coin would come here. I understand as a matter of fact that France has about six hundred millions of coined silver, at 15½ to 1, which is circulating at par with gold. They have not demonetized silver; they have simply closed their mints.

Mr. STRUBLE. Is it not reasonable to suppose that if we should adopt free coinage the silver bullion would move towards this country?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Colorado. I do not think that when France was coming at 15½ to 1 that fact resulted in her coining all the bullion in the world; but when the price of bullion got too low in any country the fact that it could be taken to France, where it could be coined into money that could be exchanged for commodities at 15½ to 1, had the effect to maintain the price of silver bullion at about that figure, no matter where it was or for what country it was destined.

In the opinion of the royal commission the very fact that men could take their bullion to France and have it coined into money with which they could purchase products at the rate of 15½ of silver to 1 of gold—that fact itself maintained the market price; that kept the measure of value steady. What is the effect? Bimetallism, as I understand it and as I believe it is understood by those who have given it the most investigation—bimetallism furnishes a safe and steady measure of value. The demonetization of silver has had the effect to increase the price of gold.

Now, what is a dollar worth? A dollar is only good for what it will buy, for what it will exchange for in commodities. Very well. A silver dollar in bullion will exchange for more commodities to-day than it would when silver was demonetized in this country. A dollar in silver bullion will buy more wheat, more corn, more cotton, more everything, than it would when silver was demonetized.

Mr. STRUBLE. How do you account for that? By reason of the increased value of gold?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Colorado. Yes, sir. That is to say, silver has gone down in its relation to gold only. Now, if a dollar of gold which yesterday would buy one bushel of wheat will to-day buy two bushels, wheat has gone down or gold has gone up. There has been a change somewhere.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Which is it?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Colorado. Silver bullion has remained nearer to the value of commodities than gold has. Gold has increased in value, but silver has not depreciated in its relation to gold as much as wheat, corn, oats, and all other commodities. This is shown by the statements of the Bureau of Statistics.

Hence I say that to secure the true solution of the coinage question and to have a fixed and staple measure of value we must have free coinage. If we can not obtain free coinage, I say very frankly I am for the proposition providing for the coinage of 4,500,000 ounces of silver. Why? Simply because it furnishes that much larger demand than we now have by requiring the coinage of $2,000,000 a month.

Whenever the demand becomes larger than or as great as the supply, that moment you have the highest prices you can have. And when your mints are opened there is the demand for all the silver at that ratio. The result is that a staple ratio is maintained. Any demand less than the amount of supply will keep the value fluctuating more or less, will keep silver more or less depreciated in its relation to gold.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Does the gentleman see any objection to confining free coinage to the American output?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Colorado. I should be very much gratified to see that if I can not have more, because silver bullion and gold bullion have a market not only in America, but throughout the world. Whenever the price rises in America, it rises everywhere else. When silver bullion rises here, it will rise in India. In that country, where they have a silver basis exclusively, there has been no change in the price of commodities; they are the same to-day as they were before demonetization.

Mr. STRUBLE. I wish to ask the gentleman whether he thinks that the price of silver bullion in this country which, as I understand, produces less than is produced outside, will control the price of silver throughout the world?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Colorado. If we raise the price by free coinage to a parity with gold, it will be the same everywhere, allowing for transportation charges, insurance, etc.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BARTINE. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. KELLEY].

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this debate is the culmination of a debate that has been going on in this country for twelve or fourteen years; in other words, we are about to reach the crisis of a discussion that has had its effect upon this House and the other branch of Congress. From the remarks which have been made on this question to-day and heretofore I apprehend that most of us have learned something about this question. But many of us, after listening to the remarks of one or another gentleman, have, when he has taken his seat, come to the conclusion that upon the question of silver he knew nothing, not because he did in fact know nothing, but because we knew so much more than he did.

I have observed another thing in this controversy. Some men seem to think that because they are bankers, because they have handled a great deal of money, because they know how to collect interest and how to squeeze as much interest as possible out of the fellow who borrows the money, therefore they are financiers, they "know it all," and the man who makes the money, who produces the product, is not supposed to know anything. With that idea, Mr. Speaker, I can not agree.

Now, as a preliminary remark, I wish to say that I represent a district that does not produce a single ounce of silver. It would not be fair to accuse any one representing a district of that kind of being influenced by the bullion-producers or the bullion-holders. But, sir, I represent a district that produces other things than silver; and, in my judgment, the result of the discussion that has been going on, not only in that, but in every other district in the State of Kansas and almost every other district of the West, has been to bring the minds of the people there to the conclusion that in the demonetization of silver in this country in 1873 a great wrong was done to the producers. The people there are confident that this is so. They have discussed the question in their school-houses, in their debating societies, and upon the stump, and, in my judgment, they have discussed it as intelligently as it has been discussed in either branch of Congress. Having come to that conclusion, another conclusion has naturally followed, that if they have been wronged—if the people of this country who are producers have been obliged since that time to take less for their products and thus have been wronged—it is no more than right now, after the fraud and theft have been perpetrated upon them for seventeen years, that justice should be done.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the conclusion of the people of the Western States almost unanimously, and it is folly to undertake to prove to the people, the Grangers and the Alliance men of the West, who have organized themselves upon this basis, that anything else is the case.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KELLEY. Presently.

Some gentleman, two or three, in fact, I believe, on that side, has presented the idea that now to remonetize silver would be simply giving to the bullion-holder or the bullion-producer 100 cents for 80 cents of silver. In reply to that proposition I want to say that you have not only stolen from the bullion-producer for the last seventeen years that 20 cents on the dollar, but you have stolen from the corn-producer, from the wheat-producer, from the oats-producer, and from the pork and beef producer the same sum during all of these years.

Now, the people I represent and the people that many other gentlemen represent, who represent Western constituencies, while they are producers, have also been induced—for the purpose, you may say, of speculation, but really for the purpose of improving their condition and enhancing the value of their property, making their homes better, improving the value of their lands, and building up their fortunes—they have seen fit when silver was equal with gold in 1873 to go in debt.

They have issued their county bonds for the purpose of building railroads. They have issued State and city bonds for the same purpose, and in order that their children upon the Western frontiers may have equal advantages and school facilities with the children of the older States, they have issued bonds for the construction of school-houses. This was done when silver and gold were at a parity; but the moment you demonetized silver you made these bonds which they issued in payment of these various things payable in gold or its equivalent, and therefore made the interest as well as the principal of the bonds relatively, worth more to the holder than they were before. And here is a continuance of that proposition to-day. The men who hold the bonds, the men who hold the mortgages, who hold the securities are all opposed to this thing, and would defeat it if they could on the theory and principle that their pocket-books would suffer, because they are opposed to making their money worth less than it is. And I am frank enough to say, Mr. Speaker, just here, that so soon as this silver is remonetized all money will be worth less and all products will be worth more than they are now.

All bonds, all mortgages, all notes, all securities, national, State, county, township, school district, or private individual, will be worth less, not because the payment, interest or principal, is any the less sure to be made, but because it is to be paid in money that is worth less, and worth less because the volume of money is greater, or to be greater; and for the same reason, Mr. Speaker, the product of the farm, the shop, the mine, the factory will be worth more—more dollars—will pay more interest on the note, on the bond, on the mortgage. In short, Mr. Speaker, this bill as it comes from the Senate in favor of free coinage is a bill in favor of the debtor class, the class that has been swindled for the last seventeen years, and the results of that swindle have been handed over to the creditor by the demonetization of silver.

Mr. Speaker, it has been common for the last few years to hear the Senate of the United States spoken of as the "Millionaire Club," and the feeling among the common people has been growing that the Senate was their enemy. I am very glad to be able to say that the act of the Senate in passing this bill for free coinage of silver has done more to remove that sentiment among the common people than any act that has passed the Senate for fifteen years. The Senate has had its ear to the ground, and has heard the voice of the people, and has heeded it. I hope this House will be wise enough to do likewise and give to the people what they so much need, and what they know is theirs by right. Pass this bill and it will bring joy, not only to the agriculturists of the West, but to the agriculturists of the whole country. It is heavier freighted with joy and relief in a material sense than any bill of any kind that has been considered by Congress for a decade of years.

This bill will wrong no one, it will relieve many. I beg of you to not miss this great opportunity to relieve a wronged and suffering people. I beg of you to heed not the voice of Shylock, but heed rather the voice of patriotic justice, that voice that crieth from the wilderness, "Make ye the crooked paths straight."

I say that the people who from a material standpoint are opposed to the proposition of the bondholder, the mortgage-holder, the note-holder, and the scrip-holder are the men and women who must pay the interest on the bonds and eventually must also pay their principal, are the people that are to be benefited by free coinage after seventeen years of injustice and wrong.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CUTCHEON. My question would have come in more properly where I first interrupted the gentleman. You stated that in the demonetization of silver in 1873, in your opinion, a great wrong was inflicted upon the producing class.

Mr. KELLEY. I did.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I wanted to ask you to state the total amount in silver dollars that has been coined by this Government from its foundation down to 1873.

Mr. KELLEY. It makes but little difference what the total is in silver dollars. It (dollars) has been emphasized on the other side in speaking of the amount coined, and in commenting upon the trick that had been played upon the people when silver was demonetized. The gentleman should remember that there were not only silver dollars coined, but half-dollars; there was no doubt fifty times as much silver coined in halves and quarters, which were all legal tender, as was coined into dollars.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Then, I will enlarge my question by asking the gentleman to state the total amount of dollars and half-dollars which had been coined by the Government up to 1873.

Mr. KELLEY. I understand the exact figures are right there in the hands of the gentleman from Minnesota, and I will ask him to give them to you.

Mr. LIND. Of silver dollars prior to 1878 about eight million had been coined.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes; about eight millions.

Mr. LIND. Of the other silver coins—

Mr. CUTCHEON. That is, quarters and dimes.

Mr. LIND. Yes; halves, quarters, dimes, half-dimes, and three-cent pieces, all of which were legal tender, there had been coined over $300,000,000.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Now, how much of this does the gentleman think was in existence after specie payments had been resumed?

Mr. KELLEY. I should say about $308,000,000 from that statement. [Laughter.]

Mr. CUTCHEON. Oh, no.

Mr. KELLEY. Then, what became of it?

Mr. CUTCHEON. You know and I know that from 1861 on but very little silver was in circulation in this country.

Mr. BLAND. If the gentleman from Kansas will allow me an interruption just there.

Mr. KELLEY. Certainly.

Mr. BLAND. Prior to 1873 silver dollars were just beginning to be coined at the mint. There had been two millions of them coined two years prior to that, but for two months, about the time of the demonetization of silver, nearly a million dollars had been coined. They were coming in at the rate of half million a month, and would have come in at the rate of eight or ten millions if the coinage had not been stopped.

Mr. KELLEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTINE. I yield to the gentleman a few moments longer.

Mr. KELLEY. If you will call in mind the date at the time silver was demonetized it was almost immediately after the culmination of the national debt. And the object of the people who had it demonetized, by a trick I say, and can prove—demonetized by a Congress that did not know what they were doing and by a President that when he signed that bill did not know what was in it; at that time it was about the time or soon after the public debt had culminated at its highest point.

It was, therefore, to the advantage of those men who held those bonds that they should make the money that was in those bonds, and the interest as well as the principal, worth as much as possible.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one more idea, and that is that at the time that Germany demonetized silver it was immediately after the war with France, when France was compelled to pay to Germany a great amount of tribute for damages that she had sustained. After obtaining the bonds from France, the obligation of France, for the purpose of indicating how much she owed Germany, Germany proceeded to make her money more valuable, in order that every dollar of principal and interest paid her by France should also be worth more to her; and it is the exact reverse of this proposition that we are asking for to-day. Therefore I say this is a crisis of a discussion that has been going on in this country, and it is a subject that is as well, if not better, understood by the great majority of the people of this country, especially the people of the West and the Northwest, than by the members of this House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, another idea. You will all remember that shortly after the culmination of the war, at high tide, when the debt of this country was near its height, the subject came up and troubled the minds of many as to how we would ever be able to pay that debt, and the idea was suggested to Abraham Lincoln, that great man who was always so full of good sense and common sense that he could apply to any business or other proposition, and he said to them, "The money is not in sight to pay this debt to-day, but we have an intimation that in the West and the Southwest there are mountains of silver." Said he, "I think there is more than enough silver there to pay it. But little of it has been taken out as yet, but it seems to me that that is to be the solution of this question, that the silver to pay this debt is to come from the mountains of the West and the Southwest." And added that every inducement should be offered to the miner to take it out. Little did Abraham Lincoln think at that time that the very proposition he was submitting was to be shorn of its power, its virtue, and its strength by the very party that held the obligations of this Government, and that indicated how much was to be paid.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Can you point to the time when Lincoln made this remark?

Mr. KELLEY. It was but a few days, or weeks, before he was assassinated. I do not remember the exact time.

One other idea, Mr. Speaker, and that is this: A celebrated statesman, a gentleman who lives in Illinois and who has lived there for a number of years, who was a compatriot of Abraham Lincoln, who has nearly as much sense as Lincoln had, as nearly so as any man I know of—I refer to Oglesby—has said that much of the success of his life, politically at any rate, was due to following the advice of that wise and sagacious statesman, Abraham Lincoln, when he said to him, "Dick, you want to keep your ear to the ground, and hear the voice of the people as soon as possible, and follow that voice wherever it leads; and remember always that the people will never lead you wrong." I say, Mr. Speaker, that the people of this country, and by them I mean the great mass of the people, I do not mean those who own the bonds or own the mortgages, because they are not the one-fiftieth part of the people—I say that the people, the voters who make Congress and who make Presidents, have voiced with no uncertain sound what their disposition and their desire is upon this question.

Now, Mr. Speaker, speaking of this crisis that I think is about to culminate, I think we are either about to make or unmake the farmers of the West and the producers of the West, as well as of the East; for I want you to understand, as I think you well know, that the agricultural interests of the East are nearly as much depressed as those of the West. And I say that in this crisis we are either about to give the farmer and the producer the instrument with which they can help themselves to pay off the mortgages and be relieved from the bondholders and the mortgage-holders, or we are about to retain that power and that instrument from them and to make them forever the slaves of the bondholders and the slaves of the holders of their obligations.

It has been repeatedly asserted upon this floor, for the purpose I think of influencing votes upon this question, that if this bill is passed it will receive the veto of the Executive of this Government. Well, I do not believe in that kind of an argument, but inasmuch as it has been made, I want to put alongside of it this other argument and this further advice, that gentlemen should keep their ears close to the ground and listen to the voice of the people; because when this question is voted upon to-morrow it will decide the question whether many of the members of this House shall return to the next House, or whether their seats are to be occupied by others. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTINE. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has nineteen minutes remaining.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8909) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insisted upon its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. 9066) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes, disagreed to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DAWES, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. CALL as conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. 9856) making an appropriation for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, with amendments in which concurrence is asked.

THE SILVER BILL.

Mr. BARTINE. Mr. Speaker, in the nineteen minutes remaining, after having been so very generous in dividing with my friends, I shall not undertake anything like an elaborate discussion of the silver question; but a few points have been made during the progress of this debate upon the other side of the question in opposition to what I believe to be the true monetary doctrine, to which I wish briefly to refer. Among others, my esteemed friend, the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, in the course of his very excellent speech, made the statement that if this House refused to non-concur, that if this House voted for free coinage, and as a result of that vote we failed to get any substantial legislation, the extreme silver men would have themselves to blame for that result. I wish to say that this remark was uncalled for, unjust, and unkind. If one single advocate of free coinage upon this floor has done anything more than what he believes to be his duty to himself and his people, I am not aware of that fact. Speaking for myself individually, as I have said on former occasions, I represent a constituency who are an absolute unit upon this question. The feeling in our country is not confined to the mine-owners, but it permeates the mind of every person there who is old enough to think, because every other industry in the State depends for its existence upon the mining for the precious metals.

Upon this point I desire to say that while this interest is of great importance to us, it is altogether unfair to accuse us of mercenary motives. We are looking out for our substantial interests just the same as other sections, but it comes with exceeding bad grace from many gentlemen upon the floor of this House to suggest undue selfishness on our part.

There are gentlemen representing districts upon this floor which have realized more benefit by what may rightly be termed special legislation in their favor than the State of Nevada could ever expect to realize from the free coinage of silver. Single great manufacturing districts of the Eastern States have been more directly benefited by the operation of the protective tariff in a decade than my State can be advantaged by free coinage in fifty years; and I repeat that for a gentleman representing a constituency or a district of that kind, it is in exceedingly bad taste for him to suggest a doubt as to the disinterestedness of those who advocate the free coinage of silver.

Now, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I am in favor of the free coinage of silver, because I firmly believe in a double standard, and because I believe the only way to reach and preserve the double standard is by placing both metals upon an exactly equal footing. In opposition to that doctrine a great many objections are made. Among them it has been prominently urged here to-day that if you establish the free coinage of silver the mine-owner gets the benefit of the seigniorage, which is 25 or 30 per cent. But why should he not get the benefit of the seigniorage if it works no injustice to anybody else? Every ounce of silver that is dragged from the depths of our mines is the work of a toiling miner, and why should he be required to give up one-fourth of the profit of his labor in order to furnish money for the commercial requirements of this country?

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. Because it is all that it is worth in the markets of the world.

Mr. BARTINE. Because that is all it is worth in the markets of the world, says my friend, but he omits to add because of the limitation upon coinage, and that leads me to another point.

They say the coinage of gold and silver involves two entirely different propositions, because the bullion value of the gold and the coin value of the gold are identical. In the name of common sense, I would like to know how there can be a difference between the coin value and the bullion value when every man who has any bullion can take it to the mint and have it stamped into coin free. They are interconvertible in the most complete sense, just the same as the greenback is interconvertible with coin at the present time, and consequently worth just the same, but as a matter of fact the value of gold is being artificially sustained all the time, just exactly the same as the value of silver would be artificially sustained if we were to establish free coinage. Is there a gentleman within the sound of my voice who believes for an instant that if the mints of the commercial nations were to be closed to the free coinage of gold and that metal demonetized it would retain its present value? Do we not know that there are about $3,200,000,000 worth of gold used as money? Suppose it were demonetized; suppose it were deprived of that use and compelled to find employment in some other way. Is there a gentleman, I ask again, who believes that it would retain its present coinage value?

It has been shown that for ordinary industrial purposes there is an accumulation of gold on hand at the present time sufficient to supply the wants of the whole world for from fifty to seventy-five years. Suppose that that quantity of iron, or of coal, or of lead, or of tin, or of any other commodity that might be named were on hand. What would be its value? Practically nothing. Almost every writer on monetary matters who has any standing whatever at the present time recognizes the fact, and admits it, that it is its employment as money which gives to gold its principal value. Just so it would be with silver if treated like gold, and as it always was until it was demonetized. Silver bullion was worth as much as silver coin, and no sufficient reason can be given why there should be any substantial difference between the two cases. If a man having the bullion can take it right to the mint and have it stamped into standard coin he would be very silly to take any less than its coin value for it.

The royal silver commission, which has recently completed its labors in England, six of whom were radically opposed to silver coinage, recognizes this fact, and as I have said before in this Hall, and as has been agreed by all writers on the monetary question, the further fact that France, with 25,000,000 of people, from the year 1803 to the year 1865, by the maintenance of free coinage held these two metals practically equal at a ratio of 15 to 1, and, further, that just as soon as free coinage was stopped they parted company. If there is any reason to suppose that we are unable to do the same thing our opponents have very carefully kept that reason to themselves.

It has been said that at the time of the demonetization of silver in this country we had no considerable amount of it in circulation. The reason has already been given by Mr. BLAND. Its coining value abroad was greater than its coining value here, and it naturally sought the best market. This fact fully establishes the correctness of our position, because when the ratio was fixed in France at 15 to 1 that fixed the value throughout the whole commercial world. It sought the best market for coinage, but when it got there it became a part of the circulating medium of the world and had a potent effect upon prices everywhere, because prices in the great majority of cases are international. A large volume of money thrown into the currency of England will affect the price of every great staple in America. The silver, then, was all absorbed into the monetary system of the world, somewhere, as full, complete legal-tender money, but when the mints abroad were closed, and we followed in the wake and closed ours, silver became an outcast, and wherever it was used at all as money it was only in a subsidiary way. It became "token" money, so to speak, and gold governed the value of everything, including the value of silver. The result was that everything was drawn up to the gold value, and all the commercial nations found themselves upon the gold standard, supplemented in a certain degree by this subsidiary "token" money.

Now, it has been said that free coinage is visionary and that it will not have the effect which its friends claim—that it will not raise silver to par. But this is mere assertion. We are not dealing with theories. We invoke all the experience of the past, and I say without fear of truthful contradiction that wherever free coinage has been tried it has proved a complete success.

It proved a success in France with 25,000,000 of people, and in the name of common sense why can not it prove an equal success in the United States of America with 65,000,000 of people?

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. It would, as long as your gold holds out.

Mr. BARTINE. Why should not the gold hold out? The gentleman says it will go abroad to pay for the silver. Why should it, when silver would be worth as much abroad as it is here? Does not the gentleman know that as long as free coinage held the two metals together the price was substantially the same throughout the whole commercial world, and what particular object is there in foreigners selling silver in the United States when it is worth as much in Europe as here.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. Does not the gentleman know that you can buy silver bars for 80 cents on the dollar in London to-day?

Mr. BARTINE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. Now, if they can be bought for 80 cents on the dollar and sold here for 100 cents on the dollar, why will they not be sent here?

Mr. BARTINE. I will answer the gentleman in a word. Silver bars sell in London at 80 per cent. to-day; but suppose our mints are thrown open to the coinage of silver to-morrow, then where will you find a man who will be willing to sell his silver at that price? In other words, does not the gentleman see that the opening of the mints brings up the price everywhere and destroys his whole argument?

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. But they will bring their silver here and take away our gold just as long as our gold holds out.

Mr. BARTINE. Not at all. At the beginning there may be one transaction of that character, but when the silver reaches par that puts an end to speculation. Why did it not have the effect which the gentleman suggests in France, when they had free coinage there? The facts are against his theory. Of course there is a profit in the first instance, but as soon as the silver is brought to par the profit disappears. It is only because there is a little surplus of silver left over that is not turned into coin that men get the idea of a discount upon silver; but every nation in the world maintains its silver money at par; not one of them has any silver to spare, and, as far as coin is concerned, it could only be brought here and recoined at a loss.

Again, we are always being confronted with the bugbear of the United States being flooded with cheap silver from somewhere. That is a most remarkable argument in view of the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury shows that the total amount of silver available for coinage after the wants of other countries are supplied is only $51,000,000 a year, and he tells us that if we adopt his plan we can take all the available silver of the world without danger or trouble; but the instant we propose free coinage the fifty-one millions become magnified into five hundred millions, or some other almost inconceivable amount, and we are threatened with the danger of a great tidal wave of cheap silver from some unknown and undiscoverable quarter. Now, Mr. Speaker, with reference to this suggestion, I wish to say that the little reading and study I have been able to devote to this subject have never brought to my attention a single nation on the face of the earth that has been cursed with too much silver, and, as Senator EVARTS shows in his elaborate speech delivered a few days ago, our gold will not go abroad unless the currents of trade carry it there and we get something for it; and if we do get an equivalent, what difference whether it goes abroad or not does it make? Value is value, and if we get the same value in silver, we are not hurt. Again, it is said that the fact of silver having depreciated under the operation of the existing law is proof that free coinage will not bring it to par. A more untenable argument than that was never made in this world.

Every fair-minded person knows that no silver man was ever content with the Bland law, as it is now called. It is said that both sides made predictions. I never in my life saw a silver man who claimed or pretended to believe that the coinage of $2,000,000 worth of silver a month would bring silver to par. And if it was a fact that some men made rather extravagant estimates of the probable effect of that law, where was there one who believed for an instant that it would be only executed to its minimum? Who believed that only $2,000,000 per month would be coined by every successive Secretary of the Treasury? And I unhesitatingly express the opinion here and now that if $4,000,000 a month had been coined during one-half of the time that the law has been in operation every ounce of surplus silver in the world would have been absorbed and there would be no discount on silver to haunt the fears of our "gold-bug" friends.

But it is claimed that the silvermen are particularly anxious to form "combines" and to speculate in silver. Now it is a fact of which my friend and colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAYLOR], is well aware that the one peculiarly speculative feature which was contained in the original bill was the one of all others that silver men fought at all times and in all places; that is the provision allowing the same bullion to be deposited and withdrawn a hundred times over, making it the foot-ball of speculation in every market. To any such provision every silver miner in this country has been opposed from first to last. Our people do not want any speculation in bullion. They want it to stand solidly and squarely at par and to be kept there; because when the line is drawn, when you say it shall not go above a certain price, all the speculation, all the variation in value, must take place beneath that line; and consequently the speculation is to our disadvantage.

Again, referring to the selfishness or grasping avarice of the silver men, I want to call attention to the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury himself, in an open published letter, makes the statement that he believes his bill will be more beneficial to the silver men than free coinage would be. If that is true it certainly ought to relieve us of the charge of being mercenary; and if it is not true it shows that he has a very incorrect conception of the probable result of his plan.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. You do not believe that?

Mr. BARTINE. No, I do not.

There is another thing which shows the silver men are not selfish or mercenary in this matter. All around me within the last day or two I have heard men declare that they were willing to coin the product of the American mines, but do not want to bring here the cheap silver from all over the world. A most remarkable circumstance is that the mine-owners themselves insist upon having the mints of this country thrown open to the bullion product of the entire commercial world. If there is anything in the principle of protection—if they are selfish in this matter—it would seem that they would be in favor of erecting a Chinese wall around the country and reserving our mints for their exclusive benefit. But, instead of that, looking at this question fairly, from the standpoint of principle, they say that the double standard can only be maintained in one way; and that is by placing the two metals upon a precisely equal footing, and that any limitation upon the privilege of one is an advantage to the other.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. The more silver they can get into the vaults of the Treasury, the higher they can put the price.

Mr. BARTINE. Then you think it is to the advantage of the silver men to throw open the ports of this country and let in the cheap silver of all the world to keep down the price?

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. The more silver you put in the vaults of the Treasury, the scarcer you make it and the higher you make the price.

Mr. BARTINE. But your argument is that the price will not stay up; that it is bound to go down; that it is altogether artificial—

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. Oh, no—

Mr. BARTINE. Then, if the price is going to stay up, what harm is done? If you get a dollar's worth of money for a dollar's worth of silver, what right have you to complain?

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. We do not get it.

Mr. BARTINE. Does not the silver dollar answer fully the purposes of a dollar? Is there any gentleman in this Hall who has ever lost a cent on these silver dollars, which are stated to be worth only 72 or 75 or 78 cents? If these dollars are not worth a dollar, then any gentleman by buying them up at their actual value and selling them again at the value they command at the Treasury can make himself in a few weeks the richest man in the United States.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. But they will not pass for the value of a dollar except in this country.

Mr. BARTINE. Is not that enough? Does it not answer every purpose? But in fact you can get substantially the same for them everywhere else. The silver dollar is exchangeable in the London market at substantially our valuation, less the exchange, whatever that may happen to be.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. No; it will only pass there for 72 cents.

Mr. BARTINE. I know better. What man would be fool enough to part with a dollar in the London market for 72 cents when he could send it across to this country and get a full dollar for it? Any man must be an idiot to do that.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BARTINE. My time is exhausted, but in conclusion let me add that I feel it my duty to vote for any measure that points in the direction of free coinage and against anything which may stand between me and that measure.

Mr. STRUBLE. Mr. Speaker, I may belong to that unfortunate class described by my friend from Kansas [Mr. KELLEY] a little while ago; nevertheless I desire to talk for a few moments on the silver question as it is now presented in the report of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

I desire to say at the outset that I favored the bill which was passed originally by the House, but I desire that from that bill may be eliminated the bullion redemption feature. I hope before we are through with the discussion of this question, Mr. Speaker, we may have a silver bill that will consume the silver product of this country, and thereby afford an exemplification of the true doctrine of protection for which Republicans contend, and also give us a conservative line of policy on the monetary question which may be safely and wisely continued until a time in the not remote future when unlimited free coinage may become the permanent financial policy of the Government.

Now, it seems to me, it is well for us to consider, as gentlemen have emphasized, that we are but one of a number of large nations of the world; that we produce, as my colleague from Iowa said the other day, less than half the silver of the world, and that for seventeen years silver has been demonetized in this country, and for many years in the leading foreign nations of the Old World, meantime the production of this metal continuing in large quantities annually. I agree with gentlemen when they say that the demonetization of silver in the United States never ought to have occurred. I believed it was wrong at the time, a bad principle and bad financial management. But the fact is, it took place, and it seems to me it will be unwise in discussing the question to ignore the effect of this fact at home and abroad. The product has been going on. Other nations have demonetized silver, as I have already indicated. It is demonetized to-day by the large nations across the water; and while our Government has made repeated efforts to bring about an international understanding that would result in remonetizing silver again and bringing it into general use, placing it alongside of gold as a money metal in all countries, yet we well know that these attempts on our part to bring about such understanding have absolutely failed. And my thought about it, Mr. Speaker, is that if we at this time, with the financial conditions pending, shall pass a law which will consume the silver product of this country and await the result of that law here and elsewhere, it will be safer than to at once throw open our mints to the unlimited coinage of the world's accumulated silver product. If we find after a few years that no ill consequences result from the free coinage of American silver and that we may venture further without danger of serious financial derangement, we can take the remaining step and permit the absolutely free coinage of all silver that may be offered our mints, whether produced here or elsewhere. We will then be in a condition to determine what the effect of our action will be and whether the final step can be taken without danger; and, sir, I am free to say that if experience demonstrates that absolutely free coinage can be safely adopted, it ought to be immediately declared the policy of the country. But let us not at this time by one bound, in the face of the facts that are before us, go from the present limited coinage of silver to an inflated condition of the currency, thereby placing the immense business and financial interests of the nation in danger.

All agree that we need more money than we have in circulation. I think there is no dispute in this discussion on that point, but while we are laboring under the disadvantages of too little currency there is great danger, in my estimation, of going at once to the other extreme of an inflated condition, and that this extreme would soon be found as detrimental, if not far more so, than an inadequate supply of circulating medium. The House bill, amended as I believe it will be, will increase our money at the rate of nearly sixty millions annually. This will be found to be a very rapid increase in the volume of money. Five years under such a law will realize an increase of nearly three hundred millions above our present volume, provided retirement of the currency by well known current methods is not enlarged.

Now, I submit it is wise to enact a law, in the face of the unfavorable policies of the leading great nations of the world, that may result in flooding us with unknown millions of silver? It seems to me plainly we should not. I for one wish to see silver remonetized; and I wish then to see the free coinage of silver; but when this is accomplished I wish it to be accomplished for all time to come, and not by an inflation of the currency to compel us in the near future to take a backward step and to again disparage, if not demonetize, this metal. Let us take the step proposed here of purchasing the four and one-half million ounces per month, as this bill provides; let us consume the product of our own home mines, issue certificates upon the bullion, making the certificates legal tender for all public and private debts; and let us show to our people all over the land that we believe in that protection which comprehends not only articles which are manufactured in the East, but articles produced in all sections of the country. Let us take this position first. Let that be tried in a business-like, practical way, and, as I said a moment ago, if we then find ourselves in the condition to advance still further and to absolute free coinage, it can be done without financial disturbance, which I fear might result if we open our mints to the world's silver product, as proposed by the Senate bill.

Gentlemen have said to-day that if we take this step other nations will follow. That can not be conclusively claimed, I think. Gentlemen will remember that other nations have declined to negotiate with us with a view to following where we desired to lead. We know that England and Germany and the great nations abroad have not been willing to accede to our views on this question. They have not acceded to the wishes of this great Government, but have declined to open their mints. Now, the question is, will they open their mints simply because we open ours? I say no; for, while we are one of the great nations of the world, the greatest nation in the world, yet we can not reasonably expect, it seems to me, that immediately upon declaring our mints open and free these nations will at once or soon follow in our wake. Their financial policies are too firmly established and their influence in the world too well understood by them. What is the result if they do not? Clearly, as admitted by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TOWNSEND] to-day, the moment we open our mints to free and unlimited coinage of the world's product of silver on comes or over comes the bullion of the other countries to our mints.

Gentlemen say there is no danger; that it will make no difference whatever; that there is not enough to affect us in that way. I do not know how much there may be, and no one here seems to have accurate data on the point; but this is a pretty large world, Mr. Speaker, and there must be a large amount of silver bullion afloat in it, and I think the danger would be that we would find an exceedingly large quantity of silver coming from abroad to the mints of this country the moment we declare for unrestricted coinage.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STRUBLE. Certainly.

Mr. KELLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that three-fourths of the nations of the world, counting the population of the world, are to-day using silver as their unit of value instead of gold.

Mr. STRUBLE. I think there is something in that, Mr. Speaker, although I am not able to give the gentleman the exact facts; but, of the most influential nations of this age, England does not use it, Germany does not use it, France does not use it—i. e., does not have free coinage—and the gentleman knows very well that it is the voice and influence of these great nations in finance, as well as in general commerce, that leads the thought and shapes the policies of the world.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him another question?

Mr. STRUBLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. KELLEY. I will ask him if it is not a fact that the greatest nation of the world so far as population and wealth are concerned (I refer to the nation of China), which has eight times the population of this country, does not to-day use silver as the unit of value instead of gold.

Mr. STRUBLE. I understand it does.

Mr. CUTCHEON. And we have more transactions in one day than they have in one year.

Mr. STRUBLE. And, as suggested by the gentleman from Michigan, we have more transactions in one day in finance and commerce than that slow-going country has in many days. Your very point shows that one nation, especially whose influence is not greater than that of China, can not settle this question with reference to the appreciation of silver. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, we want in this country, our people in the West and all over the country, want the best money, the soundest money that is to be had, money that has in it the greatest purchasing power that is possible to be gotten.

Mr. McCLAMMY. And do they not want more?

Mr. STRUBLE. Certainly, and I am contending for that; but, Mr. Speaker, I maintain that an increase of sixty millions per year is getting more money very rapidly. I believe my constituents in the West, who are agriculturists largely, want the best money that is possible for any nation in the world to produce, and they want as much freedom from financial panics as possible. They want, if possible, to avoid the extreme contraction of the currency or the undue and unjustifiable expansion of it. What we desire, and what I think our constituents desire, is to have that safe, sure, and substantial condition of finance which can be obtained only by wise, careful, and conservative legislation upon such a great question as this. Let us make progress, but let us make it carefully and conservatively. Let us consider all the bearings of this great question upon all the interests involved, in so far as we are capable. If we do that, my judgment is, Mr. Speaker, that, while we certainly should and will move in the direction of the unlimited coinage of silver, we will do so in a way that will make it impossible for financial crises to come upon the country, because of this policy, and drive us back to the gold standard, from which we may not recover for many years to come. [Applause.]

[Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama, withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. CONGER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

ANN BRYAN.

The SPEAKER. Pending that, the Chair will lay before the House the following message from the President.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

In compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 23d inst. (the Senate concurring), I return herewith the bill (H. R. 5702) granting a pension to Ann Bryan.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 24, 1890.

The SPEAKER. The bill will lie on the table for further consideration.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. WALKER, of Massachusetts, for two weeks.

To Mr. RUSK, for this day.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House the petition of Capt. E. D. Pierce for compensation, which was introduced into the Fiftieth Congress on January 10, 1888, by his predecessor, and referred to the Committee on Claims, as shown by RECORD, first session, Fiftieth Congress, page 385, and on which claim no action was ever taken.

The motion of Mr. CONGER was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A bill (S. 4047) supplemental to the act of Congress passed in March, 1887, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes,' approved March 22, 1882"—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 3714) to apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to the more complete endowment and support of the colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts established under the provisions of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862—to the Committee on Education.

RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, the following resolution was introduced and referred as follows:

By Mr. CONGER:

Resolved, That to-day, immediately after the reading of the Journal, the House proceed to the consideration of H. R. 6381, with Senate amendments thereto, and that a vote on the question of concurrence with said amendments be taken at 2 o'clock to-morrow, the 25th;

to the Committee on Rules.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk and disposed of as follows:

Mr. CUTCHEON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the bill of the Senate (S. 3716) to provide for the examination of certain officers of the Army and to regulate promotions therein, accompanied by a report (No. 2530)—to the House Calendar.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported favorably the bill of the House (H. R. 6084) for the relief of Thomas Nelson, accompanied by a report (No. 2531)—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported with amendment the following bills of the House; which were severally referred to the Committee of the Whole House:

A bill (H. R. 8557) granting a pension to John McGregor. (Report No. 2532.)

A bill (H. R. 8561) granting a pension to Martha Torrence. (Report No. 2533.)

Mr. BELKNAP, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported favorably the bill of the House (H. R. 11064) granting a pension to Amanda E. Parks, accompanied by a report (No. 2534)—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. LANE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported with amendment the bill of the House (H. R. 10817) granting a pension to Elmira Brooks, widow of Odney D. Brooks, late assistant surgeon Twenty-sixth Michigan Volunteers, accompanied by a report (No. 2535)—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. DE LANO, from the Committee on Pensions, reported favorably the bill of the Senate (S. 3325) for the relief of Margaret F. Smith, accompanied by a report (No. 2536)—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. HILL, from the Committee on Pensions, reported favorably the bill of the Senate (S. 1237) granting a pension to Mary E. Crimmins, widow of Patrick Crimmins, accompanied by a report (No. 2537)—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported favorably the bill of the Senate (S. 3194) granting a pension to Joseph H. Scoopmire, accompanied by a report (No. 2538)—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. REED, of Iowa, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported adversely the bill of the House (H. R. 10972) imposing punishment for counterfeiting, etc., trade-marks, labels, etc., accompanied by a report (No. 2539); which (by request) was referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DOLLIVER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the bill of the House (H. R. 9212) to relieve John J. Murphy from the charge of desertion, accompanied by a report (No. 2540)—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. VAN SCHAIK, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported favorably the bill of the Senate (S. 3796) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Racine, in the State of Wisconsin, accompanied by a report (No. 2541)—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BROWER, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department, reported favorably the bill of the House (H. R. 803) to pay employes of the Post-Office Department additional compensation for extra hours of duty required of them in the year 1885, accompanied by a report (No. 2542)—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported with amendment the bill of the House (H. R. 11094) to authorize the Secretary of War to appoint a board of review in certain cases, accompanied by a report (No. 2549)—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, adverse reports were delivered to the Clerk and laid on the table, as follows:

By Mr. SNIDER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, on a bill (H. R. 7266) to remove the charge of desertion from the service record of Robert Withington. (Report No. 2543.)

Also, on a bill (H. R. 8616) for the relief of Eli Small, late assistant surgeon, One hundred and fifty-second New York Volunteers. (Report No. 2544.)

By Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio, from the Committee on Military Affairs, on a bill (H. R. 2997) to remove the charge of desertion against Edward Whitehouse, alias Edward Williams. (Report No. 2545.)

Also, on a bill (H. R. 3013) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of John Cartner. (Report No. 2546.)

Also, on a bill (H. R. 3019) to remove the charge of desertion against Frank Woolever. (Report No. 2547.)

By Mr. STOCKBRIDGE, from the Committee on Commerce, on a bill (H. R. 6779) to amend section 4443 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in relation to the license of masters, mates, and pilots of steam vessels. (Report No. 2548.)

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the following changes of reference were made:

A bill (H. R. 7187) for the relief of Eli Conner—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to Committee on Claims.

A bill (H. R. 8484) granting a pension to Jared D. Wheelock—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to Committee on Invalid Pensions.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills and a joint resolution of the following titles were introduced, severally read twice, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CONNELL (by request): A bill (H. R. 11119) for an act to provide pensions for freedmen—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GEST: A bill (H. R. 11120) providing for the adjustment of accounts of laborers, workmen, and mechanics arising under the eight-hour law—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. BANKS: A joint resolution (H. Res. 181) for printing the history of colored troops in war—to the Committee on Printing.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas: A bill (H. R. 11121) granting a pension to Martha A. Kendrick—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CALDWELL: A bill (H. R. 11122) granting a pension to Sarah Anderson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 11123) granting a pension to Eleanor Grafton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11124) granting a pension to John K. Hummer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. QUINN: A bill (H. R. 11125) granting a pension to Margaret Cooney, formerly Margaret Dolan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STEWART, of Georgia: A bill (H. R. 11126) granting a pension to John P. Champion—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11127) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth Parks Pegg—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11128) granting a pension to William R. Smith—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11129) granting a pension to John F. Whaley—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STIVERS: A bill (H. R. 11130) granting a pension to Henry T. Bell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11131) granting a pension to Augustus T. Hulso—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11132) granting a pension to William McDowell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11133) granting a pension to John Ostrander—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas: Petition of J. L. McKenna and 18 others, citizens of Grant County, Arkansas, for deep-water harbor at Galveston, Tex.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. BUNN: Petition of Austin Jones for the estate of Martha A. Jones, late of Wake County, North Carolina, that her war claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CRISP: Petition of J. M. Woodward, H. M. Allen, and others, citizens of Dodge County, Georgia, asking the passage of the bill for deep-water harbor at Galveston, Tex.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. CUTCHEON: Resolution of the fish commission of the State of Michigan, against the transfer of the United States Fish Commission to the Agricultural Department—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. ENLOE: Petition of Sidney Bancom, of Carroll County, Tennessee, for reference of claim to Court of Claims under the provisions of the Bowman act—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. EVANS: Petition of J. C. and G. R. Wade, administrators, for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of John Anderson, for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. FITCH: Petition of Susan N. Mulford, widow of Joseph L. Mulford, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FLOWER: Resolution of clothiers' meeting, Samuel Fleischman, secretary, in favor of Torrey bankrupt law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HANSBROUGH: Resolutions passed by the North Dakota Baptist Association, for the overthrow of the liquor traffic—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, resolutions of the Clifton (N. Dak.) Alliance, in favor of the passage of the Butterworth option bill—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of citizens of Pierce County, North Dakota, favoring the passage of House bill 5978—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, resolutions of the same Alliance, in favor of the passage of the Conger lard bill—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of J. S. Ferguson and 6 others, citizens of Bottineau County, North Dakota, asking Congress for appropriation of money for a complete system of levees on the Mississippi River from Cairo to the Gulf, to prevent disastrous floods and improve navigation—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa: A paper from 61 railroad employes, of Perth Amboy, N. J., petitioning for the passage of House bill 9682—to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. KELLEY: Petitions of 238 citizens of Topeka, Kans., asking Congress to pass the Wilson bill or some other law granting States the right to exclude the sale of liquors imported from other States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KENNEDY: Petition of Hon. William Lawrence and members of the bar of Logan County, Ohio, asking the transfer of Logan County from northern to southern district of Ohio—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of Messrs. Heffren & Co., asking for modification of interstate-commerce law affecting shippers of grain—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. LEE (by request): Petition of D. H. Plaster and 16 others, of Loudoun County, Virginia, asking passage of silver bill—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Also (by request), petition by citizens of Louisa County, Virginia, for deep harbor at Galveston, Tex.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. LESTER, of Georgia: Petition of A. A. Louier and 35 others, of Bullock County, Georgia, asking passage of House bill 7162—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of W. M. Henderson and 17 others, of Scriven County, Georgia, in reference to Galveston Harbor—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of T. G. James and 14 others, citizens of Ward County, Georgia, for the same purpose—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. LEWIS: Petition of A. D. McClellan and 20 others, of Montgomery County, Mississippi, asking passage of House bill 7162—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MANSUR: Petition of 90 members of Sumner Union, No. 844, Charlton County, Missouri, asking Congress for a complete system of levees on the Mississippi River from Cairo to the Gulf, to prevent disastrous floods and improve navigation—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of M. C. Nixon, M.D., J. H. Jones, and 26 others, citizens of Oregon County, Missouri, for same purpose—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of Thomas F. Horn, Rudolph Wissner, and 38 others, citizens of Wayne County, Missouri, for same purpose—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. MOORE, of New Hampshire (by request): Petition in favor of Leretta W. Spaulding, for pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOREY: Petition of H. P. Demher and 34 others, citizens of Butler County, Ohio, for the passage of the Turner bill—to the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

Also, petition of citizens of Xenia, Ohio, for eight hours' work in post-offices—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. O'FERRALL: Petition of trustees of Braddock Street Methodist Episcopal Church South, of Winchester, Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PHELAN: Petition of James A. Cole, administrator of Wesley Cole, Shelby County, Tennessee, for reference of claim for commissary subsistence supplies to Court of Claims under the provisions of the Bowman act—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. QUACKENBUSH: Petition of Henry A. Johnston and 100 others, bankers of the Eighteenth Congressional district of New York, asking for the passage of laws relating to the perpetuation of the national-banking system—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. STAHLNECKER (by request): Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Dobbs Ferry, N. Y., in favor of House bill 5987—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, memorial of the New York Produce Exchange, favoring certain restrictions relating to Harlem River improvement—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. STEWART, of Georgia: Petition of citizens of Georgia, in favor of House bill 2716—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of other citizens of the same State, for the same measure—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of Union Farmers' Alliance, No. 324, 30 members, of Pike County, Georgia, asking Congress for appropriation of money for a complete system of levees on the Mississippi River from Cairo to the Gulf, to prevent disastrous floods and improve navigation—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of W. L. Cox, J. E. Cooper, and 20 others, citizens of Fayette County, Georgia, for the same purpose—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of J. W. Chalser, George W. Poor, and 33 others, citizens of Cobb County, Georgia, for the same purpose—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. VANDEVER: Petition from citizens of Santa Paula, Cal., for perpetuation of the national-banking system—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. WHITING: Petition of D. E. Sellars and 56 others, residents of Huron and Sanilac Counties, Michigan, asking for the passage of a law authorizing Government loans of money upon farm securities at a rate of interest not exceeding 2½ per cent. per annum—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 25, 1890.

Prayer by Rev. CHARLES B. RAMSDALL, of the city of Washington. The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN presented the memorial of Henry F. Colby and 14 others, citizens of Ohio, remonstrating against the appropriation of public money for sectarian purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the Methodist Episcopal Church of North Bloomfield, Ohio, praying for the enactment of a law relative to the sale of obscene literature, similar to the Ohio statute on that subject; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. VEST presented a memorial of Local Assembly No. 448, Knights of Labor, of St. Louis, Mo., remonstrating against the ownership of lands in the United States by aliens; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CASEY. I present resolutions adopted by the Farmers' Alliance of North Dakota, at meetings held June 4 and 5, 1890, favoring the enactment by Congress of the Conger lard bill, the Butterworth option bill, a bill providing for the free coinage of silver, and especially a bill to restrict as far as possible the operations of lottery companies. I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BATE presented a petition of the Colored Farmers' National Alliance of America, praying that an appropriation of money be made to provide a perfect system of levees on the Mississippi River from Cairo to the Gulf, to prevent disastrous floods and improve navigation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PADDOCK presented a memorial of the Flax Dressers' Association of the United States, remonstrating against the reduction of the dressed-flax tariff rate provided for in the McKinley tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DAVIS presented a petition of citizens of Minneapolis, Minn., praying for the passage of a bill to limit the hours of work of clerks and employes in first and second class post-offices; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. BLACKBURN presented additional papers to accompany the bill to correct the military record of Alfred V. Townes; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments: A bill (S. 4011) to authorize the Canaveral and South Florida Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Indian River and one across the Bannas River, both in the State of Florida, and to establish the same in each case as a post-road;

A bill (H. R. 9523) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near Gunterville, Ala., and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 10907) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Cairo and Tennessee River Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers," approved January 8, 1889.

Mr. BATE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3557) for the relief of Thomas B. Dicken, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2474) for the relief of Charles N. Felton, formerly assistant treasurer of the United States at San Francisco, Cal., reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CULLOM. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1642) to prevent the transportation of merchandise in bond through the ports and territory of the United States into the Republic of Mexico, and to restore that privilege whenever the Zona Libre along the boundary between the two countries shall be abolished, to report it adversely. I ask that the bill be placed upon the Calendar at the suggestion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], so that he may be heard upon it hereafter, if he desires.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. REAGAN. I shall at some early occasion, as I can get an opportunity after the conclusion of the morning business, ask for a few minutes to express some views upon the subject of the bill.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4064) for the relief of William J. Martin, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, submitted a report to accompany the bill (S. 4156) for the protection of trees and other growth on the public domain from destruction by fire heretofore reported by him.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2409) for the removal of the charge of desertion from the record of Daniel Mahoney, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

GOVERNMENT PIER AT CHICAGO.

Mr. FRYE. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report back with amendments the joint resolution (H. Res. 104) to permit the Secretary of War to grant a revocable license to use a pier, as petitioned by vessel-owners of Chicago, Ill. There are reasons why I should like to have the amendments considered and final action on the resolution had now.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope leave will be granted, as it is important that action should be taken at once.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The Committee on Commerce reported an amendment, to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to grant by revocable license the use of the United States pier at Chicago, Ill., situated north and east of the Illinois Central Railroad Company's wharf No. 1, and on south side of Chicago River, to Walker, Whitehead & Co., of Chicago, Ill., subject to the following conditions:

First, Said Walker, Whitehead & Co. shall keep in thorough repair that part of the pier, 225 feet in length, projecting beyond the end of the Illinois Central Railroad car docks, so called.

Second, That the said Walker, Whitehead & Co., at their own expense, shall rebuild and keep in repair the superstructure of the said 1,000 feet of pier during the continuance of the license.

Third, That the United States Government shall have free use of any necessary part thereof for storage upon giving the said Walker, Whitehead & Co. sufficient notice to clear such part of said pier for such uses by the United States.

Fourth, That the said Walker, Whitehead & Co. shall keep that part of the entrance to the Chicago River within 50 feet of the pier dredged, and shall prevent the dumping of ashes or refuse from vessels landing at the pier into the entrance to Chicago Harbor.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish some one would state why the control of that pier should be taken from the city of Chicago and put into the hands of the Secretary of War.

Mr. FRYE. The city of Chicago has nothing to do with it. It is a Government pier.

Mr. CULLOM. It is a Government pier entirely.

Mr. FRYE. It is a Government pier and can not be used by others without leave. It is absolutely necessary that it shall be used, and the party keeps it in repair, and all that, and is entitled to the license of the Secretary of War.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not understand how it is, it being a Government pier.

Mr. FRYE. It is one of the original jetties built by the Government for the improvement of the harbor, and it has gradually filled up until it becomes practically a filled-up pier, so that it can be driven right on to and used just the same as any other wharf or pier; but it lies right between the wharves and piers used by other parties, private parties at Chicago, and this pier can not be used at all.

Mr. REAGAN. It may be that that is a way out of this, but it is a new departure about piers.

Mr. FRYE. Oh, no; it has been done in quite a number of instances. I went to see General Casey in relation to it, and General Casey said it ought to be done.

Mr. CULLOM. There is no question about the propriety of it. There is no giving away by the Government of any of its rights.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE. The committee report to strike out the preamble. I move that the preamble be stricken out.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. CULLOM, Mr. DOLPH, and Mr. RANSOM were appointed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 4157) to provide for fixing a uniform standard of classification and grading of wheat, corn, oats, barley, and rye, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SAWYER introduced a bill (S. 4158) for a public building at Sheboygan, Wis.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4159) amendatory of and supplemental to sections 3952 and 3953 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and of the act of Congress approved June 23, 1874, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. SPOONER introduced a bill (S. 4160) granting a pension to George Randall; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 4162) requiring the United States to defend the title of homesteaders under the laws of the United States in all suits where the land is claimed to be mineral because of phosphate deposits; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 105) to provide for the settlement of a claim against the Antietam National Cemetery; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CULLOM submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Fisheries, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. GEORGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON IRRIGATION.

Mr. STEWART submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 15,000 extra copies of the report of the Select Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, with the views of the minority and the testimony, to be bound in cloth in two volumes, 10,000 copies for the House of Representatives and 5,000 copies for the Senate.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. INGALLS, it was Ordered, That Mrs. L. L. Wallen have leave to withdraw her papers from the files of the Senate.

ADMISSION OF WYOMING.

Mr. PLATT. Is the morning business concluded?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? If not, that order is closed.

Mr. PLATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 894) to provide for the admission of the State of Wyoming into the Union, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SPRINGFIELD, MO.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from Connecticut permit me to call up a little bill, which will take but a moment?

Mr. PLATT. If it does not lead to discussion, I do not object.

Mr. VEST. Not at all. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 516) to extend the limit for the erection of a public building at Springfield, Mo.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOTEL AT FORTRESS MONROE.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. PLATT. For what purpose?

Mr. CAMERON. To pass a bill.

Mr. PLATT. Will the bill take any time?

Mr. CAMERON. It ought not to take a minute.

Mr. PLATT. Reserving my right to object if it leads to debate, I yield for the present.

Mr. CAMERON. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 887) authorizing the erection of a hotel upon the Government reservation at Fortress Monroe.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. CAMERON May 15, 1890:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 887) authorizing the erection of a hotel upon the Government reservation at Fortress Monroe, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to submit the following report:

The facts in this case are briefly summed up in the House report:

"Fortress Monroe is a very important military post and the Secretary of War reports that 'It is unfortunate that so many licenses have been given. The site proposed is for a small hotel particularly for the use of the colored people. The building is situated at the extreme point on the land side towards Hampton, and is far less objectionable than any of the other sites that have been given.'"

"As the hotels for white people are now in operation your committee is of the opinion that no discrimination should be made, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill."

"Your committee likewise report the bill favorably and recommend its passage."

NORFOLK, VA., April 14, 1890.

DEAR SIR: There has lately passed the House, and is now before the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate for its consideration, a bill authorizing the Secretary of War to grant me the privilege of erecting a hotel on the Government reservation at Fortress Monroe.

This hotel is especially designed for the accommodation of colored people, and while I am advised that the military authorities usually are strongly opposed to such grants, yet in this case they have concluded that this hotel is necessary, and that its proposed location is the least objectionable that could have been suggested, being remote from the white hotels, in rear of the fort, and in no way an obstruction from a military point of view.

The location of many public institutions in which the colored people are specially interested, and the absence of any place to accommodate them, renders a hotel there for their use a public necessity.

As to my general character, standing, and fitness to conduct the enterprise I confidently refer to my Representative in Congress, Hon. GEORGE E. BOWDER. The object of this communication is to enlist your interest in the matter to the end of securing a speedy and favorable action in the committee.

Very respectfully,

J. C. ASBURY.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISLAND OF CUBA.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] yesterday gave notice that he desired the usual courtesy to be extended to him to be allowed to make some remarks this morning upon a resolution which he has heretofore introduced. While I can not yield to any further business, I think I ought to yield, under the custom and practice of the Senate, to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CALL. I ask that the joint resolution on the Calendar authorizing the President to open negotiations with Spain be taken up for consideration and read by the Secretary.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from Florida will ask, I presume, to have the bill for the admission of Wyoming laid aside informally, so that the resolution to which he refers may be taken up.

Mr. CALL. I thought that had been done. I ask unanimous consent that the bill in charge of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] may be laid aside informally, in order that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution I have named.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered in the absence of objection; and the joint resolution (S. R. 20) authorizing the President to open negotiations with Spain will be considered as being before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CALL. I ask that the joint resolution be read at length.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and requested to open negotiations with the Government of Spain for the purpose of inducing that Government to consent to the establishment in the Island of Cuba of a free and independent republic; such consent to be given upon the payment by Cuba to the Government of Spain of such a sum of money as may be equivalent both to the value of the public property belonging to Spain in the said island and to the relinquishment of her sovereign rights, and also the securing by treaty of such commercial advantages as may be stipulated.

Mr. CALL. There is another resolution which I introduced early in the session and which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, which I ask may be also read.

The Chief Clerk read the following resolution, submitted by Mr. CALL and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, January 6, 1890:

Whereas there is reason to believe that the debt of the Island of Cuba, such as consolidated by the decree of Her Majesty the Queen Regent of Spain, dated May 10, 1886, amounting to $124,000,000, bearing an interest of 6 per cent. per annum and payable within the maximum time of fifty years, is now wholly and exclusively, by the action of the Government of Spain, in the hands of German bankers and subject to the control more or less actual and direct of the Government of the German Empire;

Whereas under a subsequent decree of the same sovereign, or acting sovereign, of Spain, dated November 19, 1886, the said debt was converted into a new one bearing a lesser interest, but for a larger amount and subject to the same conditions and guaranties as the former one;

Whereas under Article II of the same decree of May 10, 1886, the payment of the aforesaid debt, and of the bonds which represent it, and are called in the Spanish language "billetes hipotecarios," or "mortgage bonds," is secured by "special mortgage of the customs revenues of the Island of Cuba, and also of the stamp revenue of the same island, and of all the taxes, whether direct or indirect, already levied or hereafter to be levied, on real or personal property in the same island," to all of which the guaranty of the Government of Spain shall be added;

Whereas under the ordinary course of events and the financial condition which exists both in Cuba and in Spain, it is more than probable that neither Cuba nor Spain will be able to meet at the proper time their obligations in this respect and pay either the principal or the interest when they become due;

Whereas under these circumstances, and for all practical purposes, the political as well as the financial control of the Island of Cuba has been transferred, by the action of Spain, to the Government of the German Empire;

Whereas the immediate consequence of such a state of affairs is an alliance between Spain and Germany, not less binding and powerful because of its being unwritten, whereby the German Government becomes interested in assisting Spain to perpetuate her sovereignty in the Island of Cuba; thus interfering with the historical laws and principles which must rule in the American hemisphere;

Whereas it has been often declared by the Government of the United States that it is obvious there would be danger for the United States if a great naval power were to possess the key of the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean Sea, and that the United States could not with safety to herself permit any foreign power to interfere to sustain Spanish rule in the Island of Cuba, or to have such relations with Spain as would give such power the right and opportunity to interfere in our affairs, and also generally in the affairs of the North American continent;

Whereas it has been the declared policy of the United States, whatever political party has happened to be in power, as was forcibly expressed by John Quincy Adams as far back as in 1823, that no countenance or approval, whether direct or indirect, expressed or implied, can be given by the Government of the United States, under any circumstances, to pledges of the Spanish Government to be redeemed thereafter, for which the Island of Cuba may be both the only indemnity which Spain can give and the most satisfactory which any European power can receive; and

Whereas the condition of things above described is not only contrary to the traditional policy of the United States and to its most cherished tenets, but constitutes a menace to the best interests of the United States, as well as to the interests of the whole sisterhood of American Republics; while on the other hand it increases considerably the burden to be borne by the inhabitants of the Island of Cuba, among whom there is a large number of American citizens;

Be it resolved by the Senate, That, in the sense of the Senate, everything done, or attempted, in the Island of Cuba tending in any way whatever to transfer the financial and political control of that island to any European power is contrary to the policy and the best interests of the United States, and must be discountenanced and protested against.

And be it further resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish to the Senate such information as may be found in the possession of the State Department in regard to this matter, so as to enable the Senate, in its executive capacity or otherwise, to take such action as may be deemed proper under the circumstances.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President—

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the doors be closed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I second the motion.

Mr. CALL. I desire to submit some remarks upon the joint resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS and Mr. INGALLS. Debate is not in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Debate is not in order. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] moves that the doors be closed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And I second the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senators in the affirmative—

Mr. EDMUNDS. When such a motion is made the doors are to be closed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont is correct.
 Mr. CALL. I withdraw the resolution.
 Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator can not withdraw the resolution.
 Mr. CALL. I have withdrawn the resolution, Mr. President.
 Mr. SPOONER. How can the Senator withdraw the resolution?
 Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the order of the Senate be executed.
 The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Sergeant-at-Arms will close the doors and clear the galleries.
 The doors were thereupon closed and at the expiration of fifty-five minutes were reopened.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 24th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 3052) for the relief of the Michigan Military Academy; and

An act (S. 3871) granting a pension to Kate Woodbridge Michaelis. The message also announced that the President had this day approved and signed the act (S. 3571) to provide an American register for the barge Ottawa, of Philadelphia, Pa.

ADMISSION OF WYOMING.

Mr. PLATT. I ask the Chair to state what is the order now before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 894) to provide for the admission of the State of Wyoming into the Union, and for other purposes.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. PLATT. Since this bill was reported to the Senate on the 20th of January last, a bill upon the same subject has been passed by the House of Representatives—House bill 982—and that bill now lies on the table of the Senate. It is almost identical with this bill. The only differences are verbal and unimportant. I therefore ask that the House bill may be substituted for the Senate bill, and that the Senate act upon the House bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Connecticut to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill? The title of the House bill will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 982) to provide for the admission of the State of Wyoming into the Union, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the House bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PLATT. Let the House bill be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The House bill will be read.

REVISION OF REMARKS.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask the Senator from Connecticut to yield to me for a moment that I may offer a resolution, which I ask may be read. The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be directed to inquire into the publication of the personal explanation of Hon. WILKINSON CALL in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of this date, and report whether the same is in accordance with the rules, regulations, and practice of the Senate; and that the said explanation be withheld from the permanent edition of the RECORD until the further order of the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask that the resolution may be now adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas asks for the present consideration of the resolution which has been read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not think that resolution ought to be passed by this body. There is no possible ground or reason for it, and no possible excuse for it. I asked and obtained leave of the Senate to print the statements, the letters, the extracts from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, using those very words.

Mr. PLATT. I ask the Senator from Florida to yield while I make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. Is it in order at this time to object to the further consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CALL. I appeal to the Senator that the resolution shall not be allowed to go out without my statement.

Mr. PLATT. Of course, I have no business to take a Senator off his feet. I should like to object to its further consideration to-day, if he will consent. I know I have no right to interrupt his speech.

Mr. CALL. I desire that my statement shall go out with this resolution.

It is very disagreeable to me unquestionably to have such resolutions introduced here. I state again that I asked the leave of the Senate, stating at the time that I would not proceed further then, but print with my remarks the statements, the extracts from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and the letters which I thought necessary for my vindication from what I pronounced to be a most outrageous libel upon me in reference to my public duties here. That libel contained a statement from a public document of the Senate of the number of bills that I had introduced, giving their numbers and their titles, and the number that had become laws. That statement assailed me in my personal demeanor here in this body. It characterized me in my public career here in a great many respects in the most disrespectful and slanderous manner. I obtained the leave of the Senate to vindicate myself, as it was a part not only of my privilege but of the character of this body that a member of it should vindicate himself from such false charges. It was accorded to me by the Senate, the Senator from Kansas sitting in the chair.

Mr. GORMAN. It was the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] who was in the chair.

Mr. CALL. The Senator from Kansas was there first when I made the application. I think the occupancy of the chair was changed.

Mr. GORMAN. The RECORD shows it was the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. CALL. Very well; the RECORD shows that the Senator from Tennessee was Presiding Officer.

Mr. President, having done that, at my leisure I prepared that statement, and when it was prepared I submitted it to a member of the Committee on Printing upon whose judgment and knowledge of the rules and practice of the Senate I had a right to rely. He informed me that there was no impropriety whatever, that it was within the leave granted to me by the Senate. Having obtained that, and being further informed that it was necessary for it to go in the RECORD, I directed that it should be printed; and that is the whole statement of the case.

Now, where is the abuse of the privilege of the Senate? I not only understood the leave to be full, but the member of the Committee on Printing whom I consulted understood it to be so. Is it not contained in the words "leave to print the statements?" What statements? The statements that I should make and others should make. The "extracts from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD." What extracts? Any extracts that I thought necessary for my vindication. "Letters." What letters? The letters that I thought necessary for my vindication from the foul libels and statements of that pamphlet.

Whom did it injure that I should do that? Who would have a right to complain that I, a Senator here, should be permitted to defend myself by the records of the Senate and the statements of respectable and reputable people against infamous charges that had been made against me and circulated, sent to every Senator here and to the members of the other House, and all over the United States, and relating, many of them, to matters which are contained in the public records of the Senate?

I understand that grave complaint is made against me because I have alluded to a table taken from a public document here in defending myself and in defending other Senators against the charge that they could be assailed in their records by an exhibition of the number of bills introduced by them and the number which had been passed, showing the absurdity of that charge, and that the most distinguished members of this body who had served here for years had not sought to make any record by the number of bills they had introduced which had become laws, but showing that the course of legislation was such that bills introduced by Senators often became laws in other bills, and were by the committees to whom they had been referred compounded and made a joint report, and other bills had become laws containing them. I alluded to the case of the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] who was the author of the legislation upon the subject of interstate commerce, which finally became a law, and yet none of the bills which that Senator had introduced for years and advocated ever became a law, and when the principles which he had advocated in those bills finally became a law it was done upon a bill introduced by another.

Now, what impeachment is that to any Senator, and where is even the pretense of an abuse of the privileges of the Senate by my doing exactly that which the Senate gave leave to do, after having consulted the Committee on Printing upon the subject and taken their advice?

If I had dreamed, Mr. President, that there was anything in this vindication of myself which was in any way whatever disagreeable to any other Senator, I should not have allowed it to be inserted, but I can not conceive why a Senator should take any kind of exception at the presentation of a public record of this body here, which is a true record, or whether true or not, is taken from the public records, and which simply exhibits the number of bills that he has introduced and those which have become laws.

I therefore say, Mr. President, that there is, I think, no reason whatever for this inquiry, and I request the member of the Committee on Printing to whom I have referred to state the facts for my vindication here.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The Senator from Kansas will proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Florida has not only, in my judgment, grossly violated and abused the privileges of the Senate, but he has deliberately falsified the record of what occurred on the day when the transaction took place. In the RECORD of the 3d day of June of the proceedings of the 2d, the Senator from Florida, as it appears from the print before me, concluded his observations as follows:

With this remark, Mr. President, I will insert in the RECORD the statements and the extracts which will be sufficient for my own vindication in an appendix to these remarks, which I shall have carefully prepared.

In the publication that appears this morning, June 25, which purports to be a transcript of what occurred on the 2d day of June, the Senator from Florida has falsified the record by omitting the words "in an appendix to these remarks."

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I call the Senator from Kansas to order.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senator—

Mr. BUTLER. One moment.

Mr. INGALLS. I will withdraw the observation.

Mr. BUTLER. I rise to a point of order, and ask if it is parliamentary for one Senator to get up and denounce another upon this floor as having been guilty of infamous crime?

Mr. INGALLS. I withdraw the observation, and say that the Senator from Florida changed the record.

Mr. BUTLER. Well.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President—

Mr. INGALLS. So far as that is a modification, I cheerfully make it. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas will come to order, and not proceed until there is a motion to allow the Senator to proceed in order.

Mr. CALL. I move that the Senator be allowed to proceed, and I ask leave to make a single remark.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved by the Senator from Florida that the Senator from Kansas be allowed to proceed in order. [Putting the question.] The motion is agreed to, and the Senator from Kansas will proceed.

Mr. CALL. I hope he may be allowed—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. INGALLS. Certainly.

Mr. CALL. I beg that the Senator from Kansas may be allowed to proceed without interruption, and not in order, to say whatever he may desire to say upon this subject, and I will make my reply.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Florida is not entirely the judge of that matter, if he will allow me to say so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas will proceed in order.

Mr. BUTLER. I think it is due to the dignity of this body that such epithets and such charges as have escaped from the Senator from Kansas, which I am very glad he has withdrawn, should not be allowed to go upon the record without the attention of the Senate being called to them.

Mr. INGALLS. I withdraw the assertion that the Senator from Florida falsified the record and say that he changed the record without leave of the Senate by striking out in his report or transcript of his observations that appear this morning what seems to have occurred in the report of the 2d day of June. If that is a falsification of the record then the Senator from Florida, I suppose, if the facts were established, would be amenable to that charge.

I call attention to the fact that he obtained leave on the 2d day of June to insert certain portions of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and certain letters and statements as an appendix to the remarks that he delivered on that day, and that in the report which appears this morning that has been changed without the leave of the Senate, the words "in an appendix to these remarks" having been stricken out by the Senator from Florida without leave of the Senate, so as to make it appear that he had the leave to print this mass of material that he has inserted in the RECORD, that never was uttered, that he never obtained leave to insert, and that appears for the first time in the history of the Senate, in violation of its rules and orders, as the insertion of a speech that never was delivered. It is the first time it ever has occurred.

But I should not complain of that, Mr. President, if the Senator from Florida had not seen fit in his own attempted vindication to prepare what he calls a tabulated abstract of a public document which he has inserted here, in which he compares the relative services of members of this body with his own, and in many ways to their detriment. Upon the sixty-nine hundred and forty-first page of the RECORD this morning the Senator has inserted what he calls an abstract of bills and joint resolutions of the Fiftieth Congress, prepared for the purpose of vindicating himself at the expense of the records of the other members of this body. It is a table that I have no hesitation in saying is incorrect in many important particulars. So far as I have had the opportunity of examining the history of bills and joint resolutions in this body with regard to the record of one Senator who is reported here as having secured the passage of one bill introduced by him, eight have already been shown to have been passed.

The Senator from Florida has taken the trouble to make a history of my conduct during the Fiftieth Congress, showing that during that period I introduced forty-four bills, of which one pension bill became a law and two others, omitting all reference to the fact, to which I was entitled if I am to be held up before the country and my work measured in comparison with the work of the Senator from Florida, that during all that period, from the time when the clock struck at 12 on the first day of the session until the gavel fell announcing the final adjournment of Congress and a new President was inaugurated, I was the Presiding Officer of the body, not offering bills, having no connection whatever with legislative business except as the President of the body.

Mr. President, I insist, with all due reference to those who assert that this is a justifiable and allowable transaction, in the first place, that the Senator from Florida has not done what he obtained leave to do, that is, to insert extracts from the RECORD, letters, and other statements, in vindication of his own course as an appendix to the remarks he made on that day. I insist, further, that he has mutilated the record of what occurred on that day by striking out the privilege which he asked might be extended to him, allowing him to print those observations as an appendix. He struck it out apparently for the purpose of enabling him to appear to be in order in printing these matters in a speech that never was delivered here.

I insist, sir, it is a violation of privilege that deserves the attention of this body; and I submit, further, that the Senator from Florida is not alone in being asspersed, he is not alone in being assailed by personal enemies, and it is a very injurious and pernicious precedent if we are to establish the rule that a Senator can rise here and make a few disconnected and incoherent observations, ask leave to print in an appendix certain statements in defense of himself, and then make the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the conduit through which personal accusations are to be answered, and answered at the expense of the standing and the record and the history of his associates in this body.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Maryland will pardon me. Before the Senator from Kansas takes his seat I desire to call his attention to one statement he made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to state that this entire discussion is by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Kansas stated that during the winter, when he was Presiding Officer of the body, he had no connection with legislative business. That might be understood in reading the RECORD that that was the practice of the Presiding Officer. The Senator, of course, meant to say that he had no connection with the legislative business upon the floor when the passage of bills was being secured. The Senator during that winter performed, to my personal knowledge, a very large amount of labor in committees.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, the Senate will remember that some time prior to June 2, the Senator from Florida having been attacked in a public pamphlet that was distributed to every member of this body and put in general circulation—a violent and abusive personal attack—and feeling it incumbent upon him to answer it in some form, undertook to do so by the publication, as a document, of certain statements which he regarded as a complete answer and vindication of himself. I advised him, as his friend and brother Senator, not to pursue that course, nor do I share in the responsibility or agree that it is proper or wise for any Senator to refer here to attacks upon his public and private record, made by citizens outside and not in official position. That, however, is a matter of taste and of judgment to be determined by each Senator for himself. The Senator from Florida, therefore, determined to bring the matter to the attention of the Senate and get upon record all that he believed was necessary for his vindication.

In his speech on the 2d day of June, which will be found in the RECORD, not wishing, I take it, to weary the Senate with the details, probably not being entirely prepared with all the extracts that he desired to furnish, he stated to the Senate:

It is my purpose to ask of the Senate that I may be allowed to print as a part of these remarks for my own vindication such parts of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as are necessary and proper. In my judgment, to exhibit the falsehood of these charges, and the letters which I have here relating to them, and the statements which are proper for my vindication against the charges of this pamphlet. If there be no objection, I will ask to be allowed, without detaining the Senate, to print as a part of my remarks—

"As a part of my remarks"—

these several statements and the letters and the portions of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which relate to them.

That was broad enough to cover everything which he desired to place upon record in answer to the charges which had been made against him, and in vindication of himself. He then proceeded, as the Senator from Kansas has stated, to say:

With this remark, Mr. President, I will insert in the RECORD the statements and the extracts which will be sufficient for my own vindication in an appendix to these remarks.

And it is upon the latter statement that the Senator from Kansas, as I understand, dwells; but the fact is that the Senator from Florida did ask permission to incorporate the statements and extracts in his remarks and make them part of his remarks.

Mr. INGALLS. I dwell upon the further fact that he has stricken out of the report that appears to-day the words that appear in the RECORD of June 3, asking that the additional matter might be printed " in an appendix." He has stricken that out.

Mr. GORMAN. That is true, but it has no special bearing upon this question. Unquestionably the Senator from Florida obtained permission from the Senate to publish anything in connection with that matter that he saw proper. When the Senator from Florida came to me as he did, I having advised him not to pursue another course which he intended, reading this RECORD of the 3d day of June, I said: "You have unquestionably the right to incorporate in your remarks anything bearing upon this question and make any extract whatever that you may see proper from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS or other public documents, and as the Senate has given you permission to publish other statements outside of the RECORD, letters, and documents that you have, under that permission you are entirely within the rule of the Senate and the permission of the Senate."

I submit to the Senator from Kansas that while the Senator from Florida has changed the order of the statement and while he has omitted one or two statements that he made which are not at all necessary and have no significance whatever, it is a matter of procedure that is not uncommon and not unknown to us all; and in saying that I do not indorse such a practice, for I think it is very unfortunate that any Senator shall deem it his duty to lumber up the records with these matters of personal quarrel or in answer to charges that are made by irresponsible people. It was not necessary in the case of the Senator from Florida for his own vindication in the opinion of anybody who knows him and knows his public record.

Now, Mr. President, as to the table to which the Senator from Kansas has referred, the Senator from Florida, whether in good taste or not, has produced what he believes, as I have no doubt, an accurate transcript from a public document, which is published by order of this body at every session of the Senate, showing the history of every bill that is introduced by each Senator and how many have been acted upon favorably and how many have become laws. Whether that statement be accurate or not, does not matter so far as I am concerned, but there can not be any question of one thing, that in his remarks uttered on the floor of the Senate on the 2d day of June the Senator from Florida did present that identical table in part. The name and the record of the Senator from Kansas was not included in that list, nor was mine included in it; but the Senator from Florida did give a list of names and it will be found on page 5846 of the RECORD, in order to vindicate himself and show that the statement of the person who had made these charges against him was not correct—that he had not obtained legislation for his State—and going on to say that that statement demonstrated nothing; that Senators, and all Senators on this floor, had performed great services for their country without happening to have their bills become laws; that the ideas they presented, the suggestions they made, had been incorporated into public acts, when they did not by the record receive the credit for them; and in the statement he made here, which was not objected to by anybody, it was said that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] had introduced 33 bills and only 1 became a law; that Mr. CALL introduced 88 and 6 became laws, Mr. Chace, 17 and none became law; Mr. CHANDLER introduced 53 bills and 3 became laws; Mr. COCKRELL, 119 and 13 became laws, and then he gave the records of Messrs. COKE, and CULLOM, and DANIEL, and DAVIS, BLACKBURN, BROWN, and BERRY, and there he stopped.

Mr. INGALLS. That never was uttered on the floor of the Senate. That was written in his own handwriting in the Reporter's transcript after it had gone to the printer.

Mr. GORMAN. Of that I was not aware.

Mr. INGALLS. That is the fact, and I will produce the manuscript to show it in five minutes.

Mr. GORMAN. At all events it has been in the RECORD since the 3d day of June without the slightest objection on the part of any Senator whose name was used.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CALL. I will answer the statement of the Senator from Kansas in the conclusion of his remarks. I will say that the statement of the Senator from Kansas that these statements appear in my handwriting afterwards is in all respects, to use a mild term, incorrect. It is true that the table which I had, and which I took a few names from, and which I expressly asked leave to insert as a part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to be printed—it is true that that table was not inserted in full, and that I took a few names of personal friends that I had the right to take, instead of publishing the table in full, and did have that printed; but it is not true that that table was not here and ready to be read and placed before the Senate and that it was included in my intention, as I stated, holding it up to the Senate, to be printed in my remarks.

Mr. REAGAN. If the Senator will allow me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. GORMAN. I do.

Mr. REAGAN. The Senator from Florida used a portion of those names. I know he called over mine in stating what had been done by different Senators.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not remember whether my name was called or not; but inasmuch as it has been mentioned, I think, perhaps, I have a right to make the observation that so far from my having any feeling of resentment against the Senator from Florida for proving by the RECORD that I introduced thirty-three bills and passed but one, I think he has conferred upon me a decoration of honor, for, if there is any one thing with which this country is cursed more than another, it is the enormous number of bills which are introduced and passed. Therefore I thank him for bringing me out conspicuously as having introduced and passed very few bills through this body, and if others would follow my example the country would get along a great deal better, in my judgment.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator allow me a moment? I have sent to the Reporter's Office and I have here the notes extended of the debate that occurred on that occasion, and I hold in my hand three added sheets in the handwriting of the Senator from Florida in lead pencil, added after the report was extended, in which every name with the number of bills that were introduced and became laws, is in his own chirography, as follows:

Senator BUTLER, 33 bills; 1 became law;
Senator CALL, 88; 6 became law;
Chace, 17; none became law;
CHANDLER—

A personal friend of the Senator from Florida, I think he said in his remarks—

59; 3 became law;
COCKRELL, 119; 13 became law;
COKE, 34; 6 became law;
CULLOM, 134; 18 became law;
DANIEL, 69; 8 became law;
DAVIS, 97; 23 became law;
BLACKBURN, 41; 8 became law;
BROWN, 9; 1 became law;
BERRY, 31; 1 became law;

Every one in the handwriting of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, this is very small, very small; I will not use any other language. I stated here that I had this table and I asked leave of the Senate to print with my remarks any portions of it that I thought proper. I did add in my own chirography, as the Senator uses the term, a few of the names that I had time to do, in order that this paper might go before the country immediately, and inserted them. But what does that prove? It is too small to notice, Mr. President.

As to the Senator's reference to my statement about my "personal friend," I did not think for a moment of the Senator from New Hampshire, but I do not remember, as does the Senator from Kansas, a quarrel from one day to another. I am ready to fight it out at the moment with the Senator from Kansas or anybody else, but when that is done it is over. I do not carry my quarrels over.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, there is nothing unusual or strange or extraordinary in a Senator while delivering a speech here asking the privilege of publishing any statement he may hold in his hand and have it inserted, whether in his own handwriting or somebody else's. The fact is that all there is in this case, whether wisely or unwisely—and I think unwisely myself—the Senate gave the Senator from Florida permission to publish anything that he might find in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD or any other public document or any letters that he had in his possession bearing upon this subject.

That was the fault of the Senate. When he asked that permission it ought not to have been granted, in my judgment, but having been granted it does not lie in the mouth of the Senator from Kansas or of this body, in my judgment, to reprimand the Senator from Florida now. It is too late. The time has passed. The Senator from Kansas knows as well as I do the fact that speeches appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which are never delivered. That is not true of this body, but there is an immense mass of matter which is incorporated in the speeches of nearly every Senator who makes one, that we do not want to weary the Senate with, and we ask permission to have it printed. But yesterday the very RECORD in which the Senator's speech appears, he will find on examination that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] asked to insert in the RECORD a statement regarding the post-office appropriation bill, and so you find it with us all. A few days since I made a similar request, in discussing a matter, to insert a table without reading the entire table to the Senate. Permission was granted and I so incorporated it, as I had the right to do.

I have nothing to do with the matter of taste; I have nothing to do with the matter of judgment in bringing in these matters here and making them a part of the public record. I am unalterably opposed to it. I trust it will never be done again; but I assert that the Senator from Florida is entirely within the order, within the rules, within the permission granted by this body, and it is too late to bring this question up. Therefore I move that the resolution lie on the table.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Maryland to withdraw that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Maryland is to lay the resolution of the Senator from Kansas on the table.

Mr. MANDERSON. I hope that it will be withdrawn for a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the condition of this resolution is that it is subject to objection.

Mr. PLATT. I object, if I have that right.

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to make a statement. There were some things stated with regard to me by the Senator from Kansas which I think it is proper that I should make some allusion to.

Mr. PLATT. May I be permitted to make a suggestion? I know it is out of order, but I am coming to feel that at least I have some rights upon this floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is unanimous consent given to the request of the Senator from Connecticut? The Chair hears no objection, and he will proceed.

Mr. PLATT. I really feel that I ought not longer to give way the bill which was under consideration and which I have been trying to get considered for the last ten days for this discussion. There is no telling when this discussion will end, and I think I am justified in making and insisting upon my objection.

Mr. CALL. I appeal to the Senator from Connecticut. There have been terms used in regard to me which I should make some reply to.

Mr. PLATT. Well, I withhold the objection for the present.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there unanimous consent given by the Senate to the request of the Senator from Florida? The Chair hears none, and the Chair recognizes the Senator from Florida.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask unanimous consent before the Senator from Florida proceeds that I may be permitted to make a statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. CALL. I do.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, I had no consultation with my colleague on the Committee on Printing, the Senator from Maryland, in regard to this publication. All I know about it is this, and I give the facts for the information of the Senate: The Public Printer keeps in the Capitol an agent or messenger whose duty it is to take orders for such speeches as Senators or Representatives may desire to have published in pamphlet form, and to give an estimate of the cost, etc. Two or three days ago this messenger came to me with an amount of printed matter which he said had been sent to the Public Printing Office, part in print and part in manuscript, by the Senator from Florida, with the request that it be printed in pamphlet form, and the question was asked me whether that could be so printed under the rules of the Senate. I advised the messenger—and he reported it, as I understand, to the Public Printer—that that could not be done.

My attention was called to this, that may be construed as a leave to print to a certain extent, and I said that under that very liberal leave the printing would have to be done first in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; that if the matter contained in the pamphlet was not an extract from the RECORD it could not be printed at the Public Printing Office, and would not be frankable if it was printed; and after that occurrence, the matter appeared in the RECORD.

That is the simple statement which I desired to make in justification of the action of the Public Printer, and showing the action of the chairman, at least, of the Committee on Printing.

Now, I wish further simply to say that I have during the progress of this debate made such hurried examination as I could of the publication with which we are all familiar, known as the "History of Senate Bills and Joint Resolutions," and I feel quite satisfied that the Senator from Florida will, upon an examination of the table which he has printed, make very considerable alterations in it. I do not think it contains a correct statement of the facts, as to one Senator particularly, through whose record, if I may call it such, I have glanced, who is reported as having secured the passage of but one bill other than pension bills. I find that that Senator procured the passage through the Senate of twenty-eight bills in all. I have not been able to examine how many of those became laws by the concurrent action of the House of Representatives, but I am positive that this table is very inaccurate, and will be revised by the Senator from Florida on further examination.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, with reference to this table I wish to say that I did not prepare it; there may be some errors in it, but I will venture to say, as it was prepared by a very careful person, that it is substantially correct. The point of the whole matter, if there is any point in it, is as to the bills which became laws. The table of the history of bills shows that very few bills introduced by Senators became laws.

What is the need of such feeling upon the subject? The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] everybody knows to be a man of great experience and great ability. His record is there; and it will be seen that the number of bills which became laws at his hands is small, though he is chairman of a leading committee. And so it is of all the Senators. It was designed simply to show the fact, as to which there should be no kind of question or dispute, that a Senator's record here is not to be judged by the number of little bills presented by him that become laws.

That is the whole of it. The country knows it. Why should not a Senator be defended upon just and proper grounds on impeachment? How small the man, how bitter the malevolence, how mean the character that can find in such circumstances the willingness to accuse another Senator of falsifying the record!

Mr. President, I will not use such expressions. When I have occasion to say that of a Senator, I shall demand of him that he show the courage of a man and not the cowardice of a slanderer. I will ask him to act like a man and not like a coward—a poor coward—by the falsification of the record and the imputation of improper motives to others.

Mr. President, I had not the slightest idea that I was not defending the character of every Senator. I have sought peace and friendship with every associate I have here, and have accorded to them the highest respect. If I have said anything in discussion which impinged upon the feelings of any one, I have always been ready in advance to withdraw it. Had I for a moment supposed that in this table of the history of bills, which I aver to be substantially correct and which I will have revised by a more careful man, if one can be found, though I doubt it, I will have it revised and corrected in the smallest particular. Substantially it is correct. It may be compared, item by item, with the history of the bills. Its whole purpose was to show that a Senator made a record here by the principles that he advocated, by the ability of his speeches, by his constant attention to business, and by the impression he made upon the general public policy of the country. He is sent here to consider great public measures, to be a part in the formation of the public policy. The drawing of a bill is a small thing. It is designed to call the attention of Congress to the consideration of the subject.

Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas should be far above doing what he has done. The distance between the heights to which his intellect should carry him and the moral degradation of making an imputation upon a person should be the difference between heaven and earth. He should feel humiliated to have made this attack here. It is unbecoming to him and to the ability that he possesses. Why, Mr. President, it is small; it is mean. There is no language which can characterize a willingness to inflict upon another person the imputation of falsehood. I deny it. I affirm that I intended and believe that I have conformed literally to the letter of the leave given to me by the Senate.

I differ in opinion from my distinguished friend from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. I hold that when a Senator is charged with false swearing, when he is charged with inattention to business, with incapacity, with a want of influence, when his record is incorrectly stated to his injury by persons outside of this Chamber, it is his duty to his State, his duty to the Senate, his duty to himself and his own manhood to defend himself, and defend himself upon the floor of the Senate, and clear the Senate of the imputation of having members who are falsely charged with improper and with criminal acts. Therefore, Mr. President, I had no hesitation, having consulted one of the members of the Committee on Printing and had the pamphlet carried to another member, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], for his personal examination, and when it was reported to me that it would have to appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I, desiring to print it as an appendix, and an objection being made, had the manuscript carried to both members of the Committee on Printing, and consulted them and received from them the information that it was proper to print it.

Now, Mr. President, in regard to this very small thing, the Senator from Kansas accuses me here of striking out this clause about the appendix.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from Florida allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. CALL. I will.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say to the Senator from Florida that in the appendix he wants to reform his figures. I see that he gives me credit of having passed one bill. If the Senator will look over the RECORD he will find that a great many introduced by me passed this body, and more than ten times the number stated also passed the House of Representatives.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I have not read the printed form. There may be various errors of the printers, and I will have them corrected. I desire to say that if there be such a statement in this pamphlet in regard to the Senator from Colorado it will do him no harm, for the country knows his distinguished ability and his great fidelity, and a hundred statements of that sort would do him no injury.

I was proceeding to say that the Senator from Kansas deliberately accuses me of a falsification of this record. Now let us try that question. If I am guilty, I deserve condemnation. If the Senator from Kansas is guilty, I will leave it to himself and to others to say. Let us look at it a little. The President of the Senate, the Presiding Officer of the body, a distinguished orator, rises here in the Senate and accuses me of falsifying the record. If his charge be false, upon whom does it rest?

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. CALL. I will.

Mr. INGALLS. Did or did not the Senator leave out in the print this morning the words that appear in the print of June 2, relating to the appendix?

Mr. CALL. Yes.

Mr. INGALLS. He left them out?

Mr. CALL. He did, purposely.

Mr. INGALLS. He did? By what authority?

Mr. CALL. But the Senator from Kansas when he makes that statement accuses himself. The Senator from Kansas does injury to his own character. Why? Ah, you need not smile, you can not escape the blot. Who does not know that the Senator from Kansas knows that he is making a charge of falsification upon an immaterial thing, which conveys no culpability of any kind whatever? I could convict him before a jury of his own Kansas people, and send him to the penitentiary upon that charge—a charge of falsification—and the specification that I had left out the words to be printed "in an appendix to these remarks." What difference does it make whether it was printed in an appendix or as part of the remarks? That is the question. Does the Senator from Kansas say it was material to the order of this body and the leave that was given that this should be printed as an appendix or as a part of this RECORD and part of my speech? But that is not sufficient. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] read to the Senator from Kansas that I had obtained a double leave. I had obtained the specific leave of the Senate to print this as a part of my remarks and, again, I had obtained leave to print it as an appendix, which gave me privilege of doing either, and the Senator from Kansas, when he made that charge of falsification against me, knew that that RECORD contained the leave to print this statement and these letters and that table to which I specifically referred in my remarks, to print it either as a part of my remarks or as an appendix to my speech; and when I asked to print it as an appendix to my speech I show the evidence here of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] that I applied to them to know which of the two courses I should pursue, and they said "print it as a part of your remarks."

That is all I have to say.

Mr. CULLOM. Now I hope we shall have the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being objection to the consideration of the resolution, it will go over.

ADMISSION OF WYOMING.

Mr. CULLOM. Regular order.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 982) to provide for the admission of the State of Wyoming into the Union, and for other purposes.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, there is but one amendment which the Committee on Territories desire to propose, and that is in relation to the Yellowstone National Park, reserving the jurisdiction and the right of control of Congress over the Park. I hardly think it is necessary, but in order to avoid any possible question about it, in behalf of the committee I offer a proviso to come in at the end of section 1.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of section 1 it is proposed to add the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall repeal or affect any act of Congress relating to the Yellowstone National Park, or the reservation of the park as now defined, or as may be hereafter defined or extended, or the power of the United States over it; and nothing contained in this act shall interfere with the right and ownership of the United States in said park and reservation as it now is or may hereafter be defined or extended by law; but exclusive legislation, in all cases whatsoever, shall be exercised by the United States, which shall have exclusive control and jurisdiction over the same; and the said State shall not be entitled to select indemnity school lands for the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections that may be in said park reservation as the same is now defined or may be hereafter defined.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I rise to suggest to the Senator from Connecticut that that amendment would probably come in better at the end of section 2 than section 1.

Mr. PLATT. I have no objection to that.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I am not sure about it. I merely make the suggestion to the Senator.

Mr. PLATT. It was offered as a proviso to section 1.

Mr. VEST. That ought to come in at the end of section 2.

Mr. PLATT. At the end of section 2?

Mr. VEST. Section 2 applies to boundaries.

Mr. PLATT. I cut it out from the RECORD, it being an amendment offered in another place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAY in the chair). The question is on the amendment proposed to section 2.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I do not desire to take the time of the Senate in a speech or statement of the claims of Wyoming to admission as a State; and if it be thought that such a statement ought to be made to go in the RECORD, I can not make a better or a more condensed one than is made in the report of the committee, and in lieu of any oral statement I ask that the report of the committee may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the report will be read.

Mr. PLATT. I mean that portion of it which precedes the appendices.

The Chief Clerk read the report submitted by Mr. PLATT January 20, 1890, as follows:

The Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (S. 894) entitled "A bill to provide for the admission of the State of Wyoming into the Union, and for other purposes," together with the memorial of the people of the Territory of Wyoming praying for the admission of that Territory as a State, having considered the same, respectfully submit the following report:

At the last session of Congress your committee reported favorably a bill authorizing the people of Wyoming Territory to hold a convention to frame a constitution, and to submit the same to the people of the Territory for adoption or rejection, preparatory to admission as a State. This bill having failed to receive consideration in the Senate, a majority of the boards of county commissioners in Wyoming petitioned the governor of the Territory to issue a proclamation for a constitutional convention such as was contemplated by the bill.

An apportionment of the Territory into districts was thereupon made in the same manner as was provided in the bill by the governor, chief-justice, and secretary of the Territory.

A proclamation was issued by the governor, calling a constitutional convention for the purpose of framing a constitution and forming a State government preparatory to admission. In his proclamation the governor substantially adopted the provisions of the Senate bill.

The election of delegates was held on the second Monday of July, 1889, and the convention assembled on the first Monday of September, 1889, at Cheyenne, the capital of the Territory. The convention adjourned on the 30th day of September, 1889, having framed a constitution, a copy of which is hereto annexed. (Appendix A.)

The constitution was submitted to a vote of the people of the Territory of Wyoming, at a special election held in pursuance of a proclamation of the governor, on the 4th day of November, 1889, and adopted by a vote of 6,272 in favor of the constitution to 1,923 against it, the total number of votes cast being 8,195. The vote on the adoption was small, compared with the vote cast at the Delegate election in 1885, which was 18,010. But a severe snow-storm occurred on the day before the election, and election day was an unusually cold and uncomfortable one throughout the Territory; and the fact that no more votes were cast at that election, in the opinion of the committee, does not at all reflect any indifference of the people of the Territory, who have, indeed, manifested during the last few years an earnest desire for statehood.

The committee can not better set forth the claims of the Territory of Wyoming to admission than by attaching to this report the memorial addressed to the President and Congress by the memorial committee appointed by the constitutional convention above referred to. (Appendix B.)

Your committee believe that the claims of the people of the Territory of Wyoming should be recognized, and Wyoming admitted as a State into the Union under the constitution so framed and ratified.

Wyoming was carved out of territory acquired by the United States with the purpose that new States should be formed whenever it should be sufficiently settled and developed to make the creation of such States wise and proper. This purpose has been too often expressed to be the subject of doubt.

The third article of the Louisiana treaty says:

"The inhabitants of the ceded territory shall be incorporated in the Union of the United States, and admitted as soon as possible, according to the principles of the Federal Constitution, to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States."

The Territorial system was adopted only as a matter of necessity, in order that there might be some government in an undeveloped and sparsely settled region. And whenever settlement and development make it possible for a people to sustain a State government, according to the principles of the Federal Constitution, the Territorial government should be abandoned and the privileges of State citizenship conferred upon its people.

Sufficient progress and development have been made in the settlement of Wyoming Territory to make it certain that it will become a strong, prosperous, and progressive State, an honor alike to its own people and to the nation. Its area is about 98,000 square miles; it is rich in material resources; its people are intelligent, enterprising, imbued with republican spirit, and eager to assume the responsibilities of citizenship. It is exceedingly rich in minerals, metals, and petroleum. Its coal deposits are undoubtedly equal in extent and value to those of Pennsylvania, about 30,000 square miles of the Territory being underlain with coal. Gold and silver, copper, lead, and iron are abundant; and recent developments indicate that its petroleum product will be very great. The mineral wealth of the Territory can scarcely be comprehended, and from this source alone it is destined to become one of the richest States in the Union.

Its agricultural development will depend largely on irrigation; but its arid lands when irrigated will be capable of a wonderful production, and able to sustain a dense population. No other State or Territory having arid lands equals Wyoming in the number of its streams whose waters can be diverted and uniformly distributed over its entire area. Irrigated land produces much more to the acre than the most fertile land not requiring irrigation. Professor Mead, the water engineer of the Territory, says:

"Wyoming stands third in extent of irrigated lands and in number and mileage of irrigation canals. More than $10,000,000 are invested in irrigation ditches and canals, and over $15,000,000 have been expended in the reclamation of desert lands. The irrigated districts, as to extent, are equal to two-thirds of Italy, and are greater than that of France and Spain combined. The lands now reclaimed would, if divided, make 30,000 80-acre farms; and, if provided with transportation facilities, would furnish employment and support for more than one-quarter of a million of people. Fully 10,000,000 acres can be reclaimed by irrigation if proper measures are taken for storing and distributing the water. These lands are not only enormously productive, but their agricultural value is enhanced by contiguity of over 13,000,000 of acres of valuable grazing lands. The irrigable land of this Territory equals in extent the combined irrigation of Egypt and Italy, the agricultural area of which supports over 10,000,000 people. Taken in connection with the grazing land, its area and productive value are above the States in the Mississippi Valley."

Most of the lands of Wyoming not capable of being irrigated are well adapted to grazing.

It has large tracts of timber land, from 8,000,000 to 10,000,000 acres being covered with forests. Its assessable wealth in 1889 was $31,500,000; its actual wealth probably exceeds $100,000,000. Few States, if any, have been admitted to the Union which at the date of admission had as much actual wealth as Wyoming. Its enterprise in the erection and maintenance of public schools shows the high estimation which its people put upon education. By the census of 1880 its illiteracy was less than that of any State or other Territory. Institutions which characterize a progressive and enlightened people are already well established in Wyoming. A university, an insane asylum, a deaf and dumb asylum, a Territorial farm for the poor, have already been established, at a total cost of not less than $200,000. A fine capitol building has been erected at a cost of $275,000.

The population of Wyoming undoubtedly exceeds 100,000, and is probably in the neighborhood of 125,000. It is rapidly increasing, and its great resources, as yet scarcely touched in their development, insure a steady increase for many years to come. The enterprise of its citizens, their intelligence and public spirit, and the wisdom with which they have managed their Territorial affairs are guaranties that they would conduct a State government with great credit to themselves and to the Union.

The committee would supplement this meager sketch of the condition of Wyoming by a quotation from the report of Governor Warren to the Secretary of the Interior for 1889.

"WYOMING EPIITOMIZED.

"Wyoming will be in size the eighth State in the Union. It is more than ninety-seven times the size of Rhode Island.

"Statehood.—The Territory desires statehood, and having nearly 100,000 square miles of area, 100,000 population, $100,000,000 of wealth, and extensive undeveloped resources, the people are entitled to the full benefits of State government.

"Excepting coal, the mineral wealth of Wyoming has been but slightly developed. The extension of railroads now being built and projected will early bring about great changes and rapid development.

"About 30,000 square miles of the Territory is underlaid with coal.

"Wyoming will perhaps become more noted for her oils than any other product. Oil is found in large areas, some of the basins reaching 30 by 150 miles.

"Mountains of iron and generous deposits of gold, silver, copper, lead, mica, cinnabar, tin, sulphur, soda, salt, borax, asphaltum, gypsum, graphite, magnes-ium, asbestos, kaolin, and mineral paint are found; also marble, sandstone, limestone, granite, slate, and other decorating and building stones.

"The mineral wealth of Wyoming is more than sufficient to pay the national debt, as will be demonstrated by future development.

"Natural gas is believed to exist, but no considerable discovery has yet been made.

"Brick clay exists in all parts of the Territory.

"One hundred and fifty thousand horses and mules, 1,500,000 cattle, and 1,250,000 sheep graze on the ranges of Wyoming.

"Nutritious grasses, curing where they grow, furnish abundant food for both domestic animals and wild game.

"Irrigation is largely depended upon to raise farm products, yet small grains, grasses, and vegetables are raised without irrigation over a very considerable area. With irrigation alfalfa makes from two to four crops a year, and grains and vegetables make a phenomenal yield.

"The Union Pacific Railway runs nearly 500 miles through Southern Wyoming. The Denver Pacific branch runs south from Cheyenne; also the Colorado Central. The Cheyenne and Northern runs north from Cheyenne. The Oregon Short Line runs northwest from Granger, in the western portion of the Territory. The Fremont, Elkhorn, and Missouri Valley Railway extends nearly 200 miles from the eastern border to the center of the Territory. The Burlington has a complete line to Cheyenne, and has a line graded, about receiving iron, in the northeast portion of Wyoming. The Wyoming Eastern will traverse the entire Territory from east to west, and many other projected lines and branches are reported in progress.

"The climate of Wyoming is cool in summer and mild in winter, with but few snow-storms, which are usually accompanied by wind, preventing a complete covering of the ground. While subjected to occasional heavy snowfalls, the average winters are neither severe nor long. We have few cloudy and many sunny days, and it is healthful in the highest degree.

"The many rivers of Wyoming, with their numerous branches, water very large tracts of land, and also furnish food-fishes.

"Wild game abounds in nearly every portion of the Territory, and its wanton slaughter is prohibited by law.

"A very large portion of the public lands are yet unsurveyed, and much of that surveyed is still unoccupied.

"There is room for all, either in agricultural pursuits, mining, stock-raising, or other business.

"The birds of Wyoming include over one hundred and twenty-five species.

"Yellowstone National Park is nearly all within the borders of Wyoming. Its scenery and its wonderful freaks of nature are unequalled in the world.

"Business in Wyoming is generally prosperous notwithstanding the present low price of the cattle product.

"There are thirty-one newspapers printed in the Territory, four of them dailies.

"The people of Wyoming are of high average in education and general habits. The early settlers came from nearly every part of the world, but later they came chiefly from the Eastern and Southern States.

"Public schools are maintained throughout the Territory, and teachers are carefully selected.

"The church edifices are very numerous, and many of them are costly and of high order of architecture. They are very generally attended.

"The laws of Wyoming are good and generally applicable to the country, and the people are law-abiding.

"No fatal contagious diseases exist among live-stock and the Territory constantly employs an efficient veterinary surgeon to prevent the dissemination of disease, and quarantine laws and sanitary regulations are maintained.

"The Territory created the office of mining inspector to secure the safety of men employed in coal and other mines.

"The office of Territorial geologist is maintained to encourage the development of mining.

"The office of Territorial engineer provides a skillful official, whose duties are to encourage, superintend, and control irrigation.

"The Territory has a fish hatchery for the purpose of stocking streams not already provided, and a competent fish commissioner is in charge.

"The social status of Wyoming is excellent. Societies, literary, social, secret, and others, are well represented and satisfactorily supported.

"Wyoming has a law library of 15,000 volumes, and other public libraries are found in the larger towns.

"The flora of the Territory comprehends, in addition to flowering plants, large varieties of grasses, and some sixty species of mosses, lichens, and various species of tree flora, the latter more fully described under the heading of timber and lumber supply.

"The fauna of Wyoming is extensive in its genera and species. Perhaps no State or Territory excels in this. Some fifty species of food-fishes abound in our water courses and lakes.

"Some thirty species of mammals abound, including game animals.

"Wyoming now has a population more than double that of either Alabama, Missouri, Ohio, Oregon, Illinois, and some other States, when admitted.

"Women's suffrage, first adopted in 1890, is favored by both political parties.

"Wyoming is becoming noted as a resort for those in search of health and strength and the highest physical development.

"The Indians of Wyoming are not warlike, and efforts are being made to educate them in farming and other industrial pursuits.

"The mail service is fair, but in many localities more mail routes and better facilities are needed to accommodate the inhabitants and to assist in developing the Territory.

"Financial standing in the Territory (public, private, and corporate) is high.

"There are two companies of Wyoming National Guards already organized and equipped.

"Wyoming has one county, Fremont, with an area equal to that of Massachusetts, New Jersey, Delaware, and Rhode Island combined.

"The coal area of Wyoming is twice as large as that of Pennsylvania.

"The mineral paint of Wyoming is the best ever used on bridges, roofs, and other structures exposed to the elements.

"The people of Wyoming have $10,000,000 invested in irrigating canals, ditches, and reservoirs, which is not included in the assessed valuation of the land on which the same are located.

"The high mountain ranges of the Territory shield its valleys from the severe blizzards so common in some of the Western States and Territories.

"The scenic features in Wyoming are remarkable. Meadows and great natural parks are encircled by lofty and majestic snow-capped mountains, their sides covered with forests, innumerable streams, great water-falls, and extraordinary and fantastic rock formations, and other grand and beautiful scenery.

"The census of 1880 shows that Wyoming has the smallest percentage of illiteracy of any political division of the United States. The people are generally young, vigorous, industrious, and of high character.

"Wyoming has provided laws for free county libraries and a small tax is levied for their support.

"Wyoming has a Territorial agricultural fair and a number of county fairs.

"Rainfall in Wyoming averages on the plains about 14 inches; on the mountains perhaps three times as much.

"There are twenty banks in Wyoming.

"Interest rates are from 6 per cent. to 12 per cent.

"Live-stock and mining industries furnish an excellent market for all kinds of produce.

"Wyoming public buildings comprise the capitol, university, fish hatchery, penitentiary, poor farm, asylum for deaf, dumb, and blind, and asylum for insane.

"The cities and towns of Wyoming have a high class of municipal buildings.

"Our undeveloped resources are abundant and very promising, simply needing brains, money, and muscle.

"Wyoming has several telephone exchanges and fair telegraphic advantages.

"Women's suffrage, conferred in 1890, is recognized and established in the proposed constitution.

"Under the present Administration all appointees of the Territory have been bona fide residents.

"Representatives met in convention and adopted a constitution for the proposed State of Wyoming.

"In 1886 the total acres of land assessed was 394,789; in 1889 it is 5,868,370.

"Wyoming has already 1,000 miles of main trunk-line of Union Pacific Railway, Chicago and Northwestern, and Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, but needs more.

"The mean altitude is about 6,000 feet, ranging from 3,000 to 14,000.

"Wyoming has numerous advantageous sites for the easy construction of large storage reservoirs.

"The Territory produces annually a large amount of hay. Small grains do remarkably well.

"The soils of Wyoming are generally rich, the only fertilizer needed being water. The sage-brush districts raise good crops when subjected to irrigation.

"Four-fifths of the counties in Wyoming have substantial and commodious brick or stone court-houses.

"Wyoming is the youngest of the Territories. It is 275 miles north to south and 350 east to west, forming a parallelogram.

"School-houses and school property in the Territory are worth $1,000,000.

"The Territorial public buildings have a value of $500,000.

"Wyoming has a compulsory school law and the teachers are carefully selected.

"Heavy forests cover over 7,000,000 acres of Wyoming, and there are about 15,000,000 acres having more or less timber.

"School and university lands are rented in Wyoming and rental applied to support of public schools.

"Wyoming cast a vote of 18,010 in 1888. The next vote will be much larger.

"The streams of Wyoming furnish water enough to irrigate 18 to 20 per cent. of its area.

"Wyoming has 600 streams already used to some extent for irrigation, and a great many more from which no ditches have been taken.

"The number of recorded ditches is over 2,600, and there are more than 5,000 unrecorded.

"The total length of irrigating ditches is over 5,000 miles."

Your committee find much to praise and nothing to condemn in the constitution which has been adopted, and believe that the highest and best interests of its people as well as the strength and glory of the Republic will be subserved by its immediate admission as a State. The bill referred to the committee conforms to the bill recommended at the last session of Congress for an enabling act, except as to the method of admission; and with some verbal and unimportant amendments in the text, the committee recommend that it do pass.

Mr. PLATT. It has been suggested to me by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] that perhaps the amendment which was adopted might operate to prevent the service within the park of civil and criminal process issued within the State of Wyoming, and thus afford an asylum to criminals and persons who want to avoid process. I therefore ask leave to amend the amendment which has already been adopted. I suppose it will require unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the eighth line of the amendment agreed to, after the word "same," it is proposed to insert:

But nothing in this proviso contained shall be construed to prevent the service within said park of civil and criminal process lawfully issued by the authorities of said State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to. It is agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I wish to ask the Senator from Connecticut if he does not think that it would be better, in connection with the report of the committee he has had read, to have certain portions at least of Appendix B, the memorial of the constitutional convention asking for the admission of the State, read, or does he prefer to let that come up in the course of the discussion.

Mr. PLATT. I have finished my part of the discussion of this bill unless some Senator should desire some further information. If the Senator from Arkansas desires that anything which is printed in either of the appendices to the report should be inserted in the RECORD, I have no objection, if he will indicate what it is.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I simply suggested that as this was a memorial coming from the constitutional convention, probably it would be best to have it appear as a part of the record as made up showing the committee's side of this question. So far as I am concerned, the part of it I desire to have read I can have read subsequently in the course of the debate, but it occurred to me that it might be well for it to go into the RECORD as a fair statement of the case in connection with the report.

Mr. PLATT. Does the Senator desire that it shall be read at length at the desk, or merely inserted in the RECORD?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I leave that entirely with the Senator. So far as I am concerned if it is not read to the Senate there are some parts of it that I shall feel myself called upon to read later in the course of the discussion. It can be read to the Senate now, and it would perhaps avoid the necessity of a subsequent reading. I leave that, however, to the discretion of the Senator from Connecticut, just whatever he thinks best.

Mr. PLATT. At the request of the Senator from Arkansas I will ask that Appendix B, containing the memorial of the constitutional convention of the Territory of Wyoming, praying for admission as a State into the Union, be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

APPENDIX B.

Memorial of the State constitutional convention of the Territory of Wyoming, praying the admission of that Territory as a State into the Union.

To the President and Congress of the United States:

The people of Wyoming, prompted thereto by a consideration of the great importance of an early escape from the Territorial condition and of the rights which pertain to American citizens, having taken the preliminary steps toward organizing a State government by the adoption of a constitution republican in form, do now, through their authorized agents, present such constitution to the President and Congress of the United States, and respectfully pray to be admitted as a State into the Union of States.

BRIEF ANTECEDENT.

During the nearly twenty-one years since the organization of the Territory, the people of Wyoming have with energy, industry, and becoming patience labored to reclaim the vast region of country embraced within its boundaries, meanwhile graciously accepting the general rule of Federal authorities, confident that when sufficiently populous and sufficiently developed to justify such action, the Territory would be cheerfully accorded the full benefits of statehood. In their judgment that condition of things has been fully realized. And accordingly, moved by their conviction of what was demanded, and by the known wish of the great body of their constituents, the Tenth Legislative Assembly, which convened in January, 1888, memorialized Congress for an enabling act; declaring it to be "manifest that the prosperity and welfare of the people of this Territory will advance under State institutions far beyond what can be realized under a Territorial condition." This memorial is hereto attached as Appendix A.

Through the instrumentality of the Delegate from Wyoming, Hon. JOSEPH M. CAREY, a bill was accordingly introduced in the Senate during the Fiftieth Congress (S. 2415) to provide for the formation and admission into the Union of the State of Wyoming, and for other purposes. During the closing days of that Congress the Committee on Territories, to whom it was referred, having amended the same, unanimously reported it with the recommendation that it pass, setting forth in a very strong light, as reasons therefor, the vastness and varied character of the resources of the Territory; its very considerable development; its high financial standing; the excellent provision made for education, as well as for public charities, and the sufficiency of population.

At the same session a bill (H. R. 1211) to enable Wyoming and certain other Territories to form constitutions and State governments was also favorably reported by the House Committee on Territories, whose report in like manner illustrated the wealth of Wyoming, with its advanced condition and excellent prospects, submitting in connection that the facts fully established the claims of Wyoming to statehood.

Not desiring that, if time had permitted, an enabling act would have been passed by Congress during said session, and assuming the no less favorable action of the Fifty-first Congress upon a proper constitution presented for its approval, boards of county commissioners of a large majority of the counties, basing their action on the Senate bill aforesaid, passed resolutions expressing the opinion that there should be immediate action to this end; pledging themselves to put in operation the election machinery under the laws of the Territory for the election of delegates to a constitutional convention, as well as to submit such constitution as should be framed to the people for their ratification or rejection, in case the Territorial officers in said bill designated should take the requisite initiatory steps, and requesting such Territorial officers to divide the Territory into districts, apportion the number of delegates thereto respectively, and do such other acts as were necessary for convening a constitutional convention in the manner and form provided by the terms of said Senate bill. The form of resolution so adopted by the county boards is hereto attached as Appendix B.

In pursuance of the requests so made, the governor, chief justice, and secretary of the Territory did on the 3d day of June, 1889, convene at the capitol, divide the Territory into delegate districts, and apportion the number of delegates thereto on the basis of the population of each as shown by the votes cast for Delegate in Congress at the last general election, namely, on the 6th of November, 1888, officially certifying to such action on their part; which certificate will be found hereto attached as Appendix C.

Whereupon the governor of the Territory, "recognizing the superior and material advantages of a State government over our Territorial system, and being desirous of carrying into effect the will of the people," issued his proclamation, recommending the necessary action, and directing that an election be held throughout the Territory on the second Monday of July, 1889, for the election of delegates to a constitutional convention, to assemble at Cheyenne on the first Monday of September, 1889, for the purpose of framing a constitution for the State of Wyoming, and of submitting such constitution to the people for their ratification or rejection; also recommending that in framing a State government "the provisions of the aforesaid Senate bill be followed as nearly as possible," and directing that the constitution so formed by such convention be submitted to the people on the first Tuesday of November, 1889. The said proclamation is hereto attached as Appendix D.

In obedience to the call of the governor, fifty-five delegates were chosen, and on the said 2d day of September, 1889, delegates to the number of forty-nine, every county and both political parties being represented, convened in the capitol at Cheyenne, and having been duly sworn, organized as a convention and proceeded to frame the constitution, a copy of which will be found attached hereto as Appendix E.

The constitution so framed was submitted as directed, according to the provisions of section 7 of Article XXI thereof, and was ratified by five-sixths of the citizens voting thereon, by a vote small in itself, and yet large in view of the little opposition felt by the people, and of the facts that no other issue was presented and that the day of the election followed one of the severest snowstorms ever known at that season, and was also marked by extreme cold, rendering it practically impossible for the people of many precincts to reach the polls.

From the foregoing, it will be apparent that the people of Wyoming are almost unanimous in their desire for a State government, and that they have earnestly, harmoniously, and with due observance of the proper forms, taken all the steps necessary to a formal application for admission into the Union.

PRECEDENTS FOR LIKE ACTION.

Numerous precedents for just such methods of procedure might be cited, nearly half of the whole number of States admitted since the formation of the Federal Union (to wit, Vermont, Kentucky, Tennessee, Maine, Michigan, Arkansas, Florida, Iowa, Wisconsin, California, and Oregon) having in like manner proceeded without enabling acts from Congress.

THE RIGHT TO ADMISSION.

Discussing briefly the grounds upon which the admission may be urged as a right, it may be declared a settled principle of the Government that territory acquired by the United States is, in the language of Chief Justice Taney (19 Howard, 446), "acquired to become a State, and not to be held as a colony and governed by Congress by absolute authority;" that "Territorial governments are organized as matters of necessity, because the people are too few in number and want in resources to maintain a State government," but "are contrary to the spirit of our American Constitution" and "are to be tolerated and continued only so long as that necessity exists." This view has been entertained by leading statesmen from Washington's day to the present time. It found expression in the ordinance of 1787, which, giving to the Northwest Territory at first a colonial government, yet carefully provided for an early transition to the Territorial state and then for the admission of States formed therefrom at as early a day as practicable, and on such conditions as should be deemed "consistent with the general interests of the Confederacy." It also had expression in the Louisiana treaty, which secured to the Government the territory out of which have been formed so many great States, the third article of which treaty says:

"The inhabitants of the ceded territory shall be incorporated in the Union of the United States, and admitted as soon as possible, according to the principles of the Federal Constitution, to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States."

The same principle is recognized in the treaty of 1848 with Mexico, whereby yet other vast areas were added to our domain.

It is by virtue of these treaties that the area embraced within our boundaries became a part of the Federal domain, on which account it may of right be claimed that the principle therein enunciated has full application to the case of Wyoming.

While the expression "as soon as possible, according to the principles of the Federal Constitution," is general and indefinite, it will not be denied that it involves the idea of reasonable conditions and clearly implies a strong and solemn obligation of the Federal Government to deal with the people of the Territories in a just and equitable manner as their fiduciary, for the time holding in trust the most sacred interests, bound to relieve them at the earliest moment, consistent with the general welfare, from the disadvantages of the Territorial condition.

THE CONDITIONS REQUISITE ALREADY FULFILLED.

The proper conditions to be fulfilled by any Territory seeking admission are simply these:

1. The boundaries of the proposed State should be free from the embarrassment of conflicting claims and should include such reasonable area as will at once insure a strong and competent State and in no way disturb the policy of the Federal Government or the peace of neighboring communities.

As to this matter the boundaries proposed for the State of Wyoming are precisely those fixed by Congress when the Territory was organized, and the physical features of the area of 98,000 square miles embraced are of such character as to favor homogeneity of population and harmony between all sections.

THE MATERIAL FOUNDATION VAST AND SUBSTANTIAL.

2. There should be a sufficient material foundation upon which to build the State.

On this head there is but little need of enlargement, since the resources of Wyoming are already well known to the world as being unsurpassed, either in variety or extent, by those of any equal area. Of the whole area, the greater portion affords as good grazing for stock as can be found in the world; some 10,000,000 acres are fertile valley lands, irrigable by means of numerous streams, no less remarkable for the permanence of water supply than for their wide and equal distribution over the whole Territory, while the eccentric chains and spurs of mountains, much broken up and interrupted by broad stretches of valley and plain, besides being clothed, many of them, with forest timber, are also great store-houses of mineral wealth, containing not only gold and silver, copper and tin, but an almost unexampled supply of other minerals, such as iron, asbestos, mica, plumbago, sulphur, mineral paint, kaolin, fire-clay, and gypsum; also granites, sandstones, limestones, and marbles in great variety. Moreover, outside of the mountain ranges, some 20,000 square miles of broken and basin lands are underlaid with coal of excellent quality in veins of extraordinary thickness. Vast deposits of soda and magnesia occur in many localities, while the oil basins are so many and so extensive as to indicate that Wyoming may become one of the most important petroleum districts of the world.

IMPORTANT DEVELOPMENT ALREADY ACHIEVED.

3. It is admitted that the resources of a Territory seeking admission should have been so far developed as to furnish the requisite guaranty of ability on the part of the new State to support a State government and to perform its part as a member of the family of States.

That this point has been reached by Wyoming, there is no room for doubt. Notwithstanding the recent heavy losses in the department of live-stock, the total assessed valuation of property has reached in 1889 the sum of $31,431,495, a valuation representing a real wealth of not less than $100,000,000 including 900 miles of railway with equipment; 5,868,370 acres of land assessed; 4,506 miles of irrigating ditches, for the irrigation of 2,000,000 acres of land, and valued by the Territorial engineer at $10,000,000; about 3,000,000 head of live-stock, together with a large amount in roads, bridges, and other general improvements, besides developed mines (those of coal alone being valued at $10,000,000 and yielding $4,000,000 to $5,000,000 worth of coal annually), with mills, furnaces, and factories, and the very considerable amounts in cities and villages, characterized by the substantiality and even elegance of their structures, both public and private.

Possessing all these and adding thereto her numerous extensive mercantile houses and her banks, increased from one national bank in 1871, with a capital of $75,000, to nineteen banks, national and private, in 1889, with a total capital of $1,553,000, Wyoming is abundantly able to make comparison of her industrial development and financial condition with those of any of the Territories that have gained admission since the formation of the Union—more than able to compare with many, as for example, with California, whose assessable wealth (assuming that it was assessed at even 60 per cent. of its true value) at the date of admission was $12,597,123; Arkansas, whose valuation fourteen years after admission was $19,000,000; Florida, whose valuation four years after admission was $12,000,000; Iowa, whose valuation four years after admission was $14,000,000.

000; Oregon, whose valuation two years after admission was $19,084,000; and Kansas, whose valuation at the date of admission was but $22,518,282.

A SUFFICIENT AND WORTHY POPULATION.

4. It is admitted that there should be such number of people with such intelligence and virtue as will constitute a reasonable guaranty of a successful and honorable career for the new State.

Touching the question of mere numbers in this case it is proper to say that it is of necessity a matter of estimate on the basis of the vote since the census of 1880. In 1870 the population was 9,115; in 1880, 29,799. In 1888 the vote for Delegate was 18,010, nearly equal to the whole population of eight years before. The rapid increase has been on account of the extraordinary progress of agriculture, as shown by the construction of no less than 2,600 irrigating ditches within the past five years, by the increase in the amount of land assessed to owners, and finally by the recent making of thousands of homes and the building of prosperous cities and villages in districts wholly uninhabited at the date of the last census.

Concluding on this one point, it is safe to assume that a population equal to the marvelous development faintly outlined above is a sufficient population, whether in number more or less than that of some other Territories heretofore admitted; especially when it is borne in mind that some of the great States were admitted with a population less than one-half that of Wyoming, at a low estimate, and that the average population of seventeen of the States, as estimated by their own people at date of admission, was but 60,000.

As to character the people of Wyoming are of the very best class of American citizens, having come from the most enlightened portions of the United States and Europe. Their intelligence is manifest from the fact that those over ten years of age unable to read and write amount to 2.6 per cent. only; that, without Government aid or a permanent school fund, they have maintained a compulsory school system since the organization of the Territory—a system under which schools of excellent character and for the education of all the children are for the most part kept open during the year; that they have founded a free university, now in the third year of its work, with building and grounds valued at $150,000, with an able faculty of eight regular instructors and several lecturers; that the property consecrated to educational uses, generally, amounts to not less than $1,000,000; that free public libraries, maintained by a general county tax, have been established and liberally supported in the principal cities; that newspapers are well supported at all the centers; that numerous literary associations are in active operation for the promotion of general culture, and that an enterprising academy of sciences is already contributing to the progress of science and the arts.

The virtue of the people and their active interest in all matters of social advancement are attested by the general good order of the community, the prevalence of religious organizations, and the munificent provision made for the unfortunate classes by the establishment and liberal maintenance of hospitals, and of asylums for the insane, the deaf and dumb, and blind. Their integrity is also manifest from the solidity of mercantile and banking houses, the non-default of public officers, and that extraordinary financial credit of Territory, counties, and municipalities, which has enabled them to negotiate their securities at a premium of 5 per cent. to 12½ per cent. although bearing low rates of interest.

5. It is important that there should be such homogeneity of the population and such share in the spirit, aims, and institutions of the country as will afford assurance of the requisite co-operation of the new State in furthering the great ends of the nation.

In Wyoming there are no dissensions among the people, whether on the ground of differing nationalities or diverse religions. They are as homogeneous and harmonious as the people of any of the States. In the language of the convention's address to the people, "the residents of Wyoming are the descendants of free citizens—such as framed the Constitution of the United States. The loyalty of the sons to republican institutions and their love of liberty have not been diminished, but increased by the hardships, dangers, and difficulties that have been encountered and overcome in laying the foundations of the commonwealth."

A GOVERNMENT REPUBLICAN IN FORM.

6. If it be a sine qua non that the State government to be framed shall be "republican in form," then it may be confidently asserted that the constitution of the State of Wyoming herewith submitted for the approval of Congress is pre-eminently republican, both in form and spirit; providing not only the usual frame of republican government, but also declaring absolute equality of rights, natural, civil, and religious, and likewise guarantying full equality of political rights and privileges to all citizens equal to the exercise of the political function, regardless of any condition or circumstance whatsoever other than individual incompetency, or unworthiness duly ascertained according to law.

A CONSTITUTION WITH PROPER COMPACTS AND SAFEGUARDS.

7. The further conditions precedent that the constitution and ordinances offered for the approval of Congress shall duly protect the property of the United States within the proposed State, and shall make no unjust discrimination against citizens of other States; that all debts and liabilities of the Territory shall be assumed and paid by the State; that perfect toleration of religious sentiment and opinion shall be secured, and that the Legislature shall make laws for the establishment and maintenance of a system of public schools open to all the children of the State, and free from sectarian control—all these conditions are entirely fulfilled by the constitution herewith submitted.

8. If it be also a reasonable requirement that the constitution shall afford every possible guaranty to the freedom and purity of elections, honesty and economy of legislation, competency and purity of administration, justice between man and man, just and equal taxation, with freedom from the heavy burdens of public indebtedness, reasonable limitations upon corporate power, with equal and suitable provisions for the encouragement of the industries of the State, as well as for the protection of the laboring classes of the people, then your memorialists represent that all these great interests have found in the constitution for Wyoming all such guaranties of every sort as the representatives of the people in convention were able to devise.

Wherefore, the people of Wyoming, feeling the justice of their claims, present this their cause, in full confidence that it will have favorable consideration from the President and Congress of the United States. We present no grievances, file no bill of complaint in their behalf. Their conviction is deep that great benefits in the form of a proper increase of public confidence and consequent influx of population and of capital, with more rapid growth of industries and a general increase of activities in every department of life would result from statehood, while they also crave that independence so dear to every American heart, and hence would press their claims in the strongest possible manner. They believe that there has never been a case in the whole history of the admission of States where less could have been said against the proposition on any score. Representing them, we have made demonstration of vastness and variety of resources as a foundation for great industries, actual industrial development quite beyond that of most of the existing States when admitted, with extraordinary proofs of an advanced social state; and finally, that the inhabitants of Wyoming are an intelligent, enterprising, and virtuous people, more than sufficient in number to assume the responsibilities of maintaining a prosperous State—a people as worthy, as competent, and strongly desiring not only the material benefits that would certainly follow admission, but also those priceless immunities and dignities which attach to self-governing powers; a people, moreover, with oneness of feeling, and with earnestness of purpose to place Wyoming in the very vanguard of the Union.

Hence this petition, for the granting of which your memorialists will ever pray.

JOHN A. RINER, HENRY A. COFFEEN,
CLARENCE D. CLARK, H. G. NICKERSON,
JOHN W. HOYT, J. A. CASEBERER,
HENRY S. ELLIOTT, ELLIOTT S. N. MORGAN,
WM. C. IRVINE, LOUIS J. PALMER,

Memorial Committee appointed by Constitutional Convention.

Mr. PLATT. Several Senators have expressed to me a wish that the constitution as published in the appendix to the report which the committee made be printed in the RECORD. The report has been read and the memorial of the constitutional convention. The constitution is between the two in the report; and as the Reporters have to make up the RECORD about this time, I ask that the constitution may be put in the RECORD, if there is no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the constitution will be printed.

The constitution is as follows:

APPENDIX A.

Constitution of the State of Wyoming.

PREAMBLE.

We, the people of the State of Wyoming, grateful to God for our civil, political, and religious liberties, and desiring to secure them to ourselves and perpetuate them to our posterity, do ordain and establish this constitution.

ARTICLE No. I.

DECLARATION OF RIGHTS.

SECTION 1. All power is inherent in the people, and all free governments are founded on their authority, and instituted for their peace, safety, and happiness; for the advancement of these ends they have at all times an inalienable and indefeasible right to alter, reform, or abolish the government in such manner as they may think proper.

SEC. 2. In their inherent right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, all members of the human race are equal.

SEC. 3. Since equality in the enjoyment of natural and civil rights is made sure only through political equality, the laws of this State affecting the political rights and privileges of its citizens shall be without distinction of race, color, sex, or any circumstance or condition whatsoever other than individual incompetency, or unworthiness duly ascertained by a court of competent jurisdiction.

SEC. 4. The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated, and no warrant shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by affidavit particularly describing the place to be searched or the person or thing to be seized.

SEC. 5. No person shall be imprisoned for debt except in cases of fraud.

SEC. 6. No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

SEC. 7. Absolute, arbitrary power over the lives, liberty, and property of freemen exists nowhere in a republic, not even in the largest majority.

SEC. 8. All courts shall be open, and every person for an injury done to person, reputation, or property shall have justice administered without sale, denial, or delay. Suits may be brought against the State in such manner and in such courts as the Legislature may by law direct.

SEC. 9. The right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate in criminal cases, but a jury in civil cases in all courts, or in criminal cases in courts not of record, may consist of less than twelve men, as may be prescribed by law. Hereafter a grand jury may consist of twelve men, any nine of whom concurring may find an indictment, but the Legislature may change, regulate, or abolish the grand-jury system.

SEC. 10. In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right to defend in person or by counsel; to demand the nature and cause of the accusation, to have a copy thereof, to be confronted with the witnesses against him, to have compulsory process served for obtaining witnesses, and to a speedy trial by an impartial jury of the county or district in which the offense is alleged to have been committed.

SEC. 11. No person shall be compelled to testify against himself in any criminal case, nor shall any person be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense. If the jury disagree, or if the judgment be arrested after a verdict, or if the judgment be reversed for error in law, the accused shall not be deemed to have been in jeopardy.

SEC. 12. No person shall be detained as a witness in any criminal prosecution longer than may be necessary to take his testimony or deposition, nor be confined in any room where criminals are imprisoned.

SEC. 13. Until otherwise provided by law, no person shall, for a felony, be proceeded against criminally, otherwise than by indictment, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces or in the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger.

SEC. 14. All persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, except for capital offenses when the proof is evident or the presumption great. Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor shall cruel or unusual punishment be inflicted.

SEC. 15. The penal code shall be framed on the humane principles of reformation and prevention.

SEC. 16. No person arrested and confined in jail shall be treated with unnecessary rigor. The erection of safe and comfortable prisons and inspection of prisons and the humane treatment of prisoners shall be provided for.

SEC. 17. The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended unless, when in case of rebellion or invasion, the public safety may require it.

SEC. 18. The free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship without discrimination or preference shall be forever guaranteed in this State; and no person shall be rendered incompetent to hold any office of trust or profit or to serve as a witness or juror because of his opinion on any matter of religious belief whatever, but the liberty of conscience hereby secured shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness or justify practices inconsistent with the peace or safety of the State.

SEC. 19. No money of the State shall ever be given or appropriated to any sectarian or religious society or institution.

SEC. 20. Every person may freely speak, write, and publish on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right; and in all trials for libel, both civil and criminal, the truth, when published with good intent and for justifiable ends, shall be a sufficient defense, the jury having the right to determine the facts and the law under direction of the court.

SEC. 21. The right of petition and of the people peaceably to assemble to consult for the common good and to make known their opinions shall never be denied or abridged.

SEC. 22. The rights of labor shall have just protection through laws calculated to secure to the laborer proper rewards for his service and to promote the industrial welfare of the State.

SEC. 23. The right of citizens to opportunities for education should have practical recognition. The Legislature shall suitably encourage means and agencies calculated to advance the sciences and liberal arts.

SEC. 24. The right of citizens to bear arms in defense of themselves and of the State shall not be denied.

SEC. 25. The military shall ever be in strict subordination to the civil power. No soldier in time of peace shall be quartered in any house without consent of the owner, nor in time of war except in the manner prescribed by law.

SEC. 26. Treason against the State shall consist only in levying war against it or in adhering to its enemies or in giving them aid and comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act or on confession in open court; nor shall any person be attainted of treason by the Legislature.

SEC. 27. Elections shall be open, free, and equal, and no power, civil or military, shall at any time interfere to prevent an untrammelled exercise of the right of suffrage.

SEC. 28. No tax shall be imposed without the consent of the people or their authorized representatives. All taxation shall be equal and uniform.

SEC. 29. No distinction shall ever be made by law between resident aliens and citizens as to the possession, taxation, enjoyment, and descent of property.

SEC. 30. Perpetuities and monopolies are contrary to the genius of a free State, and shall not be allowed. Corporations, being creatures of the State, endowed for the public good with a portion of its sovereign powers, must be subject to its control.

SEC. 31. Water being essential to industrial prosperity, of limited amount, and easy of diversion from its natural channels, its control must be in the State, which, in providing for its use, shall equally guard all the various interests involved.

SEC. 32. Private property shall not be taken for private use unless by consent of the owner, except for private ways of necessity, and for reservoirs, drains, flumes, or ditches on or across the lands of others for agriculture, mining, milling, domestic, or sanitary purposes, nor in any case without due compensation.

SEC. 33. Private property shall not be taken or damaged for public or private use without just compensation.

SEC. 34. All laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation.

SEC. 35. No ex post facto law, nor any law impairing the obligation of contracts, shall ever be made.

SEC. 36. The enumeration in this constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny, impair, or disparage others retained by the people.

SEC. 37. The State of Wyoming is an inseparable part of the Federal Union, and the Constitution of the United States is the supreme law of the land.

ARTICLE NO. II.

BOUNDARIES.

SECTION 1. The boundaries of the State of Wyoming shall be as follows: Commencing at the intersection of the twenty-seventh meridian of longitude west from Washington with the forty-fifth degree of north latitude, and running thence west to the thirty-fourth meridian of west longitude, thence south to the forty-first degree of north latitude, thence east to the twenty-seventh meridian of west longitude, and thence north to place of beginning.

DISTRIBUTION OF POWERS.

SECTION 1. The powers of the government of this State are divided into three distinct departments—the legislative, executive, and judicial; and no person or collection of persons charged with the exercise of powers properly belonging to one of these departments shall exercise any powers properly belonging to either of the others, except as in this constitution expressly directed or permitted.

ARTICLE NO. III.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

SECTION 1. The legislative power shall be vested in a senate and house of representatives, which shall be designated "The Legislature of the State of Wyoming."

SEC. 2. Senators shall be elected for the term of four years and representatives for the term of two years. The senators elected at the first election shall be divided by lot into two classes as nearly equal as may be. The seats of senators of the first class shall be vacated at the expiration of the first two years, and of the second class at the expiration of four years. No person shall be a senator who has not attained the age of twenty-five years, or a representative who has not attained the age of twenty-one years, and who is not a citizen of the United States and of this State, and who has not for at least twelve months next preceding his election resided within the county or district in which he was elected.

SEC. 3. Each county shall constitute a senatorial and representative district; the senate and house of representatives shall be composed of members elected by the legal voters of the counties, respectively, every two years. They shall be apportioned among the said counties as nearly as may be according to the number of their inhabitants. Each county shall have at least one senator and one representative; but at no time shall the number of members of the house of representatives be less than twice nor greater than three times the number of members of the senate. The senate and house of representatives first elected in pursuance of this constitution shall consist of sixteen and thirty-three members respectively.

SEC. 4. When vacancies occur in either house by death, resignation, or otherwise, such vacancy shall be filled for the remainder of the term by special election, to be called in such manner as may be prescribed by law.

SEC. 5. Members of the senate and house of representatives shall be elected on the day provided by law for the general election of a member of Congress, and their term of office shall begin on the first Monday of January thereafter.

SEC. 6. Each member of the first Legislature, as a compensation for his services, shall receive $5 for each day's attendance, and 15 cents for each mile traveled in going to and returning from the seat of government to his residence by the usual traveled route, and shall receive no other compensation, perquisite, or allowance whatever. No session of the Legislature after the first, which may be sixty days, shall exceed forty days. After the first session the compensation of the members of the Legislature shall be as provided by law; but no Legislature shall fix its own compensation.

SEC. 7. The Legislature shall meet at the seat of government at 12 o'clock, noon, on the second Tuesday of January next succeeding the general election provided by law, and at 12 o'clock, noon, on the second Tuesday of January of each alternate year thereafter, and at other times when convened by the governor.

SEC. 8. No senator or representative shall, during the term for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the State, and no member of Congress or other person holding an office (except that of notary public or an office in the militia) under the United States or this State, shall be a member of either house during his continuance in office.

SEC. 9. No member of either house shall, during the term for which he was elected, receive any increase in salary or mileage under any law passed during that term.

SEC. 10. The senate shall, at the beginning and close of each regular session and at such other times as may be necessary, elect one of its members president; the house of representatives shall elect one of its members speaker; each house shall choose its other officers, and shall judge of the election returns and qualifications of its members.

SEC. 11. A majority of each house shall constitute a quorum to do business, but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day and compel the attendance of absent members in such manner and under such penalties as each house may prescribe.

SEC. 12. Each house shall have power to determine the rules of its proceedings, and to punish its members or other persons for contempt or disorderly behavior in its presence; to protect its members against violence or offers of bribes or private solicitation, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, to expel a member, and shall have all other powers necessary to the Legislature of a free State. A member expelled for corruption shall not thereafter be eligible to either house of the Legislature, and punishment for contempt or disorderly behavior shall not bar a criminal prosecution for the same offense.

SEC. 13. Each house shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and may, in its discretion, from time to time publish the same, except such parts as require secrecy, and the yeas and nays on any question shall, at the request of two members, be entered on the journal.

SEC. 14. The sessions of each house and of the committee of the whole shall be open unless the business is such as requires secrecy.

SEC. 15. Neither house shall, without consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other place than that in which the two houses shall be sitting.

SEC. 16. The members of the Legislature shall in all cases except treason, felony, violation of their oath of office, and breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the sessions of their respective houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any speech or debate in either house they shall not be questioned in any other place.

SEC. 17. The sole power of impeachment shall vest in the house of representatives, the concurrence of a majority of all members being necessary to the exercise thereof. Impeachment shall be tried by the senate sitting for that purpose, and the senators shall be upon oath or affirmation to do justice according to the law and evidence. When the governor is on trial the chief-justice of the supreme court shall preside. No person shall be convicted without a concurrence of two-thirds of the senators elected.

SEC. 18. The governor and other State and judicial officers, except justices of the peace, shall be liable to impeachment for high crimes and misdemeanors or malfeasance in office, but judgment in such cases shall only extend to removal from office and disqualification to hold any office of honor, trust, or profit under the laws of the State. The party, whether convicted or acquitted, shall, nevertheless, be liable to prosecution, trial, judgment, and punishment according to law.

SEC. 19. All officers not liable to impeachment shall be subject to removal for misconduct or malfeasance in office, in such manner as may be provided by law.

SEC. 20. No law shall be passed except by bill, and no bill shall be so altered or amended on its passage through either house as to change its original purpose.

SEC. 21. The enacting clause of every law shall be as follows: "Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Wyoming."

SEC. 22. No bill for the appropriation of money, except for the expenses of the government, shall be introduced within five days of the close of the session, except by unanimous consent of the house in which it is sought to be introduced.

SEC. 23. No bill shall be considered or become a law unless referred to a committee, returned therefrom, and printed for the use of the members.

SEC. 24. No bill, except general appropriation bills and bills for the codification and general revision of the laws, shall be passed containing more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title; but if any subject is embraced in any act which is not expressed in the title, such act shall be void only as to so much thereof as shall not be so expressed.

SEC. 25. No bill shall become a law except by a vote of a majority of all the members elected to each house, nor unless on its final passage the vote taken by ayes and noes, and the names of those voting be entered on the journal.

SEC. 26. No law shall be revised or amended, or the provisions thereof extended by reference to its title only, but so much thereof as is revised, amended, or extended shall be re-enacted and published at length.

SEC. 27. The Legislature shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases, that is to say: For granting divorces; laying out, opening, altering, or working roads or highways; vacating roads, town plats, streets, alleys, or public grounds; locating or changing county seats; regulating county or township affairs; incorporation of cities, towns, or villages, or changing or amending the charters of any cities, towns, or villages; regulating the practice in courts of justice; regulating the jurisdiction and duties of justices of the peace, police magistrates, or constables; changing the rules of evidence in any trial or inquiry; providing for changes of venue in civil or criminal cases; declaring any person of age; for limitation of civil actions; giving effect to any informal or invalid deeds; summoning or impaneling grand or petit juries; providing for the management of common schools; regulating the rate of interest on money; the opening or conducting of any election or designating the place of voting; the sale or mortgage of real estate belonging to minors or others under disability; chartering or licensing ferries or bridges or toll-roads; chartering banks, insurance companies, and loan and trust companies; remitting fines, penalties, or forfeitures; creating, increasing, or decreasing fees, percentages, or allowances of public officers; changing the law of descent; granting to any corporation, association, or individual the right to lay down railroad tracks, or any special or exclusive privilege, immunity, or franchise whatever, or amending existing charter for such purpose; for punishment of crimes; changing the names of persons or places; for the assessment or collection of taxes; affecting estates of deceased persons, minors, or others under legal disabilities; extending the time for the collection of taxes; refunding money paid into the State treasury; relinquishing or extinguishing in whole or in part, the indebtedness, liabilities, or obligation of any corporation or person to this State or to any municipal corporation therein; exempting property from taxation; restoring to citizenship persons convicted of infamous crimes; authorizing the creation, extension, or impairing of liens; creating offices or prescribing the powers or duties of offices in counties, cities, townships or school districts; or authorizing the adoption or legitimation of children. In all other cases where a general law can be made applicable no special law shall be enacted.

SEC. 28. The presiding officer of each house shall, in the presence of the house over which he presides, sign all bills and joint resolutions passed by the Legislature immediately after their titles have been publicly read, and the fact of signing shall be at once entered upon the journal.

SEC. 29. The Legislature shall prescribe by law the number, duties, and compensation of the officers and employees of each house, and no payment shall be made from the State treasury or be in any way authorized to any such person except to an acting officer or employee elected or appointed in pursuance of law.

SEC. 30. No bill shall be passed giving any extra compensation to any public officer, servant or employee, agent or contractor, after services are rendered or contract made.

SEC. 31. All stationery, printing, paper, fuel, and lights used in the legislative and other departments of the Government shall be furnished, and the printing and binding of the laws, journals, and department reports, and other printing and binding, and the repairing and furnishing of the halls and rooms used for the meeting of the Legislature and its committees shall be performed under con-fact, to be given to the lowest responsible bidder, below such maximum price and under such regulations as may be prescribed by law. No member or officer of any department of the Government shall be in any way interested in any such contract; and all such contracts shall be subject to the approval of the governor and State treasurer.

Sec. 32. Except as otherwise provided in this constitution, no law shall extend the term of any public officer or increase or diminish his salary or emolument after his election or appointment; but this shall not be construed to forbid the Legislature from fixing the salaries or emoluments of those officers first elected or appointed under this constitution, if such salaries or emoluments are not fixed by its provisions.

Sec. 33. All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the house of representatives; but the senate may propose amendments, as in case of other bills.

Sec. 34. The general appropriation bill shall embrace nothing but appropriations for the ordinary expenses of the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the State, interest on the public debt, and for public schools. All other appropriations shall be made by separate bills, each embracing but one subject.

Sec. 35. Except for interest on public debt, money shall be paid out of the treasury only on appropriations made by the Legislature, and in no case otherwise than upon warrant drawn by the proper officer in pursuance of law.

Sec. 36. No appropriation shall be made for charitable, industrial, educational, or benevolent purposes to any person, corporation, or community not under the absolute control of the State, nor to any denominational or sectarian institution or association.

Sec. 37. The Legislature shall not delegate to any special commissioner, private corporation, or association any power to make, supervise, or interfere with any municipal improvements, moneys, property, or effects, whether held in trust or otherwise, to levy taxes or to perform any municipal functions whatever.

Sec. 38. No act of the Legislature shall authorize the investment of trust funds by executors, administrators, guardians, or trustees in the bonds or stock of any private corporation.

Sec. 39. The Legislature shall have no power to pass any law authorizing the State or any county in the State to contract any debt or obligation in the construction of any railroad or give or loan its credit to or in aid of the construction of the same.

Sec. 40. No obligation or liability of any person, association, or corporation, held or owned by the State or any municipal corporation therein, shall ever be exchanged, transferred, remitted, released, or postponed, or in any way diminished by the Legislature; nor shall such liability or obligation be extinguished, except by the payment thereof into the proper treasury.

Sec. 41. Every order, resolution, or vote in which the concurrence of both houses may be necessary, except on the question of adjournment, or relating solely to the transaction of the business of the two houses, shall be presented to the governor, and before it shall take effect be approved by him, or, being disapproved, be repassed by two-thirds of both houses, as prescribed in the case of a bill.

Sec. 42. If any person elected to either house of the Legislature shall offer or promise to give his vote or influence in favor of or against any measure or proposition pending or to be introduced into the Legislature, in consideration or upon condition that any other person elected to the same Legislature will give or promise or assent to give his vote or influence in favor of or against any other measure or proposition pending or proposed to be introduced into such Legislature, the person making such offer or promise shall be deemed guilty of solicitation of bribery. If any member of the Legislature shall give his vote or influence for or against any measure or proposition pending or to be introduced in such Legislature, or offer, promise, or assent thereto, upon condition that any other member will give or will promise or assent to give his vote or influence in favor of or against any other measure or proposition pending or to be introduced in such Legislature, or in consideration that any other member has given his vote or influence for or against any other measure or proposition in such Legislature, he shall be deemed guilty of bribery, and any member of the Legislature or person elected thereto who shall be guilty of either of such offenses shall be expelled and shall not thereafter be eligible to the Legislature, and on conviction thereof in the civil courts shall be liable to such further penalty as may be prescribed by law.

Sec. 43. Any person who shall directly or indirectly offer, give, or promise any money or thing of value, testimonial, privilege, or personal advantage to any executive or judicial officer or member of the Legislature, to influence him in the performance of any of his official duties, shall be deemed guilty of bribery and be punished in such manner as shall be provided by law.

Sec. 44. Any person may be compelled to testify in any lawful investigation or judicial proceeding against any person who may be charged with having committed the offense of bribery or corrupt solicitation or practices of solicitation, and shall not be permitted to withhold his testimony upon the ground that it may criminate himself or subject him to public infamy; but such testimony shall not afterwards be used against him in any judicial proceeding, except for perjury in giving such testimony, and any person convicted of either of the offenses aforesaid shall, as part of the punishment therefor, be disqualified from holding any office or position of honor, trust, or profit in this State.

Sec. 45. The offense of corrupt solicitation of members of the legislature or of public officers of the State, or of any municipal division, thereof, and the occupation or practice of solicitation of such members or officers to influence their official action, shall be defined by law and shall be punishable by fine and imprisonment.

Sec. 46. A member who has a personal or private interest in any measure or bill proposed or pending before the legislature shall disclose the fact to the house of which he is a member and shall not vote thereon.

APPORTIONMENT.

SECTION 1. One Representative in the Congress of the United States shall be elected from the State at large the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, 1890, and thereafter at such times and places and in such manner as may be prescribed by law. When a new apportionment shall be made by Congress the Legislature shall divide the State into Congressional districts accordingly.

Sec. 2. The Legislature shall provide by law for an enumeration of the inhabitants of the State in the year 1895, and every tenth year thereafter, and at the session next following such enumeration, and also at the session next following an enumeration made by the authority of the United States, shall revise and adjust the apportionment for senators and representatives on a basis of such enumeration according to ratios to be fixed by law.

Sec. 3. Representative districts may be altered from time to time as public convenience may require. When a representative district shall be composed of two or more counties they shall be contiguous, and the districts as compact as may be. No county shall be divided in the formation of representative districts.

Sec. 4. Until an apportionment of senators and representatives as otherwise provided by law they shall be divided among the several counties of the State in the following manner.

Albany County, two senators and five representatives.
Carbon County, two senators and five representatives.
Converse County, one senator and three representatives.
Crook County, one senator and two representatives.
Fremont County, one senator and two representatives.
Laramie County, three senators and six representatives.

Johnson County, one senator and two representatives.
Sheridan County, one senator and two representatives.
Sweetwater County, two senators and three representatives.
Uinta County, two senators and three representatives.

ARTICLE No. IV.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

SECTION 1. The executive power shall be vested in a governor, who shall hold his office for the term of four (4) years and until his successor is elected and duly qualified.

Sec. 2. No person shall be eligible to the office of governor unless he be a citizen of the United States and a qualified elector of the State, who has attained the age of thirty years, and who has resided five years next preceding the election within the State or Territory, nor shall he be eligible to any other office during the term for which he was elected.

Sec. 3. The governor shall be elected by the qualified electors of the State at the time and place of choosing members of the Legislature. The person having the highest number of votes for governor shall be declared elected, but if two or more shall have an equal and highest number of votes for governor, the two houses of the Legislature at its next regular session shall forthwith, by joint ballot, choose one of such persons for said office. The returns of the election for governor shall be made in such manner as shall be prescribed by law.

Sec. 4. The governor shall be commander-in-chief of the military forces of the State, except when they are called into the service of the United States, and may call out the same to execute the laws, suppress insurrection, and repel invasion. He shall have power to convene the Legislature on extraordinary occasions. He shall, at the commencement of each session, communicate to the Legislature, by message, information of the condition of the State, and recommend such measures as he shall deem expedient. He shall transact all necessary business with the officers of the Government, civil and military. He shall expedite all such measures as may be resolved upon by the Legislature and shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed.

Sec. 5. The governor shall have power to remit fines and forfeitures, to grant reprieves, commutations, and pardons after conviction, for all offenses except treason and cases of impeachment; but the Legislature may by law regulate the manner in which the remission of fines, pardons, commutations, and reprieves may be applied for. Upon conviction for treason he shall have power to suspend the execution of sentence until the case is reported to the Legislature at its next regular session, when the Legislature shall either pardon or commute the sentence, direct the execution of the sentence, or grant further reprieve. He shall communicate to the Legislature at each regular session each case of remission of fine, reprieve, commutation, or pardon granted by him, stating the name of the convict, the crime for which he was convicted, the sentence and its date, and the date of the remission, commutation, pardon, or reprieve, with his reasons for granting the same.

Sec. 6. If the governor be impeached, displaced, resign, or die, or from mental or physical disease or otherwise become incapable of performing the duties of his office or be absent from the State, the secretary of state shall act as governor until the vacancy is filled or the disability removed.

Sec. 7. When any office from any cause becomes vacant and no mode is provided by the constitution or law for filling such vacancy, the governor shall have power to fill the same by appointment.

Sec. 8. Every bill which has passed the Legislature shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the governor. If he approve, he shall sign; but, if not, he shall return it with his objections to the house in which it originated, which shall enter the objections at large upon the journal and proceed to reconsider it. If after such reconsideration, two-thirds of the members elected agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other house, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if it be approved by two-thirds of the members elected, it shall become a law; but in all such cases the vote of both houses shall be determined by the yeas and nays, and the names of the members voting for and against the bill shall be entered upon the journal of each house, respectively. If any bill is not returned by the governor within three days (Sundays excepted) after its presentation to him, the same shall be a law, unless the Legislature, by its adjournment, prevent its return, in which case it shall be a law unless he shall file the same, with his objections, in the office of the secretary of the state within fifteen days after such adjournment.

Sec. 9. The governor shall have power to disapprove of any item or items or part or parts of any bill making appropriations of money or property embracing distinct items, and the part or parts of the bill approved shall be the law and the item or items and part or parts disapproved shall be void unless enacted in the following manner: If the Legislature be in session he shall transmit to the house in which the bill originated a copy of the item or items, or part or parts thereof disapproved, together with his objections thereto, and the items or parts objected to shall be separately reconsidered, and each item or part shall then take the same course as is prescribed for the passage of bills over the executive veto.

Sec. 10. Any governor of this State who asks, receives, or agrees to receive any bribe upon any understanding that his official opinion, judgment, or action shall be influenced thereby, or who gives or offers or promises his official influence in consideration that any member of the Legislature shall give his official vote or influence on any particular side of any question or matter upon which he is required to act in his official capacity, or who menaces any member by the threatened use of his veto power, or who offers or promises any member that he, the governor, will appoint any particular person or persons to any office created or thereafter to be created, in consideration that any member shall give his official vote or influence on any matter pending or thereafter to be introduced into either house of said Legislature, or who threatens any member that he, the governor, will remove any person or persons from office or position with intent in any manner to influence the action of said member, shall be punished in the manner now or that may hereafter be provided by law, and upon conviction thereof shall forfeit all right to hold or exercise any office of trust or honor in this State.

Sec. 11. There shall be chosen by the qualified electors of the State, at the times and places of choosing members of the Legislature, a secretary of state, and auditor, treasurer, and superintendent of public instruction, who shall have attained the age of twenty-five years, respectively, shall be citizens of the United States, and shall have the qualifications of State electors. They shall severally hold their offices at the seat of government for the term of four years and until their successors are elected and duly qualified, but no person shall be eligible for the office of treasurer for four years after the expiration of the term for which he was elected. The Legislature may provide for such other State officers as are deemed necessary.

Sec. 12. The powers and duties of the secretary of state, of State auditor, treasurer, and superintendent of public instruction shall be as prescribed by law.

Sec. 13. Until otherwise provided by law, the governor shall receive an annual salary of $2,500, the secretary of state, State auditor, State treasurer, and superintendent of public instruction shall each receive an annual salary of $2,000, and the salaries of any of the said officers shall not be increased or diminished during the period for which they were elected, and all fees and profits arising from any of the said offices shall be covered into the State treasury.

Sec. 14. The Legislature shall provide for a State examiner, who shall be appointed by the governor and confirmed by the senate. His duty shall be to examine the accounts of the State treasurer, supreme court clerks, district court clerks, and all county treasurers, and treasurers of such other public institutions as the law may require, and shall perform such other duties as the Legislature may prescribe. He shall report at least once a year, and oftener if required, to such officers as are designated by the Legislature. His compensation shall be fixed by law.

Sec. 15. There shall be a seal of State which shall be called the "Great seal of the State of Wyoming;" it shall be kept by the secretary of state and used by him officially as directed by law.

Sec. 16. The seal of the Territory of Wyoming as now used shall be the seal of the State until otherwise provided by law.

ARTICLE NO. V.

JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT.

SECTION 1. The judicial power of the State shall be vested in the senate, sitting as a court of impeachment, in a supreme court, district courts, justices of the peace, courts of arbitration, and such courts as the Legislature may, by general law, establish for incorporated cities or incorporated towns.

Sec. 2. The supreme court shall have general appellate jurisdiction, co-extensive with the State, in both civil and criminal cases, and shall have a general superintending control over all inferior courts, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by law.

Sec. 3. The supreme court shall have original jurisdiction in quo warranto and mandamus as to all State officers, and in habeas corpus. The supreme court shall also have power to issue writs of mandamus, review, prohibition, habeas corpus, certiorari, and other writs necessary and proper to the complete exercise of its appellate and review jurisdiction. Each of the judges shall have power to issue writs of habeas corpus to any part of the State upon petition by or on behalf of a person held in actual custody, and may make such writs returnable before himself or before the supreme court or before any district court of the State or any judge thereof.

Sec. 4. The supreme court of the State shall consist of three justices who shall be elected by the qualified electors of the State at a general State election at the times and places at which State officers are elected; and their term of office shall be eight (8) years, commencing from and after the first Monday in January next succeeding their election; and the justices elected at the first election after this constitution shall go into effect shall, at their first meeting provided by law, so classify themselves by lot that one of them shall go out of office at the end of four years and one at the end of six years and one at the end of eight years from the commencement of their term, and an entry of such classification shall be made in the record of the court and signed by them, and a duplicate thereof shall be filed in the office of the secretary of state. The justice having the shortest term to serve, and not holding his office by appointment or election to fill a vacancy, shall be the chief justice and shall preside at all terms of the supreme court, and, in case of his absence, the justice having in like manner the next shortest term to serve shall preside in his stead. If a vacancy occur in the office of a justice of the supreme court, the governor shall appoint a person to hold the office until the election and qualification of a person to fill the unexpired term occasioned by such vacancy, which election shall take place at the next succeeding general election. The first election of the justices shall be at the first general election after this constitution shall go into effect.

Sec. 5. A majority of the justices of the supreme court shall be necessary to constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

Sec. 6. In case a judge of the supreme court shall be in any way interested in a cause brought before such court, the remaining judges of said court shall call one of the district judges to sit with them on the hearing of said cause.

Sec. 7. At least two terms of the supreme court shall be held annually at the seat of the government at such times as may be provided by law.

Sec. 8. No person shall be eligible to the office of justice of the supreme court unless he be learned in the law, have been in actual practice at least nine years, or whose service on the bench of any court of record, when added to the time he may have practiced law, shall be equal to nine years, be at least thirty years of age and a citizen of the United States, nor unless he shall have resided in this State or Territory at least three years.

Sec. 9. There shall be a clerk of the supreme court, who shall be appointed by the justices of said court and shall hold his office during their pleasure, and whose duties and emoluments shall be as provided by law.

Sec. 10. The district court shall have original jurisdiction of all causes, both at law and in equity, and in all criminal cases, of all matters of probate and insolvency, and of such special cases and proceedings as are not otherwise provided for. The district court shall also have original jurisdiction in all cases and of all proceedings in which jurisdiction shall not have been by law vested exclusively in some other court; and said court shall have the power of naturalization and to issue papers therefor. They shall have such appellate jurisdiction in such cases arising in justices' and other inferior courts in their respective counties as may be prescribed by law. Said courts and their judges shall have power to issue writs of mandamus, quo warranto, review, certiorari, prohibition, injunction, and writs of habeas corpus, on petition by or on behalf of any person in actual custody in their respective districts.

Sec. 11. The judges of the district courts may hold courts for each other and shall do so when required by law.

Sec. 12. No person shall be eligible to the office of judge of the district court unless he be learned in the law, be at least twenty-eight years of age, and a citizen of the United States, nor unless he shall have resided in the State or Territory of Wyoming at least two years next preceding his election.

Sec. 13. There shall be a clerk of the district court in each organized county in which a court is holden who shall be elected, or, in case of vacancy, appointed in such manner and with such duties and compensation as may be prescribed by law.

Sec. 14. The Legislature shall provide by law for the appointment by the several district courts of one or more district court commissioners (who shall be persons learned in the law) in each organized county in which a district court is holden; such commissioners shall have authority to perform such chamber business, in the absence of the district judge from the county or upon his written statement filed with the papers that it is improper for him to act, as may be prescribed by law, to take depositions, and perform such other duties, and receive such compensation as shall be prescribed by law.

Sec. 15. The style of all process shall be "The State of Wyoming." All prosecutions shall be carried on in the name and by the authority of the State of Wyoming, and conclude "against the peace and dignity of the State of Wyoming."

Sec. 16. No duties shall be imposed by law upon the supreme court or any of the judges thereof except such as are judicial, nor shall any of the judges thereof exercise any power of appointment except as herein provided.

Sec. 17. The judges of the supreme and district courts shall receive such compensation for their services as may be prescribed by law, which compensation shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which a judge shall have been elected, and the salary of a judge of the supreme or district court shall be as may be prescribed by law.

Sec. 18. Writs of errors and appeals may be allowed from the decisions of the district courts to the supreme court under such regulations as may be prescribed by law.

Sec. 19. Until otherwise provided by law, the State shall be divided into three judicial districts, in each of which there shall be elected at general elections, by the electors thereof, one judge of the district court therein, whose term shall be six years from the first Monday in January succeeding his election, and until his successor is duly qualified.

Sec. 20. Until otherwise provided by law, said judicial districts shall be constituted as follows:

District No. 1 shall consist of the counties of Laramie, Converse, and Crook. District No. 2 shall consist of the counties of Albany, Johnson, and Sheridan. District No. 3 shall consist of the counties of Carbon, Sweetwater, Uinta, and Fremont.

Sec. 21. The Legislature may from time to time increase the number of said judicial districts and the judges thereof, but such increase or change in the boundaries of the districts shall not work the removal of any judge from his office during the term for which he may have been elected or appointed; provided the number of districts and district judges shall not exceed four until the taxable valuation of property in the State shall exceed $200,000,000.

Sec. 22. The Legislature shall provide by law for the election of justices of the peace in each organized county within the State. But the number of said justices to be elected in each organized county shall be limited by law to such number as shall be necessary for the proper administration of justice. The justices of the peace herein provided for shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the district court in all civil actions where the amount in controversy, exclusive of costs, does not exceed $300, and they shall have such jurisdiction to hear and determine cases of misdemeanor as may be provided by law, but in no case shall said justices of the peace have jurisdiction when the boundaries of or title to real estate shall come into question.

Sec. 23. Appeals shall lie from the final decisions of justices of the peace and police magistrates in such cases and pursuant to such regulations as may be prescribed by law.

Sec. 24. The time of holding courts in the several counties of a district shall be as prescribed by law, and the Legislature shall make provisions for attaching unorganized counties or territory to organized counties for judicial purposes.

Sec. 25. No judge of the supreme or district court shall act as attorney or counselor at law.

Sec. 26. Until the Legislature shall provide by law for fixing the terms of courts the judges of the supreme court and district courts shall fix the terms thereof.

Sec. 27. No judge of the supreme or district court shall be elected or appointed to any other than judicial offices or be eligible thereto during the term for which he was elected or appointed such judge.

Sec. 28. The Legislature shall establish courts of arbitration, whose duty it shall be to hear and determine all differences and controversies between organizations or associations of laborers and their employers, which shall be submitted to them in such manner as the Legislature may provide.

Sec. 29. The Legislature may provide by law for the voluntary submission of differences to arbitrators for determination, and said arbitrators shall have such powers and duties as may be prescribed by law, but they shall have no power to render judgment to be obligatory on parties, unless they voluntarily submit their matters of difference and agree to abide the judgment of such arbitrators.

Sec. 30. Appeals from decisions of compulsory boards of arbitration shall be allowed to the supreme court of the State, and the manner of taking such appeals shall be prescribed by law.

ARTICLE NO. VI.

SUFFRAGE.

SECTION 1. The rights of the citizens of the State of Wyoming to vote and hold office shall not be denied or abridged on account of sex. Both male and female citizens of this State shall equally enjoy all civil, political, and religious rights and privileges.

Sec. 2. Every citizen of the United States of the age of twenty-one years and upwards, who has resided in the State or Territory one year and in the county wherein such residence is located sixty days next preceding any election, shall be entitled to vote at such election, except as herein otherwise provided.

Sec. 3. Electors shall in all cases, except treason, felony, or breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest on the days of election during their attendance at elections and going to and returning therefrom.

Sec. 4. No elector shall be obliged to perform militia duty on the day of election, except in time of war or public danger.

Sec. 5. No person shall be deemed a qualified elector of this State unless such person be a citizen of the United States.

Sec. 6. All idiots, insane persons, and persons convicted of infamous crimes, unless restored to civil rights, are excluded from the elective franchise.

Sec. 7. No elector shall be deemed to have lost his residence in the State by reason of his absence on business of the United States, or of this State, or in the military or naval service of the United States.

Sec. 8. No soldier, seaman, or marine in the Army or Navy of the United States shall be deemed a resident of this State in consequence of his being stationed therein.

Sec. 9. No person shall have the right to vote who shall not be able to read the constitution of this State. The provisions of this section shall not apply to any person prevented by physical disability from complying with its requirements.

Sec. 10. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to deprive any person of the right to vote who has such right at the time of the adoption of this constitution, unless disqualified by the restrictions of section 6 of this article. After the expiration of five years from the time of the adoption of this constitution none but citizens of the United States shall have the right to vote.

Sec. 11. All elections shall be by ballot. The Legislature shall provide by law that the names of all candidates for the same office, to be voted for at any election, shall be printed on the same ballot at public expense, and on election day to be delivered to the voters within the polling place by sworn public officials, and only such ballots so delivered shall be received and counted. But no voter shall be deprived of the privilege of writing upon the ballot used the name of any other candidate. All voters shall be guaranteed absolute privacy in the preparation of their ballots, and the secrecy of their ballot shall be made compulsory.

Sec. 12. No person qualified to be an elector of the State of Wyoming shall be allowed to vote at any general or special election hereafter to be holden in the State until he or she shall have registered as a voter according to law, unless the failure to register is caused by sickness or absence, for which provision shall be made by law. The Legislature of the State shall enact such laws as will carry into effect the provisions of this section, which enactment shall be subject to amendment, but shall never be repealed; but this section shall not apply to the first election held under this constitution.

ELECTIONS.

Sec. 13. The Legislature shall pass laws to secure the purity of elections and guard against abuses of the elective franchise.

Sec. 14. The Legislature shall, by general law, designate the courts by which the several classes of election contests not otherwise provided for shall be tried, and regulate the manner of trial and all matters incident thereto; but no such law shall apply to any contest arising out of an election held before its passage.

Sec. 15. No person except a qualified elector shall be elected or appointed to any civil or military office in the State.

Sec. 16. Every person holding any civil office under the State or any municipality therein shall, unless removed according to law, exercise the duties of such office until his successor is duly qualified, but this shall not apply to members of the Legislature, nor to members of any board of assembly, two or more of whom are elected at the same time. The Legislature may by law provide for suspending any officer in his functions, pending impeachment or prosecution for misconduct in office.

QUALIFICATIONS FOR OFFICE.

SEC. 17. All general elections for State and county officers, for members of the house of representatives and the senate of the State of Wyoming, and Representatives to the Congress of the United States, shall be held on the Tuesday next following the first Monday in November of each even year. Special elections may be held as now or as may hereafter be provided by law. All State and county officers elected at a general election shall enter upon their respective duties on the first Monday in January next following the date of their election, or as soon thereafter as may be possible.

SEC. 18. All officers whose election is not provided for in this constitution shall be elected or appointed as may be directed by law.

SEC. 19. No member of Congress from this State, nor any person holding or exercising any office or appointment of trust or profit under the United States, shall at the same time hold or exercise any office in this State to which a salary, fees, or perquisites shall be attached. The Legislature may by law declare what offices are incompatible.

OATH OF OFFICE.

SEC. 20. Senators and representatives and all judicial, State, and county officers shall, before entering upon the duties of their respective offices, take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation: "I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support, obey, and defend the Constitution of the United States and the constitution of this State, and that I will discharge the duties of my office with fidelity; that I have not paid or contributed, or promised to pay or contribute, either directly or indirectly, any money or other valuable thing, to procure my nomination or election (or appointment), except for necessary and proper expenses expressly authorized by law; that I have not, knowingly, violated any election law of the State or procured it to be done by others in my behalf; that I will not knowingly receive, directly or indirectly, any money or other valuable thing for the performance or non-performance of any act or duty pertaining to my office, other than the compensation allowed by law."

SEC. 21. The foregoing oath shall be administered by some person authorized to administer oaths, and in the case of State officers and judges of the supreme court shall be filed in the office of the secretary of state, and in the case of other judicial and county officers in the office of the clerk of the county in which the same is taken; any person refusing to take said oath or affirmation shall forfeit his office, and any person who shall be convicted of having sworn or affirmed falsely, or of having violated said oath or affirmation, shall be guilty of perjury, and be forever disqualified from holding any office of trust or profit within this State. The oath to members of the senate and house of representatives shall be administered by one of the judges of the supreme court or a justice of the peace, in the hall of the house to which the members shall be elected.

ARTICLE No. VII.

EDUCATION.

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall provide for the establishment and maintenance of a complete and uniform system of public instruction, embracing free elementary schools of every needed kind and grade, a university with such technical and professional departments as the public good may require and the means of the State allow, and such other institutions as may be necessary.

SEC. 2. The following are declared to be perpetual funds for school purposes, of which the annual income only can be appropriated, to wit: Such per centum as has been or may hereafter be granted by Congress on the sale of lands in this State; all moneys arising from the sale or lease of sections Nos. 16 and 35 in each township in the State, and the lands selected or that may be selected in lieu thereof; the proceeds of all lands that have been or may hereafter be granted to this State, where, by the terms and conditions of the grant, the same are not to be otherwise appropriated; the net proceeds of lands and other property and effects that may come to the State by escheat or forfeiture, or from unclaimed dividends or distributive shares of the estates of deceased persons; all moneys, stocks, bonds, lands, and other property now belonging to the common-school fund.

SEC. 3. To the sources of revenue above mentioned shall be added all other grants, gifts, and devices that have been or may hereafter be made to this State and not otherwise appropriated by the terms of the grant, gift, or device.

SEC. 4. All moneys, stocks, bonds, lands, and other property belonging to a county school fund, except such moneys and property as may be provided by law for current use in aid of public schools, shall belong to and be securely invested and sacredly preserved in the several counties as a county public-school fund, the income of which shall be appropriated exclusively to the use and support of free public schools in the several counties of the State.

SEC. 5. All fines and penalties under general laws of the State shall belong to the public-school fund of the respective counties and be paid over to the custodians of such funds for the current support of the public schools therein.

SEC. 6. All funds belonging to the State for public-school purposes, the interest and income of which only are to be used, shall be deemed trust funds in the care of the State, which shall keep them for the exclusive benefit of the public schools, and shall make good any losses that may in any manner occur, so that the same shall remain forever inviolate and undiminished. None of such funds shall ever be invested or loaned except on the bonds issued by school districts, or registered county bonds of the State, or State securities of this State, or of the United States.

SEC. 7. The income arising from the funds mentioned in the preceding section, together with all the rents of the unsold school lands and such other means as the legislature may provide, shall be exclusively applied to the support of free schools in every county in the State.

SEC. 8. Provision shall be made by general law for the equitable distribution of such income among the several counties according to the number of children of school age in each; which several counties shall in like manner distribute the proportion of said fund by them received respectively to the several school districts embraced therein. But no appropriation shall be made from said fund to any district for the year in which a school has not been maintained for at least three months; nor shall any portion of any public-school fund ever be used to support or assist any private school, or any school, academy, seminary, college, or other institution of learning controlled by any church or sectarian organization or religious denomination whatsoever.

SEC. 9. The Legislature shall make such further provision, by taxation or otherwise, as with the income arising from the general school fund will create and maintain a thorough and efficient system of public schools, adequate to the proper instruction of all the youth of the State, between the ages of six and twenty-one years, free of charge; and in view of such provision so made, the Legislature shall require that every child of sufficient physical and mental ability shall attend a public school during the period between six and eighteen years for a time equivalent to three years, unless educated by other means.

SEC. 10. In none of the public schools so established and maintained shall distinction or discrimination be made on account of sex, race, or color.

SEC. 11. Neither the Legislature nor the superintendent of public instruction shall have power to prescribe text-books to be used in the public schools.

SEC. 12. No sectarian instruction, qualifications, or tests shall be imparted, exacted, applied, or in any manner tolerated in the schools of any grade or character controlled by the State, nor shall attendance be required at any religious service therein, nor shall any sectarian tenets or doctrines be taught or favored in any public school or institution that may be established under this constitution.

SEC. 14. The general supervision of the public schools shall be intrusted to the State superintendent of public instruction, whose powers and duties shall be prescribed by law.

THE UNIVERSITY.

SEC. 15. The establishment of the University of Wyoming is hereby confirmed, and said institution, with its several departments, is hereby declared to be the University of the State of Wyoming. All lands which have been heretofore granted or which may be granted hereafter by Congress unto the university as such, or in aid of the instruction to be given in any of its departments, with all other grants, donations, or devices for said university, or for any of its departments, shall vest in said university, and be exclusively used for the purposes for which they were granted, donated, or devised. The said lands may be leased on terms approved by the land commissioners, but may not be sold on terms not approved by Congress.

SEC. 16. The university shall be equally open to students of both sexes, irrespective of race or color; and, in order that the instruction furnished may be as nearly free as possible, any amount in addition to the income from its grants of lands and other sources above mentioned, necessary to its support and maintenance in a condition of full efficiency, shall be raised by taxation or otherwise, under provisions of the Legislature.

SEC. 17. The Legislature shall provide by law for the management of the university, its lands and other property, by a board of trustees, consisting of not less than seven members, to be appointed by the governor, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, and the president of the university and the superintendent of public instruction as members ex officio, as such having the right to speak, but not to vote. The duties and powers of the trustees shall be prescribed by law.

CHARITABLE AND PENAL INSTITUTIONS.

SEC. 18. Such charitable, reformatory, and penal institutions as the claims of humanity and the public good may require shall be established and supported by the State in such manner as the Legislature may prescribe. They shall be under the general supervision of a State board of charities and reform, whose duties and powers shall be prescribed by law.

SEC. 19. The property of all charitable and penal institutions belonging to the Territory of Wyoming shall, upon the adoption of this constitution, become the property of the State of Wyoming, and such of said institutions as are then in actual operation shall thereafter have the supervision of the board of charities and reform, as provided in the last preceding section of this article, under provisions of the Legislature.

PUBLIC HEALTH AND MORALS.

SEC. 20. As the health and morality of the people are essential to their well-being and to the peace and permanency of the State, it shall be the duty of the Legislature to protect and promote these vital interests by such measures for the encouragement of temperance and virtue and such restrictions upon vice and immorality of every sort as are deemed necessary to the public welfare.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

SEC. 21. All public buildings and other property belonging to the Territory shall, upon the adoption of this constitution, become the property of the State of Wyoming.

SEC. 22. The construction, care, and preservation of all public buildings of the State not under the control of the board or officers of public institutions by authority of law shall be intrusted to such officers or boards, and under such regulations as shall be prescribed by law.

SEC. 23. The Legislature shall have no power to change or to locate the seat of government, the State university, insane asylum, or State penitentiary, but may, after the expiration of ten years after the adoption of this constitution, provide by law for submitting the question of the permanent locations thereof, respectively, to the qualified electors of the State, at some general election; and a majority of all votes upon said question cast at said election shall be necessary to determine the location thereof; but for said period of ten years, and until the same are respectively and permanently located, as herein provided, the location of the seat of government and said institutions shall be as follows:

The seat of government shall be located at the city of Cheyenne, in the county of Laramie. The State university shall be located at the city of Laramie, in the county of Albany. The insane asylum shall be located at the town of Evanston, in the county of Uinta. The penitentiary shall be located at the city of Rawlins, in the county of Carbon; but the Legislature may provide by law that said penitentiary may be converted to other public uses. The Legislature shall not locate any other public institutions except under general laws and by vote of the people.

ARTICLE No. VIII.

IRRIGATION AND WATER RIGHTS.

SECTION 1. The water of all natural streams, springs, lakes, or other collections of still water within the boundaries of the State are hereby declared to be the property of the State.

SEC. 2. There shall be constituted a board of control, to be composed of the State engineer and superintendents of the water divisions, which shall, under such regulations as may be prescribed by law, have the supervision of the waters of the State and of their appropriation, distribution, and diversion, and of the various officers connected therewith, its decision to be subject to review by the courts of the State.

SEC. 3. Priority of appropriation for beneficial uses shall give the better right. No appropriation shall be denied except when such denial is demanded by the public interests.

SEC. 4. The Legislature shall, by law, divide the State into four water divisions and provide for the appointment of superintendents thereof.

SEC. 5. There shall be a State engineer who shall be appointed by the governor of the State and confirmed by the senate; he shall hold his office for the term of six years, or until his successor shall have been appointed and shall have qualified. He shall be president of the board of control, and shall have general supervision of the waters of the State and of the officers connected with its distribution. No person shall be appointed to this position who has not such theoretical knowledge and such practical experience and skill as shall fit him for the position.

ARTICLE No. IX.

MINES AND MINING.

SECTION 1. There shall be established and maintained the office of inspector of mines, the duties and salary of which shall be prescribed by law. When said office shall be established the governor shall, with the advice and consent of the senate, appoint thereto a person proven in the manner provided by law to be competent and practical, whose term of office shall be two years.

SEC. 2. The Legislature shall provide by law for the proper development, ventilation, drainage, and operation of all mines in this State.

SEC. 3. No boy under the age of fourteen years and no woman or girl of any age shall be employed or permitted to be in or about any coal, iron, or other dangerous mines for the purpose of employment therein: Provided, however, This provision shall not affect the employment of a boy or female of suitable age in an office or in the performance of clerical work at such mine or colliery.

SEC. 4. For any injury to person or property caused by willful failure to comply with the provisions of this article, or laws passed in pursuance hereof, a right of action shall accrue to the party injured, for the damage sustained thereby, and in all cases in this State, whenever the death of a person shall be caused by wrongful act, neglect, or default, such as would, if death had not ensued, have entitled the party injured to maintain an action to recover damages in respect thereof, the person who or the corporation which would have been liable, if death had not ensued, shall be liable to an action for damages notwithstanding the death of the person injured, and the Legislature shall provide by law at its first session for the manner in which the right of action in respect thereto shall be enforced.

SEC. 5. The Legislature may provide that the science of mining and metallurgy be taught in one of the institutions of learning under the patronage of the State.

SEC. 6. There shall be a State geologist, who shall be appointed by the governor of the State, with the advice and consent of the senate. He shall hold his office for a term of six years, or until his successor shall have been appointed and shall have qualified. His duties and compensation shall be prescribed by law. No person shall be appointed to this position unless he has such theoretical knowledge and such practical experience and skill as shall fit him for the position; said State geologist shall ex officio perform the duties of inspector of mines until otherwise provided by law.

ARTICLE No. X.

CORPORATIONS.

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall provide for the organization of corporations by general law. All laws relating to corporations may be altered, amended, or repealed by the Legislature at any time when necessary for the public good and general welfare, and all corporations doing business in this State may, as to such business, be regulated, limited, or restrained by law not in conflict with the Constitution of the United States.

SEC. 2. All powers and franchises of corporations are derived from the people and are granted by their agent, the Government, for the public good and general welfare and the right and duty of the State to control and regulate them for these purposes is hereby declared. The power, rights, and privileges of any and all corporations may be forfeited by willful neglect or abuse thereof. The police power of the State is supreme over all corporations as well as individuals.

SEC. 3. All existing charters, franchises, special or exclusive privileges under which an actual and bona fide organization shall not have taken place for the purpose for which formed, and which shall not have been maintained in good faith to the time of the adoption of this constitution shall thereafter have no validity.

SEC. 4. No law shall be enacted limiting the amount of damages to be recovered for causing the injury or death of any person. Any contract or agreement with any employe, waiving any right to recover damages for causing the death or injury of any employe, shall be void.

SEC. 5. No corporation organized under the laws of Wyoming Territory or any other jurisdiction than this State shall be permitted to transact business in this State until it shall have accepted the constitution of this State and filed such acceptance in accordance with the laws thereof.

SEC. 6. No corporation shall have power to engage in more than one general line or department of business, which line of business shall be distinctly specified in its charter of incorporation.

SEC. 7. All corporations engaged in the transportation of persons, property, mineral oils, and mineral products, news or intelligence, including railroads, telegraphs, express companies, pipe lines, and telephones, are declared to be common carriers.

SEC. 8. There shall be no consolidation or combination of corporations of any kinds whatever to prevent competition, to control or influence productions or prices thereof, or in any manner to interfere with the public good and general welfare.

SEC. 9. The right of eminent domain shall never be so abridged or construed as to prevent the Legislature from taking property and franchises of incorporated companies and subjecting them to public use the same as the property of individuals.

SEC. 10. The Legislature shall provide by suitable legislation for the organization of mutual and co-operative associations or corporations.

RAILROADS.

SECTION 1. Any railroad corporation or association organized for the purpose shall have the right to construct and operate a railroad between any points within this State and to connect at the State line with railroads of other States. Every railroad shall have the right with its road to intersect, connect with, or cross any other railroad, and all railroads shall receive and transport each other's passengers, and tonnage and cars, loaded or empty, without delay or discrimination.

SEC. 2. Railroads and telegraph lines heretofore constructed or that may hereafter be constructed in this State are hereby declared public highways and common carriers, and as such must be made by law to extend the same equality and impartiality to all who use them, excepting employes and their families and ministers of the gospel, whether individuals or corporations.

SEC. 3. Every railroad corporation or association operating a line of railroad within this State shall annually make a report to the auditor of state of its business within this State, in such form as the Legislature may prescribe.

SEC. 4. Exercise of the power and right of eminent domain shall never be so construed or abridged as to prevent the taking by the Legislature of property and franchises of incorporated companies and subjecting them to public use the same as property of individuals.

SEC. 5. Neither the State nor any county, township, school district, or municipality shall loan or give its credit or make donations to or in aid of any railroad or telegraph line: Provided, That this section shall not apply to obligations of any county, city, township, or school district contracted prior to the adoption of this constitution.

SEC. 6. No railroad or other transportation company or telegraph company in existence upon the adoption of this constitution shall derive the benefit of any future legislation without first filing in the office of the secretary of state an acceptance of the provisions of this constitution.

SEC. 7. Any association, corporation, or lessee of the franchises thereof, organized for the purpose, shall have the right to construct and maintain lines of telegraph within this State and to connect the same with other lines.

SEC. 8. No foreign railroad or telegraph line shall do any business within this State without having an agent or agents within each county through which such railroad or telegraph line shall be constructed, upon whom process may be served.

SEC. 9. No railroad company shall construct or operate a railroad within 4 miles of any existing town or city without providing a suitable depot or stopping place at the nearest practicable point for the convenience of said town or city, and stopping all trains doing local business at said stopping place. No railroad company shall deviate from the most practicable line in constructing a railroad for the purpose of avoiding the provisions of this section.

ARTICLE No. XI.

(Transferred to Article No. II.)

ARTICLE No. XII.

COUNTY ORGANIZATION.

SECTION 1. These several counties in the Territory of Wyoming as they shall exist at the time of the admission of said Territory as a State are hereby declared to be the counties of the State of Wyoming.

SEC. 2. The Legislature shall provide by general law for organizing new counties, locating the county seats thereof temporarily, and changing county lines. But no new county shall be formed unless it shall contain within the limits thereof property of the valuation of $2,000,000, as shown by last preceding tax returns, and not then unless the remaining portion of the old county or counties shall each contain property of at least $3,000,000 of assessable valuation; and no new county shall be organized, nor shall any organized county be so reduced as to contain a population of less than 1,500 bona fide inhabitants, and in case any portion of an organized county or counties is stricken off to form a new county, the new county shall assume and be holden for an equitable proportion of the indebtedness of the county or counties so reduced. No county shall be divided unless a majority of the qualified electors of the territory proposed to be cut off voting on the proposition shall vote in favor of the division.

SEC. 3. The Legislature shall provide by general law for changing county seats in organized counties, but it shall have no power to remove the county seat of any organized county.

SEC. 4. The Legislature shall provide by general law for a system of township organization and government, which may be adopted by any county whenever a majority of the citizens thereof voting at a general election shall so determine.

SEC. 5. The Legislature shall provide by law for the election of such county officers as may be necessary.

ARTICLE No. XIII.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall provide by general laws for the organization and classification of municipal corporations. The number of such classes shall not exceed four, and the powers of each class shall be defined by general laws, so that no such corporation shall have any powers or be subject to any restrictions other than all corporations of the same class. Cities and towns now existing under special charters or the general laws of the Territory may abandon such charter and reorganize under the general laws of the State.

SEC. 2. No municipal corporation shall be organized without the consent of the majority of the electors residing within the district proposed to be so incorporated, such consent to be ascertained in the manner and under such regulations as may be prescribed by law.

SEC. 3. The Legislature shall restrict the powers of such corporations to levy taxes and assessments, to borrow money and contract debts, so as to prevent the abuse of such power, and no tax or assessment shall be levied or collected or debts contracted by municipal corporations except in pursuance of law for public purposes specified by law.

SEC. 4. No street passenger railway, telegraph, telephone, or electric-light line shall be constructed within the limits of any municipal organization without the consent of its local authorities.

SEC. 5. Municipal corporations shall have the same right as individuals to acquire rights, by prior appropriation and otherwise, to the use of water for domestic and municipal purposes, and the Legislature shall provide by law for the exercise upon the part of incorporated cities, towns, and villages of the right of eminent domain for the purpose of acquiring from prior appropriators, upon the payment of just compensation, such water as may be necessary for the well-being thereof and for domestic uses.

ARTICLE No. XIV.

SALARIES.

SECTION 1. All State, city, county, town, and school officers (excepting justices of the peace and constables in precincts having less than 1,500 population, and excepting court commissioners, boards of arbitration, and notaries public) shall be paid fixed and definite salaries. The Legislature shall, from time to time, fix the amount of such salaries as are not already fixed by this constitution, which shall in all cases be in proportion to the value of the services rendered and the duty performed.

SEC. 2. The Legislature shall provide by law the fees which may be demanded by justices of the peace and constables in precincts having less than 1,500 population, and of court commissioners, boards of arbitration, and notaries public, which fees the said officers shall accept as their full compensation. But all other State, county, city, town, and school officers shall be required by law to keep a true and correct account of all fees collected by them, and to pay the same into the proper treasury when collected, and the officer whose duty it is to collect such fees shall be held responsible, under his bond, for neglect to collect the same: Provided, That in addition to the salary of sheriff they shall be entitled to receive from the party for whom the services are rendered in civil cases such fees as may be prescribed by law.

SEC. 3. The salaries of county officers shall be fixed by law within the following limits, to wit: In counties having an assessed valuation not exceeding $2,000,000, the sheriff shall be paid not more than $1,500 per year. The county clerk shall not be paid more than $1,200 per year. The county and prosecuting attorney shall not be paid more than $1,200 per year. The county treasurer shall not be paid more than $1,000 per year. The county assessor shall not be paid more than $500 per year. The county superintendent of schools shall not be paid more than $500 per year.

In counties having an assessed valuation of more than $2,000,000 and not exceeding $5,000,000, the sheriff shall not be paid more than $2,000 per year. The county clerk shall not be paid more than $1,500 per year. The county assessor shall not be paid more than $1,200 per year. The county and prosecuting attorney shall not be paid more than $1,200 per year. The county superintendent of schools shall not be paid more than $750 per year.

In counties having more than $5,000,000 assessed valuation, the sheriff shall not be paid more than $2,500 per year. The county clerk shall not be paid more than $2,500 per year. The county assessor shall not be paid more than $1,500 per year. The county and prosecuting attorney shall not be paid more than $2,500 per year. The county superintendent of schools shall not be paid more than $1,000 per year. The county surveyor in each county shall receive not to exceed $3 per day for each day actually engaged in the performance of the duties of his office.

SEC. 4. The Legislature shall provide by general law for such deputies as the public necessities may require and shall fix their compensation.

SEC. 5. Any county officers performing the duties usually performed by the officers named in this article shall be considered as referred to by section 3 of this article, regardless of the title by which their offices may hereafter be designated.

SEC. 6. Whenever practicable the Legislature may and, whenever the same can be done without detriment to the public service, shall consolidate offices in State, county, and municipalities, respectively, and whenever so consolidated the duties of such additional office shall be performed under an ex officio title.

ARTICLE No. XV.

TAXATION AND REVENUE.

SECTION 1. All lands and improvements thereon shall be listed for assessment valued for taxation, and assessed separately.

SEC. 2. All coal lands in the State from which coal is not being mined shall be listed for assessment, valued for taxation, and assessed according to value.

SEC. 3. All mines and mining claims from which gold, silver, and other precious metals, soda, salina, coal, mineral oil, or other valuable deposit is or may be produced, shall be taxed in addition to the surface improvements, and, in lieu of taxes on the lands, on the gross product thereof, as may be prescribed by law: Provided, That the product of all mines shall be taxed in proportion to the value thereof.

SEC. 4. For State revenue there shall be levied annually a tax not to exceed 4 mills on the dollar of the assessed valuation of the property in the State, except for the support of State, educational, and charitable institutions, the payment of the State debt, and the interest thereon.

SEC. 5. For county revenue there shall be levied annually a tax not to exceed 12 mills on the dollar for all purposes, including general school tax, exclusive of State revenue, except for the payment of its public debt and the interest thereon. An additional tax of $2 for each person between the ages of twenty-one years and fifty years, inclusive, shall be annually levied for county school purposes.

SEC. 6. No incorporated city or town shall levy a tax to exceed 8 mills on the dollar in any one year, except for the payment of its public debt and the interest thereon.

SEC. 7. Any money belonging to the State or to any county, city, town, village, or other subdivision therein, except as herein otherwise provided, shall, whenever practicable, be deposited in a national bank or banks or in a bank or banks incorporated under the laws of this State: Provided, That the bank or banks in which such money is deposited shall furnish security, to be approved as provided by law, and shall also pay a reasonable rate of interest thereon. Such interest shall accrue to the fund from which it is derived.

SEC. 8. The making of profits, directly or indirectly, out of State, county, city, town, or school-district money or other public fund, or using the same for any purpose not authorized by law, by any public officer, shall be deemed a felony, and shall be punished as provided by law.

SEC. 9. There shall be a State board, composed of the State auditor, treasurer, and secretary of state.

SEC. 10. The duties of the State board shall be as follows: To fix a valuation each year for the assessment of live-stock and to notify the several county boards of equalization of the rate so fixed at least ten days before the day fixed for beginning assessments; to assess at their actual value the franchisees, roadway, road-bed, rails, and rolling-stock, and all other property used in the operation of all railroads and other common carriers, except machine-shops, rolling-mills, and hotels in this State; such assessed valuation shall be apportioned to the counties in which said roads and common carriers are located as a basis for taxation of such property: Provided, That the assessment so made shall not apply to incorporated towns and cities. Said board shall also have power to equalize the valuation on all property in the several counties for the State revenue and such other duties as may be prescribed by law.

SEC. 11. All property, except as in this constitution otherwise provided, shall be uniformly assessed for taxation, and the Legislature shall prescribe such regulations as shall secure a just valuation for taxation of all property, real and personal.

SEC. 12. The property of the United States, the State, counties, cities, towns, school districts, municipal corporations, and public libraries, lots with the buildings thereon used exclusively for religious worship, church parsonages, public cemeteries, shall be exempt from taxation, and such other property as the Legislature may by general law provide.

SEC. 13. No tax shall be levied except in pursuance of law, and every law imposing a tax shall state distinctly the object of the same, to which only it shall be applied.

SEC. 14. The power of taxation shall never be surrendered or suspended by any grant or contract to which the State or any county or other municipal corporation shall be a party.

ARTICLE No. XVI.

PUBLIC INDEBTEDNESS.

SECTION 1. The State of Wyoming shall not, in any manner, create any indebtedness exceeding 1 per cent. on the assessed value of the taxable property in the State, as shown by the last general assessment for taxation preceding, except to suppress insurrection or to provide for the public defense.

SEC. 2. No debt in excess of the taxes for the current year shall in any manner be created in the State of Wyoming, unless the proposition to create such debt shall have been submitted to a vote of the people and by them approved, except to suppress insurrection or to provide for the public defense.

SEC. 3. No county in the State of Wyoming shall in any manner create any indebtedness, exceeding 2 per cent. on the assessed value of taxable property in such county, as shown by the last general assessment, preceding: Provided, however, That any county, city, town, village, or other subdivision thereof in the State of Wyoming may bond its public debt existing at the time of the adoption of this constitution in any sum not exceeding 4 per cent. on the assessed value of the taxable property in such county, city, town, village, or other subdivision, as shown by the last general assessment for taxation.

SEC. 4. No debt in excess of the taxes for the current year shall, in any manner, be created by any county or subdivision thereof, or any city, town, or village, or any subdivision thereof in the State of Wyoming, unless the proposition to create such debt shall have been submitted to a vote of the people thereof and by them approved.

SEC. 5. No city, town, or village, or any subdivision thereof, or any subdivision of any county of the State of Wyoming shall, in any manner, create any indebtedness exceeding 2 per cent. on the assessed value of the taxable property therein: Provided, however, That any city, town, or village may be authorized to create an additional indebtedness, not exceeding 4 per cent. on the assessed value of the taxable property therein as shown by the last preceding general assessment, for purpose of building sewerage therein; debts contracted for supplying water to such city or town are excepted from the operation of this section.

SEC. 6. Neither the State nor any county, city, township, town, school district, or any other political subdivision shall loan or give its credit or make donations to or in aid of any individual, association, or corporation, except for necessary support of the poor, nor subscribe to or become the owner of the capital stock of any association or corporation. The State shall not engage in any work of internal improvement unless authorized by a two-thirds vote of the people.

SEC. 7. No money shall be paid out of the State treasury except upon appropriation by law and on warrant drawn by the proper officer, and no bills, claims, accounts, or demands against the State, or any county or political subdivision, shall be audited, allowed, or paid until a full itemized statement in writing, verified by affidavit, shall be filed with the officer or officers whose duty it may be to audit the same.

SEC. 8. No bond or evidence of indebtedness of the State shall be valid unless the same shall have indorsed thereon a certificate, signed by the auditor and secretary of state, that the bond or evidence of debt is issued pursuant to law and is within the debt limit. No bond or evidence of any debt of any county or bond of any township or other political subdivision shall be valid unless the same have indorsed thereon a certificate, signed by the county auditor or other officer authorized by law to sign such certificate, stating that said bond or evidence of debt is issued pursuant to law and is within the debt limit.

ARTICLE No. XVII.

STATE MILITIA.

SECTION 1. The militia of the State shall consist of all able-bodied male citizens of the State between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years, except such as are exempted by the laws of the United States or the State. But all such citizens having scruples of conscience averse to bearing arms shall be excused therefrom upon such conditions as shall be prescribed by law.

SEC. 2. The Legislature shall provide by law for the enrollment, equipment, and discipline of the militia to conform as nearly as practicable to the regulations for the government of the armies of the United States.

SEC. 3. All militia officers shall be commissioned by the governor, the manner of their selection to be provided by law, and may hold their commissions for such period of time as the Legislature may provide.

SEC. 4. No military organization under the laws of the State shall carry any banner or flag representing any sect or society or the flag of any nationality but that of the United States.

SEC. 5. The governor shall be commander-in-chief of all the military forces of the State, and shall have power to call out the militia to preserve the public peace, to execute the laws of the State, to suppress insurrection, or repel invasion.

ARTICLE No. XVIII.

PUBLIC LANDS AND DONATIONS.

SECTION 1. The State of Wyoming hereby agrees to accept the grants of lands heretofore made, or that may be hereafter made, by the United States to the State for educational purposes, for public buildings and institutions, and for other objects, and donations of money with the conditions and limitations that may be imposed by the act or acts of Congress making such grants or donations. Such lands shall be disposed of only at public auction to the highest responsible bidder, after having been duly appraised by the land commissioners, at not less than three-fourths of the appraised value thereof, and for not less than $10 per acre: Provided, That in case of actual and bona fide settlement and improvement thereon at the time of the adoption of this constitution, such actual settler shall have the preference right to purchase the land whereon he may have settled, not exceeding 160 acres, at a sum not less than the appraised value thereof, and in making such appraisement the value of improvements shall not be taken into consideration. If at any time hereafter the United States shall grant any arid lands in the State to the State, on condition that the State reclaim and dispose of them to actual settlers, the Legislature shall be authorized to accept such arid lands on such conditions or other conditions, if the same are practicable and reasonable.

SEC. 2. The proceeds from the sale and rental of all lands and other property donated, granted, or received, or that may hereafter be donated, granted, or received from the United States or any other source, shall be inviolably appropriated and applied to the specific purposes specified in the original grant or gift.

SEC. 3. The governor, superintendent of public instruction, and secretary of state shall constitute a board of land commissioners who, under such regulations as may be provided by law, shall have the direction, control, disposition, and care of all lands that have been heretofore or may hereafter be granted to the State.

SEC. 4. The Legislature shall enact the necessary laws for the sale, disposal, leasing, or care of all lands that have been or may hereafter be granted to the State, and shall, at the earliest practicable period, provide by law for the location and selection of all lands that have been or may hereafter be granted by Congress to the State, and shall pass laws for the suitable keeping, transfer, and disbursement of the land-grant funds, and shall require of all officers charged with the same or the safe-keeping thereof to give ample bonds for all moneys and funds received by them.

SEC. 5. Except a preference right to buy, as in this constitution otherwise provided, no law shall ever be passed by the Legislature granting any privileges to persons who may have settled upon any of the school lands granted to the State subsequent to the survey thereof by the General Government by which the amount to be derived by the sale or other disposition of such lands shall be diminished, directly or indirectly.

SEC. 6. If any portion of the interest or income of the perpetual school fund be not expended during any year, said portion shall be added to and become a part of the said school fund.

ARTICLE No. XIX.—Miscellaneous.

HOMESTEADS.

SECTION 1. A homestead as provided by law shall be exempt from forced sale under any process of law, and shall not be alienated without the joint consent of husband and wife, when that relation exists; but no property shall be exempt from sale for taxes, or for the payment of obligations contracted for the purchase of said premises, or for the creation of improvements thereon.

LIVE-STOCK.

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall pass all necessary laws to provide for the protection of live-stock against the introduction or spread of pleuro-pneumonia, glanders, splenic or Texas fever, and other infectious or contagious diseases. The Legislature shall also establish a system of quarantine or inspection, and such other regulations as may be necessary for the protection of stock-owners and most conducive to the stock interests within the State.

CONCERNING LABOR.

SECTION 1. Eight hours' actual work shall constitute a lawful day's work in all mines and on all State and municipal works.

LABOR ON PUBLIC WORKS.

SECTION 1. No person not a citizen of the United States or who has not declared his intentions to become such shall be employed upon or in connection with any State, county, or municipal works or employment.

SEC. 2. The Legislature shall by appropriate legislation see that the provisions of the foregoing section are enforced.

LABOR CONTRACTS.

SECTION 1. It shall be unlawful for any person, company, or corporation to require of its servants or employes, as a condition of their employment or otherwise, any contract or agreement whereby such person, company, or corporation shall be released or discharged from liability or responsibility on account of personal injuries received by such servants or employes while in service of such person, company, or corporation by reason of the negligence of such person, company, or corporation, or the agents or employes thereof, and such contracts shall be absolutely null and void.

POLICE POWERS.

SECTION 1. No armed police force or detective agency or armed body or unarmed body of men shall ever be brought into this State for the suppression of domestic violence, except upon the application of the Legislature, or executive when the Legislature can not be convened.

ARTICLE No. XX.

AMENDMENTS.

SECTION 1. Any amendment or amendments to this constitution may be proposed in either branch of the Legislature, and, if the same shall be agreed to by two-thirds of all the members of each of the two houses, voting separately, such proposed amendment or amendments shall, with the yeas and nays thereon, be entered on their journals, and it shall be the duty of the Legislature to submit such amendment or amendments to the electors of the State at the next general election, and cause the same to be published without delay for at least twelve consecutive weeks prior to said election in at least one newspaper of general circulation published in each county, and if a majority of the electors shall ratify the same such amendment or amendments shall become a part of this constitution.

SEC. 2. If two or more amendments are proposed they shall be submitted in such manner that the elector shall vote for or against each of them separately.

SEC. 3. Whenever two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the Legislature shall deem it necessary to call a convention to revise or amend this constitution they shall recommend to the electors to vote at the next general election for or against a convention, and if a majority of all the electors voting at such election shall have voted for a convention, the Legislature shall at the next session provide by law for calling the same, and such convention shall consist of a number of members, not less than double that of the most numerous branch of the Legislature.

SEC. 4. Any constitution adopted by such convention shall have no validity until it has been submitted to and adopted by the people.

ARTICLE No. XXI.

SCHEDULE.

SECTION 1. That no inconvenience may arise from a change of the territorial government to a permanent State government, it is declared that all writs, actions, prosecutions, claims, liabilities, and obligations against the Territory of Wyoming, of whatever nature, and rights of individuals, and of bodies corporate, shall continue as if no change had taken place in this government, and all process which may, before the organization of the judicial department under this constitution, be issued under the authority of the Territory of Wyoming, shall be as valid as if issued in the name of the State.

SEC. 2. All property, real and personal, and all moneys, credits, claims, and choses in action belonging to the Territory of Wyoming at the time of the adoption of this constitution shall be vested in and become the property of the State of Wyoming.

SEC. 3. All laws now in force in the Territory of Wyoming which are not repugnant to this constitution shall remain in force until they expire by their own limitation or be altered or repealed by the Legislature.

SEC. 4. All fines, penalties, forfeitures, and escheats accruing to the Territory of Wyoming shall accrue to the use of the State.

SEC. 5. All recognizances, bonds, obligations, or other undertakings heretofore taken, or which may be taken before the organization of the judicial department under this constitution, shall remain valid, and shall pass over to and may be prosecuted in the name of the State, and all bonds, obligations, or other undertakings executed to this Territory or to any officer in his official capacity shall pass over to the proper State authority and to their successors in office, for the uses therein respectively expressed, and may be sued for and recovered accordingly. All criminal prosecutions and penal actions which have arisen or which may arise before the organization of the judicial department under this constitution, and which shall then be pending, may be prosecuted to judgment and execution in the name of the State.

SEC. 6. All officers, civil and military, holding their offices and appointments in this Territory under the authority of the United States or under the authority of this Territory shall continue to hold and exercise their respective offices and appointments until suspended under this constitution.

SEC. 7. This constitution shall be submitted for adoption or rejection to a vote of the qualified electors of this Territory at an election to be held on the first Tuesday in November, A. D. 1890. Said election, as nearly as may be, shall be conducted in all respects in the same manner as provided by the laws of the Territory for general elections, and the returns thereof shall be made to the secretary of said Territory who, with the governor and chief-justice thereof, or any two of them, shall canvass the same, and if a majority of the legal votes cast shall be for the constitution the governor shall certify the result to the President of the United States, together with a statement of the votes cast thereon and a copy of said constitution, articles, propositions, and ordinances. At the said election the ballots shall be in the following form: "For the constitution—Yes. No." And as a heading to each of the ballots, shall be printed on each ballot the following instructions to voters: "All persons who desire to vote for the constitution may erase the word 'No.' All persons who desire to vote against the constitution may erase the word 'Yes.' Any person may have printed or written on his ballot only the words: 'For the constitution' or 'Against the constitution,' and such ballots shall be counted for or against the constitution accordingly."

SEC. 8. This constitution shall take effect and be in full force immediately upon the admission of the Territory as a State.

SEC. 9. Immediately upon the admission of the Territory as a State, the governor of the Territory, or, in case of his absence or failure to act, the secretary of the Territory, or, in case of his absence or failure to act, the president of this convention shall issue a proclamation, which shall be published and a copy thereof mailed to the chairman of the board of county commissioners of each county, calling an election by the people for all State, district, and other officers created and made elective by this constitution, and fixing a day for such election, which shall not be less than forty days after the date of such proclamation nor more than ninety days after the admission of the Territory as a State.

SEC. 10. The board of commissioners of the several counties shall thereupon order such election for said day, and shall cause notice thereof to be given, in the manner and for the length of time provided by the laws of the Territory in cases of general elections for Delegates to Congress, and county and other officers. Every qualified elector of the Territory at the date of said election shall be entitled to vote thereat. Said election shall be conducted in all respects in the same manner as provided by the laws of the Territory for general elections, and the returns thereof shall be made to the canvassing board hereinafter provided for.

SEC. 11. The governor, secretary of the Territory, and president of this convention, or a majority of them, shall constitute a board of canvassers to canvass the vote of such election for member of Congress, all State and district officers, and members of the Legislature. The said board shall assemble at the seat of government of the Territory on the thirtieth day after the day of such election (or on the following day if such day fall on Sunday) and proceed to canvass the votes for all State and district officers and members of the Legislature, in the manner provided by the laws of the Territory for canvassing the vote for Delegates to Congress, and they shall issue certificates of election to the persons found to be elected to said offices, severally, and shall make and file with the secretary of the Territory an abstract, certified by them, of the number of votes cast for each person for each of said offices, and of the total number of votes cast in each county.

SEC. 12. All officers elected at such election, except members of the Legislature, shall, within thirty days after they have been declared elected, take the oath required by this constitution, and give the same bond required by the law of the Territory to be given in case of like officers of the Territory or district, and shall thereupon enter upon the duties of their respective offices; but the Legislature may require by law all such officers to give other or further bonds as a condition of their continuance in office.

SEC. 13. The governor-elect of the State, immediately upon his qualifying and entering upon the duties of his office, shall issue his proclamation convening the Legislature of the State at the seat of government, on a day to be named in said proclamation, and which shall not be less than thirty nor more than sixty days after the date of said proclamation. Within ten days after the organization of the Legislature, both houses of the Legislature, in joint session, shall then and there proceed to elect, as provided by law, two Senators of the United States for the State of Wyoming. At said election the two persons who shall receive the majority of all the votes cast by said senators and representatives shall be elected as United States Senators, and shall be so declared by the presiding officers of said joint session. The presiding officers of the senate and house shall issue a certificate to each of said Senators certifying his election, which certificates shall also be signed by the governor and attested by the secretary of state.

SEC. 14. The Legislature shall pass all necessary laws to carry into effect the provisions of this constitution.

SEC. 15. Whenever any two of the judges of the supreme court of the State elected under the provisions of this constitution shall have qualified in their offices, the causes then pending in the supreme court of the Territory, and the papers, records, and proceedings of said court, and the seal and other property pertaining thereto shall pass into the jurisdiction and possession of the supreme court of the State; and until so superseded the supreme court of the Territory and the judges thereof shall continue with like powers and jurisdiction as if this constitution had not been adopted. Whenever the judge of the district court of any district elected under the provisions of this constitution shall have qualified in office, the several causes then pending in the district court of the Territory within any county in such district, and the records, papers, and proceedings of said district court, and the seal and other property pertaining thereto shall pass into the jurisdiction and possession of the district court of the State for such county; and until the district courts of this Territory shall be superseded in the manner aforesaid, the said district courts and the judges thereof shall continue with the same jurisdiction and power, to be exercised in the same judicial districts respectively as heretofore constituted under the laws of the Territory.

SEC. 16. Until otherwise provided by law the seal now in use in the supreme and district courts of this Territory are hereby declared to be the seals of the supreme and district courts, respectively, of the State.

SEC. 17. Whenever this constitution shall go into effect, records and papers and proceedings of the probate court in each county, and all causes and matters of administration and other matters pending therein, shall pass into the jurisdiction and possession of the district court of the same county, and the said district court shall proceed to final decree or judgment order or other determination in the said several matters and causes as the said probate court might have done if this constitution had not been adopted.

SEC. 18. Senators and members of the house of representatives shall be chosen by the qualified electors of the several senatorial and representative districts as established in this constitution until such districts shall be changed by law, and thereafter by the qualified electors of the several districts as the same shall be established by law.

SEC. 19. All county and precinct officers who may be in office at the time of the adoption of this constitution shall hold their respective offices for the full time for which they may have been elected, and until such time as their successors may be elected and qualified, as may be provided by law, and the official bonds of all such officers shall continue in full force and effect as though this constitution had not been adopted.

SEC. 20. Members of the Legislature and all State officers, district and supreme judges elected at the first election held under this constitution shall hold their respective offices for the full term next ensuing such election, in addition to the period intervening between the date of their qualification and the commencement of such full term.

SEC. 21. If the first session of the Legislature under this constitution shall be concluded within twelve months of the time designated for a regular session thereof, then the next regular session following said special session shall be omitted.

SEC. 22. The first regular election that would otherwise occur following the first session of the Legislature shall be omitted, and all county and precinct officers elected at the first election held under this constitution shall hold their office for the full term thereof, commencing at the expiration of the term of the county and precinct officers then in office, or the date of their qualification.

SEC. 23. This convention does hereby declare on behalf of the people of the Territory of Wyoming that this constitution has been prepared and submitted to the people of the Territory of Wyoming for their adoption or rejection, with no purpose of setting up or organizing a State government until such time as the Congress of the United States shall enact a law for the admission of the Territory of Wyoming as a State under its provisions.

ORDINANCES.

The following articles shall be irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of this State:

SECTION 1. The State of Wyoming is an inseparable part of the Federal Union and the Constitution of the United States is the supreme law of the land.

SEC. 2. Perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and no inhabitant of this State shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship.

SEC. 3. The people inhabiting this State do agree and declare that they forever disclaim all right and title to the unappropriated public lands lying within the boundaries thereof, and to all lands lying within said limits owned or held by any Indian or Indian tribe, and that until the title thereto shall have been extinguished by the United States the same shall be and remain subject to the disposition of the United States, and that said Indian lands shall remain under the absolute jurisdiction and control of the Congress of the United States; that the lands belonging to citizens of the United States residing without this State shall never be taxed at a higher rate than the lands belonging to residents of this State; that no taxes shall be imposed by this State on lands or property therein belonging to or which may hereafter be purchased by the United States or reserved for its use. But nothing in this article shall preclude this State from taxing as other lands are taxed any lands owned or held by any Indian who has severed his tribal relations and has obtained from the United States or from any person a title thereto, by patent or other grant, save and except such lands as have been or may be granted to any Indian or Indian tribes under any acts of Congress containing a provision exempting the lands thus granted from taxation, which last-mentioned lands shall be exempt from taxation so long and to such an extent as is or may be provided in the act of Congress granting the same.

SEC. 4. All debts and liabilities of the Territory of Wyoming shall be assumed and paid by this State.

SEC. 5. The Legislature shall make laws for the establishment and maintenance of systems of public schools which shall be open to all the children of the State and free from sectarian control.

Done in open convention, at the city of Cheyenne, in the Territory of Wyoming, this 30th day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-nine.

Attest:

JOHN K. JEFFREY, Secretary.

Signatures of members of the constitutional convention:

Mellville C. Brown, president; John K. Jeffrey, secretary; Geo. W. Baxter, A. C. Campbell, J. A. Casbeer, C. D. Clark, Henry A. Coffeen, Asbury H. Conaway, Henry S. Elliott, Mortimer N. Grant, Henry G. Hay, Frederick H. Harvey, Mark Hopkins, John W. Hoyt, Wm. C. Irvine, James A. Johnston, Jesse Knight, Elliott S. N. Morgan, Edward J. Morris, John M. McCandlish, Herman F. Menough, Caleb P. Organ, Louis J. Palmer, C. W. Holden, H. G. Nickerson, A. L. Sutherland, W. E. Chaplin, Jonathan Jones, John L. Russell, Geo. W. Fox, Frank M. Foote, Chas. H. Burritt, Chas. N. Potter, D. A. Preston, John A. Biner, Geo. C. Smith, H. E. Teschemacher, C. L. Vagner, Thos. R. Reid, Robert C. Butler.

(Other members were obliged to leave before the constitution had been engrossed.)

Variations from original copy of constitution (as filed in office of secretary of the Territory) made by direction of revision committee.

ARTICLE No. 11—Boundaries.

Inserted as one section of Article No. 2.

ARTICLE No. 19—Miscellaneous.

Sections on arbitration and board of arbitration inserted as sections 28 and 29 of Article No. 3; judicial department, section 28 of same article, being made section 30.

ARTICLE No. 7—Education.

Section 12. Omitted as being identical in substance with section 3, Article No. 12, public lands and donations:

Sec. 12. The governor, secretary of state, State treasurer, and superintendent of public instruction shall constitute the board of land commissions, which, under direction of the Legislature, as limited by this constitution, shall have direction, control, leasing, and disposal of the lands of the State granted, or which may be hereafter granted, for the support and benefit of public schools, subject to the further limitations that the sale of all lands shall be at public auction, after such delay (not less than the time fixed by Congress) in portions at proper intervals of time, and at such minimum prices (not less than the minimum fixed by Congress) as to realize the largest possible proceeds.

TERRITORY OF WYOMING, SECRETARY'S OFFICE.

Cheyenne, November 27, 1889.

I do hereby certify that the annexed and foregoing printed copy of the constitution of the proposed State of Wyoming is a true and correct copy of the original thereof as filed in this office on the 30th day of September, A. D. 1889, with the exception of the variations noted on page 75 of said printed copy.

I further certify that said constitution was submitted, for adoption or rejection, to a vote of the qualified electors of said Territory, at an election held on Tuesday, the 5th day of November, A. D. 1889, and that a majority of the votes cast at said election was in favor of the adoption of said constitution.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the Territory the date first above written.

[SEAL.]

JOHN W. MELDRUM,
Secretary of Wyoming Territory.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I am very well aware that nothing I can say will do more than delay for a very short time the passage of this bill. There is nothing in the circumstances surrounding this question which would tempt me to say anything but for a sense of public duty in regard to it. There was a time in the history of this country when the birth of a new State was considered a matter of considerable public importance, but that time seems to have passed away, and we admit States now, not only singly, but in bunches, with a facility which has never characterized even a State Legislature in the formation of new counties.

If the question of admitting a State into the Union affected only and exclusively the population of that State, this conduct on the part of Congress might be to some extent excusable; there might be some palliation for the utter indifference with which such matters are now considered. But there is a dual aspect of this question. The admission of a State into the Union affects the rights of the people of every State in the Union alike. The admission of a State here without the requisite population, a reasonable population within the judgment of Congress, directly and absolutely affects the interests of the people in all the States.

There are some points in regard to the admission of new States about which there can be no controversy among intelligent people. It will be admitted, I suppose, that the Government of the United States should not hold the Territories as colonial possessions. In my judgment, and I believe that is now admitted by all lawyers of intelligence, we acquire our right to control the Territories as to their institutions and their admission into the Union from that clause in the Constitution which applies to the admission of new States into the Union, and the power does not come from that clause of the Constitution which gives Congress the right to make "all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States." It is from the power to admit new States that we can control absolutely, within the limitations of the Constitution, the institutions and affairs of the Territories.

Mr. President, to say that a State should come into this Union with less population than a county in my own State—

Mr. CULLOM. What was the population of the Senator's State when it was admitted into the Union?

Mr. VEST. My State had sixty-odd thousand, which was one-half more than the ratio then for a member of Congress. I will come to that point directly. To say that a population of 60,000, over an immense area of country, over a country with 60,000 square miles in it, should send two Senators to Congress and one Representative, if no more—

Mr. PLATT. There are 97,000 square miles in the proposed State of Wyoming.

Mr. VEST. I have the exact figures here.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. There are 97,000 square miles.

Mr. VEST. Well, 97,000 square miles. I have taken from the official reports the area of Wyoming. It is 98,000 square miles.

Mr. PLATT. Over 97,000—nearly 98,000.

Mr. VEST. Containing 62,000,000 acres. Out of those 62,000,000 acres there are four or five million which can be cultivated without irrigation, and it is conjectured that there are eleven or twelve million acres that may hereafter be susceptible of cultivation if we adopt a general irrigating system.

But the point to which I call attention is that here is an immense extent of country in a Territory that has been for a number of years organized as a Territory of the United States—98,000 square miles—with a population of not exceeding 70,000; and that extent of country with that population, not one-half of the ratio necessary for a Representative in the popular branch of Congress, is to be represented in this Chamber by the same number of Senators with New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Missouri, and all the States of the Union, to say nothing of its representation in the other branch of Congress.

It is very well known, Mr. President, that under political exigencies, when parties were equally divided in this country, all the considerations have been overlooked and party prejudice and passion have controlled the admission of new States into the Union. The birth of my own State was an epoch in the political history of the United States which can never be forgotten. For three years Missouri was held in abeyance on the slavery question. The more recent controversy which culminated in the civil war in regard to the admission of Kansas and Nebraska it is only necessary to mention.

No such political exigency exists now. The Republican party have 8 majority in this Chamber. No sectional question is presented. If it is possible at any time to appeal to the deliberate, calm, and non-partisan judgment of a body it should be here, at this time. Yet I mistrust any such appeal.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. VEST. If it is for information, yes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is for information; and that is to know whether the Senator really believes that this Territory, embraced within the limits described in the bill, is incapable of becoming a prosperous, well ordered State, a good factor in the common weal of the whole Republic.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, that is not the question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not hear the answer.

Mr. VEST. I should dislike to say that where there were ten or twenty thousand American citizens they were not capable of establishing government and administering law, but I say that to admit a population less than that in a great many of the counties in the States, scattered over an immense extent of country like this, with equal rights and privileges as a sovereign State, is not justified by anything that is now in the condition of this question.

Mr. CULLOM. Has not that always been the case when a new State was admitted that some of the old States had in their counties what the Senator now represents?

Mr. VEST. Never within my knowledge so conspicuously as in the present case. After all, it is a matter of discretion with Congress when a Territory shall come into the Union; and I propose to show as my own deliberate conviction that no such public necessity exists now for the admission of Wyoming, embracing 98,000 square miles, with a population of 70,000.

Mr. PLATT. Where does the Senator get his population of 70,000?

Mr. VEST. I get it, as I shall show directly, from the largest vote they have ever polled for Delegate, 18,210. Eighteen thousand two hundred and ten was the largest vote ever polled in that Territory for Delegate. If we were to adopt the ratio which is taken in the oldest States of 5 to 1 to arrive at the population, that would make ninety thousand and some hundred.

Mr. REAGAN. Is not the Senator mistaken?

Mr. PLATT. That is right, on a ratio of 5 to 1.

Mr. VEST. If we take 18,000, in round numbers, and multiply it by 5, which is the ratio adopted in old and established States, it would make 90,000 population. The ratio for representation in the popular branch of Congress is over 150,000, so that would fall 60,000 short of the ratio for a member of Congress. But when we consider that in Wyoming they have woman suffrage and that at least one-third of the 18,000 votes must have been cast by women, you have 12,000 male voters, which, multiplied by 5, would make only 60,000.

But every man who is familiar with the West knows that that ratio does not obtain there. The large proportion of voters in the Western Territories like Wyoming are unmarried men, and must be from the nature of the country and the necessities of their surroundings. I undertake to say that 3 to 1 (and I am a Western man and know whereof I speak) is the fair ratio in the Western Territories; and that would make not more than thirty-six to forty thousand people in Wyoming to-day. And they are to have two Senators here!

Mr. CULLOM. Forty-six to fifty thousand?

Mr. VEST. Three times twelve thousand would be thirty-six thousand.

Mr. CULLOM. There were 18,000 votes cast.

Mr. VEST. Six thousand of them were cast by women. You are not going to count the husband and wife both and put five children to each one of them? That sort of arithmetical progression would bankrupt the census. I do not know any country where that sort of thing obtains, though some of them are very good at the business.

Congress has never adopted, in the nature of things it never could adopt, under the rule which governs the admission of new States, any fixed and procrustean rule as to population. In the great debate upon the Kansas and Nebraska bill, Mr. Douglas (and I simply state it not as conclusive, but as a historical incident) declared that no State should be admitted into the Union with less population than the ratio necessary for a Representative in the popular branch of Congress. The more I have reflected upon that statement the better satisfied I am that it is correct. If, as to the admission of a new State, you isolate the single consideration of what the people of the Territory themselves want and what is best for them, it is possible to make an argument against this statement that is plausible, if not convincing. But when you consider, as I have said before, that this is a dual question, one affecting not alone the people of the Territory, but the people of the whole United States, it is unjust to give to less than the number necessary for a Representative in the popular branch of Congress the full rights of State sovereignty.

Is it nothing to the people of Missouri that two Senators are added to this body who are to vote as to laws for them and as to taxation and as to the great constitutional and economic questions that are daily presented here? Is it nothing to the people of a district in Missouri that a Territory is to have a member in the popular branch of Congress who is representing there only fifty or sixty thousand people, when in my State it requires more than one hundred and fifty-one thousand in order to cast a Representative's vote? We have heard a great deal in discussing at this session the negro question, as to the fact that two men in the North cast the same vote with one in the South; and yet the gentlemen who make that argument utterly ignore the fact that in admitting a Territory with less than the ratio of population required for a member in the popular branch they are adopting the same outrage, as they term it, which they say is practiced in the South, to say nothing about the representation in the Senate when these same fifty or sixty thousand people come here with two Senators equal to the representation in this body of the Imperial State of New York.

As the Senator from Illinois suggested, there have been States admitted into this Union with fifty or sixty thousand population; but the circumstances were very different from those that surround us now; and the ratio of representation in the popular branch of Congress has continually changed. I hold in my hand a table of the twenty-five States admitted into the Union, excluding the last four, the two Dakotas, Montana, and Washington; and of those twenty-five States, commencing with Vermont and ending with Colorado, there were but four of them that did not have more than the ratio for representation in the popular branch of Congress. Oregon had 2,000 less, and only 2,000, and that was on an estimate of 50,000. The ratio of representation was 52,000 and Oregon had 50,000.

Mr. PLATT. The ratio of representation was 93,000 when Oregon was admitted.

Mr. VEST. Perhaps I am mistaken, then. Yes, Oregon's population by the next census was 52,465. Her estimated population when admitted was 50,000, and the ratio of representation at that time was 93,423. Nevada was admitted in 1864. The ratio of representation then was 127,381. Her estimated population was 40,000, and by the next census it was 42,491. Nebraska was admitted in 1867, when the ratio was the same, 127,381. Her estimated population was 100,000 when admitted, and the next census showed a population of 122,993. Colorado was admitted in 1876, when the ratio of representation was 131,425. Her estimated population was 100,000, and by the next census it was 194,640, going above the ratio. With the exception of those four States, not one of the twenty-five States was admitted into the Union without a population up to the ratio of representation.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator has omitted Florida and Kansas.

Mr. PADDOCK. If the Senator from Missouri will allow me, I desire to say to him that the estimate he has read of the population of Nebraska when it was admitted into the Union is altogether wrong. I was then a citizen of the Territory and had been for some years. The population did not exceed 50,000 when the State was admitted. Four years later it was 122,000 and over.

Mr. VEST. The estimate I put on it was 100,000. The next census showed 122,000.

Mr. PADDOCK. I know that to be wrong by at least 100 per cent.

Mr. VEST. Florida was admitted in 1845. The ratio was then 70,680. Her estimated population was 64,000, and by the next census it was actually 87,445, going above the ratio. Kansas was admitted in 1861. The ratio of representation was 127,381. Her estimated population was 107,206, but at the next census it was 364,369.

Mr. President, I make the statement again that here are 98,000 square miles with not exceeding, in my judgment, 50,000 people in a Territory that has been organized as such for a long time, and we are asked now, without any political exigency resting upon the dominant party, to admit these people into the Union on an equal representation with the largest States in this branch of Congress and with one member of the House of Representatives at any rate.

Congress should also, as a matter of course, scrutinize the constitution of every State that applies for admission into the Union. I care not what may be the constitution adopted by a State after it becomes one; the responsibility rests upon Congress to pass upon the constitution of a State when it applies for admission into the sisterhood of States. It is for us to say whether the constitution as proposed is in consonance with our idea, not only of the Constitution of the United States, but the general institutions and the general interests of the people of the whole country.

The constitution of Wyoming contains provisions in it, first, in regard to suffrage, to which I will never give my consent. I shall never vote to admit into the Union any State that adopts woman suffrage. I do not propose to discuss the sentimental side of that question. I simply say for myself that, in my judgment, woman suffrage is antagonistic to the spirit, to the institutions of the people of the United States. It is utterly antagonistic to my ideas of the Government as our fathers made it and left it to us. If there were no other reason, I would never give the right of suffrage to women, because the danger to the institutions of the United States to-day is in hurried, spasmodic, sentimental suffrage. If our institutions are preserved and handed down to our children after us, it must be by deliberate, earnest, thoughtful voters; and the great danger to the suffrage of the United States to-day is an unprepared, hurried, impetuous sentimental suffrage that goes from feeling, and not from judgment.

I do not propose to waste any time in discussing the aspect of the woman-suffrage question that enters into the domestic life of our people. It goes without saying that women are purer than men, that their impulses are better; but it is absolutely true that they are more impulsive than men; that they are led more by their hearts and less by their heads; and for us now to adopt the principle of woman suffrage and ratify it by the admission of a State which has that principle in its constitution is in my judgment to abnegate the highest requisite of suffrage in the United States. Deliberation, argument, caution, these are safeguards to which we must look in the future; and if this country is ruined it will be by immature, unprepared, impulsive, and thoughtless suffrage.

I do not propose to say that women can not become intelligent voters, but I say they will have very different motives to those that influence men. I do not care to go into the logical argument. Whenever you make voters out of women, you must make out of them citizens who will bear all the burdens of citizenship, including military service. It is not necessary to go that far. I believe that with universal suffrage in this country the injecting into our suffrage of all the women of the United States would be the greatest calamity that could possibly happen to our institutions and people. I will be entirely frank about this matter. Even if I did not believe this as to all the women of the country, I will never give my vote to increase the burden of illiterate and unprepared and unworthy suffrage in the South. To-day the people of the South are struggling for existence under the evil of negro suffrage. A servile race, utterly unprepared for it, by our great mistake, which amounted to a crime in its results, were hurled upon the people of this country in a mass, utterly unprepared for the duties assigned them. Woman suffrage means that every negro woman in the South shall have the same privilege. No intelligent man in either party in this country to-day would again give the right of suffrage to the negro race under the same circumstances. I am their friend. Born with them, reared among them, nursed by them, I have never had one particle of antipathy towards them and would elevate them and benefit them to-day in every way I could. But I would no more give them the suffrage than I would give a deadly weapon to a child, knowing what I do about it, and I would unquestionably not give it to their women, who are far more impulsive and far more thoughtless than the men. The men, by attrition and social relations with the whites in the different relations of business and life, have become to some extent educated and broadened and enlightened; but to give the negro women, at home on the plantations, impulsive, thoughtless, uneducated, the suffrage, thus doubling and more than doubling the curse that is on the South to-day, would in my judgment be a great crime.

Mr. President, if there were no other reason with me, I would vote against the admission of Wyoming because it has that feature in its constitution. I will not take the responsibility as a Senator of indorsing in any way, directly or indirectly, woman suffrage. I repeat that in my judgment it would be not only a calamity, but an absolute crime against the institutions of the people of the United States.

But there is another feature in this constitution which I can never indorse. I have not the slightest objection to any foreigner or alien coming to this country and making investments in the way of legitimate business. I believe it impolitic and unwise for us to build a Chinese wall, commercially or otherwise, around this country. I believe we should invite enterprise and capital. For my part, I am for throwing wide open the doors of the Republic to every immigrant who comes here in good faith to help us work out the great problem of self-government. But I am utterly opposed to the ownership of real estate in this country by aliens, and will never give my vote for it. To-day one of the greatest evils in all the Western country is the practice that has grown up of foreign syndicates and foreign capitalists monopolizing a large extent of territory by getting possession of the water-courses and shutting out the people of the United States who come as actual settlers.

Mr. CULLOM. What provision of the constitution of Wyoming does the Senator refer to?

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Illinois asks me what it is. I read from the constitution and bill of rights.

Mr. MORGAN. On what page?

Mr. VEST. I have not the document here, but I read from a transcript:

No distinction as to resident aliens and citizens as to possession, taxation, enjoyment, and descent of property shall be made.

Mr. PLATT. What section does the Senator read?

Mr. VEST. I have not the official document before me. I read from an extract which I wrote. There shall be "no distinction as to resident aliens and citizens as to possession, taxation, enjoyment, and descent of property."

Mr. CULLOM. I have not my eye upon the section, but I am inclined to think that there is something more than that which pertains to the same subject, but I have not found it yet.

Mr. VEST. I have not the official document here, but I am satisfied that is the language of the provision found in the constitution.

Mr. GRAY. It is section 29.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. If that is a provision of the constitution I will find it in a few minutes.

Mr. VEST. I copied it myself from the constitution.

Mr. GRAY. It is section 29.

Mr. VEST. Then read it, please.

Mr. GRAY. Section 29 of the bill of rights, which I read with the Senator's permission, provides that—

No distinction shall ever be made by law between resident aliens and citizens as to the possession, taxation, enjoyment, and descent of property.

Mr. VEST. That is the provision. Now, under that provision any alien can go into the State of Wyoming, purchase all the property, real, personal, and mixed, that his means will allow, and shut out the people of the United States from it. No provision can be broader than that. Its intention is plain beyond any sort of question; and every Senator who votes for the admission of this State with that provision in the bill of rights says to the people of Europe, to the alien capitalists, to their nomadic noblemen who come here and buy vast possessions on which to settle their younger sons, "Wyoming is open to you, and if your money holds out you can buy two-thirds of the entire State."

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him for a moment in that connection, I should like to call his attention to the fact that on the 3d day of March, 1887, there was approved an act which we had passed here providing that aliens shall not hold land in the Territories of this Government. So this action of the Wyoming bill of rights is directly in the face of what had been the previous action of Congress.

Mr. VEST. There is no doubt about that; we passed that act. I have heard here from time to time Columbian oratory on that subject, that alien landlords shall not transfer their hereditary holdings to the United States; but if this State comes in with that bill of rights we know exactly what to expect, and that any quantity of real and personal property can be purchased there and held with the right of descent in the foreign holder to an unlimited extent.

Mr. FRYE. Can aliens hold real estate in Missouri?

Mr. VEST. No, sir; they can inherit in Missouri.

Mr. PLATT. There are not three States in the Union where an alien can not purchase and hold property.

Mr. VEST. In my State it can descend under our statutes to an alien.

Mr. FRYE. I never heard of any restriction in the East. I supposed it was universal.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Connecticut says there are three States in which it is prohibited.

Mr. PLATT. Not over three States, so far as I know.

Mr. VEST. It makes no difference, Mr. President, whether there are three States or thirty in which it is prohibited, Congress has expressed its opinion on this subject by its legislation, and if we accept this State as a member of the Union with that provision we do it with the distinct understanding that we are permitting a thing against which we have legislated here.

Another thing, Mr. President: there can be no sort of doubt that this call for statehood, as in nearly all cases, does not come from a spontaneous popular uprising in its behalf. At the election for the adoption of the constitution (and I will give as succinctly as possible the history of this State movement) the movement came originally not from the people, not from Congress, not through any enabling act, but it came from the county boards of commissioners, who requested the governor to issue a proclamation calling a convention to form a constitution.

Mr. PAYNE. Without any authority.

Mr. VEST. Without any authority from the Territorial Legislature, without any authority from Congress, without any convention by the people.

I do not choose to go into the argument as to the manner in which this movement was inaugurated as a conclusive argument against the admission of the State. If the population was sufficient, if the people had come together even in an irregular manner and presented a suitable constitution, I would not stand upon technicalities. But I am now arguing the proposition as to whether this was a spontaneous popular movement from necessity, whether it emanated from the people on account of their wants or whether it came from the politicians, as in my judgment it has done very frequently. It did not come from an enabling act. It did not come from an act of the Territorial Legislature. It did not come from a popular convention. It came from some boards of county commissioners who simply out of hand requested the governor to issue a proclamation for a popular election.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Was there any opposition to it?

Mr. VEST. I am not prepared to say that there was an organized opposition, nor for the purposes of my argument, with great respect to the Senator from Vermont, do I care whether there was or not. The point I am discussing is whether this thing came from the people, growing out of the necessities of their situation, or did it come from another source and from other necessities connected with personal ambition and political emergency?

But the governor issued his proclamation June 3, 1889. The election was held on the second Monday of July, 1889. The convention assembled Monday, September 1, 1889, made a constitution, and adjourned September 31. The election on the constitution as to its adoption was held November 5; and the whole vote cast was 8,195, of which 1,923 were cast against the constitution. In the election for Delegate in 1888 there were 18,210 votes cast. There was a falling off of 10,000 votes, in round numbers.

Mr. GRAY. Did the women vote at that election?

Mr. VEST. Yes, all voted, men and women. There was a falling off of 10,000 votes between the Delegate election in 1888 and the vote on the constitution in 1889.

It is said that there was a terrible snow-storm raging; that the cave of winds burst open and the blasts howled across the prairie and the delicate and effeminate voters were unable to reach the polls. We have a Weather Bureau in this country, and I have here the official report from the Weather Bureau, whatever it is worth, taken at their signal stations as to the condition of the weather at that time in Wyoming. Without troubling the Senate with reading the whole of it, it shows that the temperature was moderate; that the wind, although not a zephyr, was a comfortable, benignant wind for that latitude; that instead of a tremendous snow-storm, which would have impeded locomotion and prevented voters from reaching the polls, the snow-fall, according to the official report, was about one-tenth of an inch.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question, Mr. President?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am in some doubt about this business, and I am trying to get real information; but, on the subject of what the weather was, I wish to call to the Senator's attention that the Signal Office for the last year or two, since the present Administration came in, I will say, not to offend his sensibilities, is generally and uniformly wrong, as, for instance, we were told that yesterday there would be a fearful thunder shower in this town. So I am inclined to think that the committee is right and that the Signal Office, as usual, is wrong about the state of the weather on that day.

Mr. VEST. I confess that there is some uncertainty about the weather as well as about politics.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But there is uncertainty about the bureau.

Mr. VEST. The Senator says "since the present Administration came in." Since then a good many prophecies that were made in regard to the political weather have not turned out exactly as they were stated before the election.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; you prophesied evil and good has come.

Mr. VEST. As to whether good has come or not, I am willing to take the verdict of the Republican party itself. If the degree of satisfaction with the Administration which exists in this Chamber is any indication, there has been very great disappointment as to the political weather.

Mr. President, it may be that this falling off of 10,000 votes was not due to indifference and to apathy upon the part of the people of that Territory; but it is a most significant fact, and a complete answer to the paper that was read here showing the overruling necessity for a State government in Wyoming, that 10,000 less voters, men and women, went to the polls to vote upon the organic act which was to admit them to the Union than voted in 1888 upon the election simply of a Delegate to Congress—a falling off of 10,000.

Mark you, Mr. President, that was not in the effeminate population of the East. That was not where people are afraid to face the inclemency of the weather. That was not among the silken dunes of the effeminate civilization of the older States. This was in a frontier country, where the howling blasts of winter are braved for six and seven long months in the ordinary avocations of life by the hunters, the cattle-raisers, the miners, the men who are blazing the pathway of civilization against all the obstacles of nature. Is it not strange that when the children in the night were crying for statehood, when the women were praying for it, when the men were working for it the weather kept 10,000 of these hardy pioneers away from the polls? It is incredible, sir. This movement came from the politicians.

Mr. CULLOM. The people were so unanimously for it that there was no contest and they did not consider that it was necessary to go to the polls.

Mr. VEST. Out of the 8,000 who voted one-fourth voted against it. Nineteen hundred and odd voted against it. It is said that there was no issue to bring out a full vote. If they were panting for statehood, if it was necessary to them, was any other issue necessary except that? What issue could be as great to those people? Here was an escape from all the ills of their Territorial condition. Here was the panacea. Here was the gate opening into a great Union. Here were all their candidates for office. Yet there was a falling off of 10,000 votes between the election of Delegate and the adoption of the constitution.

But, Mr. President, another singular fact is developed in the history of this case. At the election for Delegate to Congress in 1888, there were 10,451 Republican and 7,557 Democratic votes. Now, when the Legislature is organized and districted, here is the proportion between the two parties in the ratio of representation by districts and counties: In the senate the 10,451 Republicans have under this distribution fourteen senators and the Democrats have two, and in the house the 10,451 Republicans have twenty-nine Representatives and the nearly 8,000 Democrats have four.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that a gerrymandering process?

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Vermont asks me if that is gerrymandering. That is worse than gerrymandering; it is robbery. That is naked political felony. The men who did that job would do anything for political success.

Mr. PLATT. Does the Senator claim that the State was not districted according to population?

Mr. VEST. I say the State was districted for Republican success and nothing else, and they paid no attention to population or where it was. I say it was impossible without trickery, in a distribution, to bring about such a result as that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The census by counties will show that and I think the Senator is mistaken about it.

Mr. VEST. I have it here officially, and I will ask leave to put it in the RECORD. Here is the provision:

SEC. 4. Until an apportionment of senators and representatives as otherwise provided by law, they shall be divided among the several counties of the State in the following manner:

It was an arbitrary distribution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is, so many to a county?

Mr. VEST. So many to a county.

Until an apportionment of senators and representatives as otherwise provided by law they shall be divided among the several counties of the State in the following manner:

Albany County, two senators and five representatives.

Carbon County, two senators and five representatives.

Converse County, one senator and three representatives.

Crook County, one senator and two representatives.

Fremont County, one senator and two representatives.

Laramie County, three senators and six representatives.

Johnson County, one senator and two representatives.

Sheridan County, one senator and two representatives.

Sweetwater County, two senators and three representatives.

Uinta County, two senators and three representatives.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am only asking for information; I am not debating it at all; but does the Senator mean to say that those counties, named in that way, do not represent substantially and fairly, as near as you can get at it, the population of the whole body of the Territory?

Mr. VEST. I do.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to see the proof of that.

Mr. PLATT. If the Senator from Missouri will permit me, I want to remark right here that the apportionment was made by a Democratic chief-justice and a Democratic secretary of the Territory and a Republican governor, and the Republican governor must have hoodwinked the two distinguished Democrats to have gotten any such trickery.

Mr. VEST. I do not know who made the apportionment. I know what was done.

Mr. CULLOM. I wish to say, if the Senator will allow me, that in the election of delegates in many of the districts there was no controversy as to politics, that Democrats and Republicans were elected by understanding.

Mr. VEST. I know that this is the apportionment made; and here are the counties:

Albany, two Republicans in the senate and five in the house.

Carbon, two Republicans in the senate and five in the house.

Converse, one Republican in the senate and three in the house.

Crook, one Republican in the senate and two in the house.

Fremont, one Democratic senator and two Democratic representatives.

Laramie, three Republican senators and six representatives.

Johnson, one Democratic senator and two representatives.

Sheridan, one Republican senator and two representatives.

Sweetwater, two Republican senators and three representatives.

Uinta, two Republican senators and three representatives.

As between the respective Democratic and Republican voters, the Republicans having 10,451 and the Democrats having 7,547, here are 14 Republicans and 2 Democrats in the Senate and 29 representatives for the Republicans and 4 for the Democrats in the house. In other words, with 7,500 voters the Democrats get 4 representatives in the house; with 10,000 voters the Republicans get 29. If two of the men who made that apportionment were Democrats, God help me from their political association! They were either idiots or worse. I am answering now the statement that this apportionment was made by three officers of the Territorial government, but, as my friend from Delaware suggests, and I come to that, my information is that it was made arbitrarily by the constitutional convention.

Mr. PLATT. That is all in the report of the governor of Wyoming. It is signed by Francis E. Warren, governor, W. L. Maginnis, chief justice, and S. D. Shannon, secretary; and there never has been a question raised, so far as I have heard, in Wyoming or out of it, that it was not perfectly fair as to the population and progress.

Mr. GRAY. With the permission of the Senator from Missouri I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut whether that apportionment was not made by the constitutional convention that framed the constitution.

Mr. PLATT. I am talking now of the apportionment on which delegates were elected to the constitutional convention.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How many had Carbon?

Mr. VEST. Carbon had two Republican senators and five Republican representatives.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And Albany?

Mr. VEST. Albany had the same.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Two and five?

Mr. VEST. Two and five. Out of the whole Legislature the Democrats had two senators and four representatives.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Right on the point of those two counties, without any debate about it, by the census of 1880, which of course was a good while ago, the population of those counties was, Albany 4,636 and Carbon 3,448, about 1,100 difference, which would make about an even apportionment. I do not know anything about the politics of the two counties, but the apportionment would seem to be about as near as it could be.

Mr. VEST. I do not undertake to say that there was any disproportion as to the apportionment in regard to the aggregate number of people, but what I mean to say is that the districts were so arranged as to disfranchise the Democrats both in the senate and house.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That the Senator must prove.

Mr. VEST. I have proved it here by showing that it was simply impossible in a fair apportionment that 7,500 voters should only have two senators and four representative while 10,000 voters, only 2,500 more, had fourteen senators and twenty-nine representatives.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us take those two first counties again, if the Senator will pardon me, and that is what he read. On turning to the official census I find as to those two counties, Albany and Carbon, which were assigned equal representation both in the senate and assembly, that the difference in their population was just about 1,100 people, which is substantially for the purposes of representation as near in the apportionment of counties as you can possibly get it. Therefore, no matter what the politics of either was, if one was entirely Republican and the other entirely Democratic, the apportionment is fair according to the population. If you are going to apportion according to opinions, then you adopt new and I will not say a Southern method of apportionment, but a Democratic, I will say, because it is not Southern as much as it is Northern perhaps. I do not see how the fact the Senator states bears out his inference that a political discrimination has been made in the apportionment.

Mr. VEST. Well, Mr. President, it can not be made much plainer than the simple statement of the result. Here are certain districts and counties that are arbitrarily given a certain number of Senators and Representatives. Now, it turns out that under that arbitrary arrangement the result is what I have read, that 10,000 voters have fourteen Senators and twenty-nine Representatives, and 7,500 voters have two Senators and four Representatives. This apportionment was made by that convention arbitrarily. Here is the apportionment: such a county shall have so many Senators and so many Representatives, another county so many, and so on.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You must have a census of the counties in the ordinary way.

Mr. VEST. It was so arranged as to bring about the result which I have named, and it is a practical disfranchisement of the Democrats within the Territory.

But these two bills come here together, and there is no doubt about this matter when you come to Idaho. The movement was just the same. It was gotten up by politicians both in Wyoming and Idaho. There was no enabling act passed for Idaho. There was no act of the Territorial Legislature. It was done by an off-hand proclamation of the governor. A convention was called, a constitution was adopted and submitted to the people, and then an apportionment made, and what was the result?

The official vote for Delegate in Idaho in November, 1888, was, for Dubois, Republican, 8,151; for Hailey, Democrat, 6,404; for Buck, Independent, 1,458—8,151 Republicans and 6,404 Democrats, leaving out the Independents.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If my friend will allow me to interrupt him, What was the relative vote of the two parties on agreeing to the constitution?

Mr. VEST. I will come to that directly. I am speaking now as to the point of an honest apportionment of representation in Idaho, as I said in regard to the same point in Wyoming. Here is the population of the Territory of Idaho in 1889 as estimated in the report of the governor to the Secretary of the Interior, giving the respective counties, which I will not read. It was 113,777 people. I have before me the number of people in each county. Here is the provision of the Idaho constitution under which the first Legislature is to be elected, and subsequent Legislatures until otherwise provided, just as was done in Wyoming:

ARTICLE XIX.
Apportionment.

SECTION 1. Until otherwise provided by law the apportionment of the two houses of the Legislature shall be as follows:

The first senatorial district shall consist of the county of Shoshone, and shall elect two senators.

The second shall consist of the counties of Kootenai and Latah, and shall elect one senator.

The third shall consist of the counties of Nez Percé and Idaho, and shall elect one senator.

The fourth shall consist of the counties of Nez Percé and Latah, and shall elect one senator.

The fifth shall consist of the county of Latah, and shall elect one senator.

The sixth shall consist of the county of Boise, and shall elect one senator.

The seventh shall consist of the county of Custer, and shall elect one senator.

The eighth shall consist of the county of Lemhi, and shall elect one senator.

The ninth shall consist of the county of Logan, and shall elect one senator.

The tenth shall consist of the county of Bingham, and shall elect one senator.

The eleventh shall consist of the counties of Bear Lake, Oneida, and Bingham, and shall elect one senator.

The twelfth shall consist of the counties of Owyhee and Cassia, and shall elect one senator.

The thirteenth shall consist of the county of Elmore, and shall elect one senator.

The fourteenth shall consist of the county of Alturas, and shall elect one senator.

The fifteenth shall consist of the county of Ada, and shall elect two senators.

The sixteenth shall consist of the county of Washington, and shall elect one senator.

Sec. 2. The several counties shall elect the following members of the house of representatives:

The county of Ada, three members.

The counties of Ada and Elmore, one member.

The county of Alturas, two members.

The county of Boise, two members.

The county of Bear Lake, one member.

The county of Bingham, three members.

The county of Cassia, one member.

The county of Custer, two members.

The county of Elmore, one member.

The county of Idaho, one member.

The counties of Idaho and Nez Percé, one member.

The county of Kootenai, one member.

The county of Latah, two members.

The counties of Kootenai and Latah, one member.

The county of Logan, two members.

The county of Lemhi, two members.

The county of Nez Percé, one member.

The county of Oneida, one member.

The county of Owyhee, one member.

The county of Shoshone, four members.

The county of Washington, two members.

The counties of Bingham, Logan, and Alturas, one member.

Now I read from remarks made by Hon. WILLIAM M. SPRINGER:

In this constitution the Republican leaders have so gerrymandered the districts for the senate and house of representatives of Idaho as to perpetuate the power of the Republican party in that State indefinitely. I will show how this is done. According to this apportionment, based upon the vote for Delegate in 1888, which I will print in the RECORD, the senate of Idaho at its first session will consist of fifteen Republicans and three Democrats.

I call attention to the fact that there were 8,000 Republican voters and over 6,000 Democratic voters, and the apportionment in the senate of Idaho under this arbitrary apportionment is fifteen Republicans and three Democrats. I will print in the RECORD the representation of each county under this apportionment, both for the senate and house of representatives.

Senate of Idaho as it will stand at the first election under the constitution, according to the vote for Delegate in 1888.

Districts.	Counties.	Republican.	Democratic.
First.....	Shoshone.....	3	1
Second.....	Kootenai and Latah.....	1	1
Third.....	Nez Percé and Idaho.....	1	1
Fourth.....	Nez Percé and Latah.....	1	1
Fifth.....	Latah.....	1	1
Sixth.....	Boise.....	1	1

* By 2 majority—800 votes were cast for Buck in Latah. This district is therefore doubtful.

Senate of Idaho as it will stand at the first election, etc.—Continued.

Districts.	Counties.	Republican.	Democratic.
Seventh.....	Custer.....	1	1
Eighth.....	Lemhi.....	1	1
Ninth.....	Logan.....	1	1
Tenth.....	Bingham.....	1	1
Eleventh.....	Bear Lake, Oneida, and Bingham.....	1	1
Twelfth.....	Owyhee and Cassia.....	1	1
Thirteenth.....	Elmore.....	1	1
Fourteenth.....	Alturas.....	1	1
Fifteenth.....	Ada.....	2	1
Sixteenth.....	Washington.....	1	1
Total.....		15	3

House of Representatives.

Districts.	Counties.	Republican.	Democratic.
First.....	Ada.....	3	1
Second.....	Ada and Elmore.....	1	1
Third.....	Alturas.....	2	1
Fourth.....	Boise.....	2	1
Fifth.....	Bear Lake.....	1	1
Sixth.....	Bingham.....	3	1
Seventh.....	Cassia.....	1	1
Eighth.....	Custer.....	2	1
Ninth.....	Elmore.....	1	1
Tenth.....	Idaho.....	1	1
Eleventh.....	Idaho and Nez Percé.....	1	1
Twelfth.....	Kootenai.....	1	1
Thirteenth.....	Latah.....	2	1
Fourteenth.....	Kootenai and Latah.....	1	1
Fifteenth.....	Logan.....	2	1
Sixteenth.....	Lemhi.....	2	1
Seventeenth.....	Nez Percé.....	1	1
Eighteenth.....	Oneida.....	1	1
Nineteenth.....	Owyhee.....	1	1
Twentieth.....	Shoshone.....	4	1
Twenty-first.....	Washington.....	2	1
Twenty-second.....	Bingham, Logan, and Alturas.....	1	1
Total house.....		31	5
Total senate.....		15	3
Total on joint ballot.....		46	8

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not wish to interrupt my friend without his consent—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. VEST. Of course.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does that table show that the apportionment of senators to counties—I will just stick by that for the moment—is out of proportion to the population of the respective counties?

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir; in a great many instances it is, as I shall proceed to show.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In the two cases we referred to in Wyoming it did not appear to be so.

Mr. VEST. I undertake to say, and the official record shows it, that this apportionment would give to the same number of Republicans twice as many representatives as to the same number of Democrats.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am speaking of the population and not of voters, for men change their minds.

Mr. VEST. I am talking about the political complexion of it, to show the object of the apportionment.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. I have not looked at the figures with reference to Idaho, as that bill is not before the Senate, but I simply want to say in reference to Wyoming that the apportionment that was made under which the delegates were elected to form a constitution was made by the chief justice, who was appointed by the recent President, Mr. Cleveland, and by the secretary of the Territory appointed by him, and by the governor appointed by a Republican administration, I believe; and, as I am informed, they simply took the apportionment which was theretofore made by the Legislature of that Territory, and the subject of politics was not discussed at all.

Mr. VEST. I know it was not discussed, but when they came to the final result it was a little one-sided.

Mr. CULLOM. If it was, it would certainly have been one-sided in favor of the Democratic party, for the majority of the gentlemen who held those positions were Democrats.

Mr. VEST. I do not know those gentlemen, and as to their having been appointed by the Democratic Administration, all I can say is that from my standpoint that Administration made a good many mistakes in its appointments.

Mr. CULLOM. Possibly.

Mr. VEST. It appointed men to office who were by no means, in my judgment, Democrats in good standing, and they were kept in office.

I am very much in hopes that if the same gentleman presides again over the destinies of this country he will profit by his past experience and stick to his party.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not think there is any occasion for uneasiness about that. I do not think he will preside again.

Mr. VEST. When my friend receives the nomination of the Republican party, I shall discuss that matter with him. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I will quote again from Mr. SPRINGER in regard to these tables:

See how cunningly these districts have been divided. It is provided, for instance, that in the second senatorial district the counties of Kootenai and Latah shall elect one senator. The fourth district consists of the counties of Nez Perce and Latah; the fifth consists of the county of Latah by itself. All through, as will be seen, these counties are interwoven with each other, dovetailed together, so as to make them almost unanimously Republican.

Let me call attention to another fact. It will require 1,280 Democrats to secure one member of the house of representatives in Idaho under this constitution and 2,168 Democrats to elect one senator; while 263 Republicans will be able to elect one representative and 543 to elect one senator.

Now, Mr. President, I challenge the advocates of this bill to take the figures that I give and show that they are not correct from the official reports; and when the conclusion is reached, as it must be mathematically, that this apportionment was based on fraud, that it was concocted for political purposes, that it is impossible in a fair apportionment that this thing should have been brought about, that ought to destroy this bill if nothing else, because, if this be the result in the green tree, what will it be in the dry? If these people commence with this sort of thing in a Territorial condition at their first apportionment, what may we expect hereafter in subsequent apportionments and contests?

Mr. CULLOM. I understand the Senator is discussing Idaho at this time, is he not?

Mr. VEST. I am discussing Idaho in connection with Wyoming, because the bills come together. We no longer admit one State at a time.

Mr. CULLOM. When we take up Idaho we shall see about that.

Mr. VEST. I do not propose to speak about Idaho. I propose to give my conclusions as to both of them now, and, as Mr. SPRINGER says about this apportionment, they have interwoven and dovetailed and intertwined them together, and they come here from the same motive, come in the same fashion, in the same inspiration, and liable to the same objections, except, as I will show directly, that in Wyoming they have admitted the Mormons to vote, whilst in Idaho they have excluded them. That, I suppose was for climatic reasons. [Laughter.]

Mr. CULLOM. Perhaps there are not many in one Territory and a great many in the other.

Mr. VEST. If it is a good thing in one it is good in the other, and if it is a bad thing in one it is bad in the other. But that is not the reason. We ought to be frank with each other. In Idaho the Mormons are supposed to be Democrats and in Wyoming they are supposed to be Republicans; and that makes all the difference in the world.

Mr. CULLOM. A great difference, but I never heard that urged before by anybody.

Mr. VEST. But it is a fact. Here are two Territories side by side with the same class of population, and in one of them these people are excluded from voting and in the other they are admitted. Now it is uncandid for Senators to pretend that there is any other reason for this but one, and that is a political reason.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. They and their wives vote in Wyoming.

Mr. VEST. Why, of course, the women vote. One of their apostles can go up and cast 10 votes, 1 for himself and 9 for his wives.

Mr. PLATT. How many Mormons does the Senator think there are in the Territory of Wyoming?

Mr. VEST. There are a great many less than in Idaho. I have got the figures here somewhere.

Now, Mr. President, I want to give the figures succinctly, and I challenge investigation.

Mr. PLATT. What does the Senator read from?

Mr. VEST. I read from the speech of Mr. SPRINGER. He did not manufacture the figures; I have compared them with the official statements and they are correct.

Under this apportionment—

Says Mr. SPRINGER—

It will require 1,280 Democrats to secure one member of the house of representatives in Idaho under this constitution, and 2,168 Democrats to elect one senator; while 263 Republicans will be able to elect one representative and 543 to elect one senator. There were 8,151 votes cast for the Republican candidate for Delegate in 1888, and 6,404 votes for the Democratic candidate.

That is the difference.

There were 8,151 votes cast for the Republican candidate for Delegate in 1888 and 6,404 votes for the Democratic candidate. The 8,151 Republican votes will be represented in the senate by fifteen senators, one senator for every 543 Republican votes; and every 263 Republican votes will be represented by one representative.

But the 6,404 voters will be represented by only three senators and five representatives; that is, it will require 2,168 Democrats to elect one senator and 1,280 Democrats to elect one representative.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. I am informed by the Delegate from that Territory, who has the right to speak not on this floor, but on the other, that the apportionment is the apportionment made by a Democratic Legislature of that Territory.

Mr. VEST. There it is again.

Mr. CULLOM. And I believe under a Democratic governor, though I do not recollect about that. The only difference between that and the original apportionment and what exists now is that the number of the districts was increased.

Mr. VEST. I do not wish to go into any issue of fact with the Delegate from that Territory. I say my political experience teaches me that is not correct. If this apportionment was made by a Democratic Legislature it is the most remarkable apportionment ever made in the history of the world.

Mr. CULLOM. All we want is to get at the facts.

Mr. VEST. I say, on its face it shows that it was done for political purposes. Tell me that a Democratic Legislature would arbitrarily make such an apportionment as this, which shuts them out from the political control of the Territory absolutely. It would take a dozen Delegates, and I would have to know them all my life, before I would believe any such thing.

In other words, in the election of State senators 543 Republicans will equal 2,168 Democrats, and in the election of members of the lower house of the Legislature 263 Republicans will equal 1,280 Democrats, or in constituting the senate of Idaho one Republican equals four Democrats, and in the house of representatives one Republican equals nearly five Democrats.

Says Mr. SPRINGER:

Now I will give some example to show how this was brought about.

In Shoshone County, which is Republican, with a population of 9,500, four members are allowed by this apportionment in the house of representatives. In Democratic Bear Lake, with 5,900 population, only one member is allowed.

If a Democratic Legislature did that thing they ought to be disfranchised as idiots.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. How could a Democratic Legislature inject into the constitution a provision of this kind? This is the twentieth article of the constitution.

Mr. VEST. I suppose the Senator meant the Democratic convention.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. He said the Democratic Legislature did it. That is in the constitution.

Mr. VEST. I will give him the benefit of any correction.

Mr. CULLOM. What was that?

Mr. VEST. The Senator said the Democratic Legislature did this. I take it he meant the convention.

Mr. CULLOM. What I meant to say was—I did not hear the Senator's remarks—that the same apportionment under which the delegates were elected, as I understand, was the apportionment that the Democratic Legislature had made for the election of members of the Legislature, that that stood, and under that delegates were elected afterwards to the constitutional convention.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. But the Senator from Missouri is criticising the apportionment of the Territory by the convention for future elections to be held in it, not the elections where delegates were chosen to the convention.

Mr. CULLOM. We shall see what that is when we get to it.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, in Cassia County, which is a Democratic county—

In Cassia County, with a population of 4,500, only one member is allowed, or two members for a Democratic population of 10,400, while Shoshone County, with 9,500, or 900 less, has four representatives in the Legislature. That was not due to scarcity of Democrats, but to a plentiful supply of Republican ingenuity and gerrymandering skill. And in Republican Custer, with a population of 4,900, two members are allowed, while in Democratic Bear Lake, with 5,900, only one member is allowed. Although Bear Lake has a thousand more population than Republican Custer it has only one representative in the Legislature. Republican Lemhi, with a population of 5,500, has two members. It has a population of 400 less than Democratic Bear Lake, and yet it has one representative more in the Legislature.

It is impossible under a fair apportionment that that thing should come about. It is evident upon the very face of it that there must have been some motive, and, of course, a political one, at the bottom of this singular and extraordinary arrangement of representation.

Mr. President, we are confronted in the case of Idaho, as in the case of Wyoming, with a population less than required for the ratio of representation in the House of Representatives, and two Senators more are to be added here for 113,000 people, nearly 40,000 less than the ratio of representation required now for a member of the House of Representatives; and under this state of things four Senators are to be added to this body, to say nothing of the addition to be made to the popular branch of Congress, without any political exigency; when the movements have commenced in a most irregular form and fashion, when we are confronted by the most extraordinary provisions in these constitutions, when we are asked to overturn our Anglo-Saxon civilization and to build up a new one upon the idea of woman suffrage in Wyoming, when Mormons are excluded in one Territory and included in another, although holding identically the same religious opinions! Why, sir, if this can be done and is done, it is a farce to talk about adopting any other except arbitrary methods as to the admission of new States into the Union.

Mr. President, I can not vote for these bills, although as a matter of course they will become laws. They will become laws from force of habit, if nothing else. They will become laws because they are reported here by a dominant majority. But I can tell Senators now that the time will come when they will see that they have been tampering with the most solemn and serious question presented to the representatives of the people of the United States, that they have, without reason and in the face of argument, as I deliberately assert, in order, out of the sheer wantonness of political supremacy, trampled upon the principles and practices which our fathers established and taught us to observe.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I do not intend to spend much time in the discussion of this bill, for I am admonished that if I want to secure the passage of anything in this Senate I must be brief in my statements with regard to the propriety of the measure. In other words, the time of the Senate is too valuable, with the measures that are crowding upon us, to spend much time in discussion. If the time of the Senate is to be consumed in discussion of this bill and the bill which I trust is to follow, that time will be largely consumed on the other side of the Chamber, I am sure; but I want to reply very briefly, and as vigorously as I may, to the argument just made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], because I suppose it represents and expresses the objections which are made and to be made to the admission of Wyoming and possibly to the admission of Idaho.

Now I agree with one statement of the Senator from Missouri, and I disagree to all the rest. I agree that these bills are not the result of any political exigency. They are not intended to be. No political exigency is claimed upon which these bills rest, and upon which we claim that these Territories have a fair right to admission as States. In every possible respect, as to everything which has been considered essential in order that the right to a claim of statehood should be complete, these Territories can not be questioned, with one exception, and that is as to population.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Directly on that point I should like to ask the Senator a question. It seems to me that there can be no reason, except a political one, why Wyoming and Idaho should be picked out for admission here, unless the dominant party in this body believe that they are going to gain a party advantage by admitting these Territories, and at the same time excluding Arizona and New Mexico, both of which have more territory, more population, and more wealth, and both of which are older than the other two, unless there is some political reason for it, and I confess I can see none. I should be glad to have the Senator explain to the Senate why these two are brought in together, younger than the other two, smaller in population, smaller in territory, and less wealthy than they are.

Mr. PLATT. It seems the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Arkansas do not agree. The Senator from Missouri thinks there is no political exigency and the Senator from Arkansas thinks there is. I agree with the Senator from Missouri.

There is another point about which I apprehend the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Arkansas will not agree, which I was going to speak of further on, and that is as to the clause in the bill of rights which says that there shall be no distinction between resident aliens and citizens as to possession, taxation, and descent of property. That happens to be in the constitution of Arkansas, and I suppose the Senator from Arkansas will not agree with the Senator from Missouri in that respect, for he certainly would not desire to keep out a Territory which had incorporated into its bill of rights a provision which was taken from the bill of rights of the State of Arkansas.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I should be glad to have the Senator answer my question without undertaking to reconcile my views with those of the Senator from Missouri. I suppose any difference that exists between us does not give either of us very much trouble, but I should like to have the Senator make an answer to my proposition.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator will obtain it if he will not interrupt me.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I will not interrupt if the Senator will give me his answer. I thought from the way he was beginning his speech he was going to bring another matter out. I will sit down and wait patiently to hear his answer.

Mr. PLATT. The bills for the admission of Wyoming and Idaho were introduced early in the present session. The bills were introduced at the last session and reported in the case of both of those Territories for an enabling act and would have been passed if they could have been reached. These Territories followed the provisions of those enabling acts in the calling of their conventions. Of course the acts were not passed, but they followed the provisions of those acts, which were reported to the Senate and which no doubt would have been passed if they could have been reached, in calling the constitutional conventions. They went forward and adopted the constitutions. They submitted those constitutions to the people and the people approved them. Then they came here and very early in this session of the Senate bills were introduced to admit them as States under the constitutions which they had just formed, following the enabling acts which had been proposed and reported to the Senate. Those cases were considered by the committee; they were reported; each stood upon its own merits; they were not connected, and the majority of the committee—and I think I do not go beyond what I have a right to say when I add that the whole committee without serious objection—believed that these two Territories upon the facts which they had presented were entitled to admission.

The case with regard to Arizona and New Mexico is entirely different. It will be time enough to consider those cases when they come before the Senate. For Arizona I think no bill has been presented. It is possible one has been presented, but there has been no claim made for its consideration in the Committee on Territories of the Senate. I think there has been none presented, but I am not entirely certain of that fact. Nobody has appeared at the door of the Committee on Territories of the Senate asking that Arizona should be admitted as a State.

So far as New Mexico is concerned, we have had a partial hearing upon that, and if it shall be determined upon full hearing that New Mexico ought to be admitted upon the facts as shown to the committee, there will be no hesitation about it and a report will be made. If, on the other hand, it shall be found upon the facts that, in the opinion of the committee or a majority of the committee, it is not yet ripe for statehood, a report will be made the other way. These four Territories have in no sense been connected. There is no politics about it, and any attempt to make it appear that political considerations have governed the reports in these cases, I think, is entirely without the possibility of being sustained.

As I said with regard to the argument of the Senator from Missouri, I agree that these bills are not presented here as the result of political exigency. Indeed I think that some Senators on this side of the Chamber will for the first time learn that the Republicans have got a sure prospect of carrying Idaho and its Legislature, from the argument which has been made here by the Senator from Missouri. It is a matter which has not entered into the consideration either of the committee or the Senate in bringing forward these bills and pressing them here, and so far as I am concerned, so far as I represent the Committee on Territories of the Senate, I stand here for the admission of these two Territories as States because I believe they are entitled to statehood on every ground that has ever been considered as being a requisite for statehood, and I should be unjust to those people and to those Territories if I stood here to refuse them that boon, which is the dearest to every American citizen. I should feel if I stood here to keep Wyoming and Idaho out of the Union that the men occupying those Territories in the far West would have a right to charge me with jealousy of the Western people because I was an Eastern man, and I desire as a Senator representing an Eastern State to say that I believe Wyoming has as good a right—I do not speak of an absolute right or a legal right, but a right in view of all the qualifications which have been exacted from Territories before their admission to statehood—as any Territory which has ever been admitted as a State in the whole history of our country. We followed but the general policy of this Government when we reported Wyoming as fit for admission.

Now, I want to take up the objections which have seemed to be prominently urged by the Senator from Missouri. He says that two Senators ought not to come here upon this floor from a sparsely settled State with a population not exceeding perhaps 100,000 or 125,000, not up to the ratio of representation, which is 151,912, and have the same influence in this body and the same number of votes that the State of Missouri has. What he says about that applies as well to the State of Connecticut as to the State of Missouri, and I say as a representative of the State of Connecticut that I have no prejudice and no objection to two Senators from a new State, if that State is fairly entitled to admission into the Union, coming here and having just as many votes upon this floor as the two Senators from Connecticut, that is older and has a larger population.

It applies to the State of New York as well as it does to the State of Rhode Island, or to the State of Missouri, or the State of Connecticut. It might be said that New York with its five millions of people or more ought to have more Representatives upon this floor than the State of Oregon with three or four hundred thousand, or the State of Missouri with its million, more or less—I do not speak by the book. But such has not been the theory of the Constitution of our Government. It was not the theory of the fathers, of the framers of the Constitution. They did not apportion the Senators who should occupy seats in this body according to the population of the States which they represented. The disproportion and disparity existed at the formation of the Constitution. It was never intended that there should be popular representation upon this floor; but it was intended that two Senators should represent each State. If that is so, and it be admitted that, under the general policy of this country and the conditions and circumstances under which other States have been admitted, Wyoming is to be admitted here as a State, then as a State she is entitled to two Senators upon this floor as much as Florida is entitled to two Senators, or Rhode Island is entitled to two Senators, or Montana is entitled to two Senators when New York and Pennsylvania and Ohio and Missouri and all those States have vastly more population.

That argument falls to the ground the moment that Wyoming presents herself within the conditions and circumstances which have hitherto been supposed to justify the admission of Territories into the Union as States; and I say, and the facts given in the report which has been read here show, that if a comparison were made between the resources, the population, the wealth, the character, the stability, the prospects of future growth of Wyoming and the other Territories that have been admitted as States, it will be found that Wyoming does not fall below them in any respect, except in this one respect of population, and as to that, six States are shown to have been admitted with a less population at the time of admission than the unit of representation required by law for one Representative at that time, and those States are Florida, Oregon, Kansas, Nevada, Nebraska, and Colorado. Up to the admission of the four States at the last Congress, Oregon, Kansas, Nevada, Nebraska, and Colorado were the States last admitted, in the order named, and no one of them had at the time of admission an estimated population equal to the then unit of representation. Other States have been admitted when the population was barely equal to the unit of representation. For instance, Illinois was two or three hundred short at the time of her admission, but has grown into that magnificent empire represented in part by my friend who sits near me [Mr. CULLOM], that State which to-day (and I commenced to say it without thinking of the Senator from Missouri) embraces within its limits the second city of the Union, was admitted with just a trifle less than the population required to give her one Representative according to the unit of representation upon the floor of the other House. We have never insisted upon it. The character of the people has been deemed to be of immensely more consequence than the question whether it possessed just exactly the number, or a number exceeding the unit of representation.

When the character of the people of a Territory has been such as to make it apparent that they were able to govern themselves and to govern themselves wisely; when the Territory has been settled by immigration from Eastern States, or from older States, where the inhabitants have been accustomed to exercise and discharge the duties of State citizenship and to take part in the affairs of the State; where the educational and religious and other moral features of the Territory have shown that they were of high character and a prosperous, intelligent people, it has never been made a condition of admission that there should be absolutely the ratio which would entitle a State to a Representative.

But there is another consideration, and that is whether in the immediate future there is prospect that the population will be great enough so that the unit of representation will be observed. Look at Wyoming. With perhaps a slow growth at first, her population is now most rapidly increasing. Since these bills have been pending here before the Senate of the United States, towns and cities have grown up, have been built in the desert and grown up to a population of three, four, five, or six thousand people; and, as was said of our country in a somewhat distinguished oration in its early period, the fires in our autumnal forests are not more rapid than the growth of its cities and towns. Its development, its 30,000 underlying square miles of coal, its great oil fields, its mineral fields, its 10,000,000 acres capable of irrigation, its lands susceptible of agriculture and now being developed agriculturally without the need of irrigation—all these things have given an impetus to the Territory which is swelling its population with great rapidity, and it only requires the seal of statehood to be set upon the brow of Wyoming to increase its population with much greater rapidity. This idea that we must wait before citizens of these Territories, as good as the men who occupy seats upon this floor, as well qualified to exercise and discharge all the duties of citizenship as the citizens of Missouri, or New York, or Texas, or Connecticut, or Vermont, that we must wait until they get the exact number, 151,912, and have it proved to a mathematical demonstration that they have it before the Territory can be admitted, is a claim which I think ought to find no support in this Senate. It never has found support here hitherto.

It is only urged where there is believed to be a political exigency to keep out such a people; when for some reason or other the party in power or out of power does not want a Territory to come in, does not want the people that ought to have the opportunity of governing themselves in a State to have that opportunity, then this argument that the population is a little short is resorted to. Connecticut is not afraid of the votes of the two Senators who will shortly sit in this Senate Chamber from the State of Wyoming, and Missouri need not be afraid of them.

But the Senator says that really he can never vote to admit to full participation in the privileges of statehood in this Republic a community where women are going to vote and where women may vote by the constitution. He is afraid they will not vote wisely. Well, Mr. President, I have never been an advocate of woman suffrage. I never believed, as some Senators believe, that it was wise. But with all that, I would not keep a Territory out of the Union as a State because its constitution did allow women to vote, nor would I force upon a Territory any restriction or qualification as to what the vote should be in that respect. When Washington Territory came here and asked for admission and the bill was passed, there had been woman suffrage in Washington Territory, and I was appealed to by a great many citizens all over the United States to keep Washington out so far as my action would do it from the Union until it restored the right of women to vote which had been taken away under a decision of the courts of the Territory of Washington, taken away, as I thought unjustly, for I did not think that that decision was good law. The Senator from Massachusetts interrogated me when I was advocating the admission of Washington as a State as to why we did not incorporate into that enabling act some language which should undo the wrong which had been done by the supreme court of the Territory of Washington and which should restore to the women of that Territory the right which they had enjoyed, the right of voting, and I said then, as I say now, that I think that is a matter which belongs to the Territory; and I am surprised that gentlemen who are so devoted to home rule as a sacred right which should never be interfered with in this Republic, should not be willing to allow to a Territory, when it asks for admission into the Union, the right to determine whether women should be allowed to vote or should not be allowed to vote by the constitution of the proposed State. This does not fasten woman suffrage upon Wyoming. It will still be within the control of the State; but to my mind, however Senators may think upon that subject, whether they be in favor of woman suffrage or opposed to it, it is no reason for denying a State admission because in the formation of its constitution that State has said that there should be no distinction on account of sex. It is a question which these men and these women in Wyoming have a right to determine for themselves. Why should we, the Congress of the United States, stand here and say to that Territory, where the women have enjoyed the right of voting for twenty years, and nobody arises to gainsay it or to say they have not exercised that right wisely, why should we stand here and say, "Keep out of the Union; we will let no community, no Territory, in here that does not deprive its women of the right which they have for twenty years enjoyed while in a Territorial condition?"

My position is the same about as it was in the case of Washington Territory. Let the Territories settle it for themselves, and when they have settled it the Republic will not go to pieces, the Union will not be dissolved. We shall not break up this great and glorious country because forsooth we have admitted a State in which the people of the Territory, acting with full knowledge, have said that women may vote. It does not determine the question of whether they shall vote anywhere else. If the people of the State of Missouri say that women shall not vote, I say amen. If the people of the State of Missouri say that women shall vote, I would not consider that Missouri was any the less a noble and proper representative among the States of the Union for that reason. Every State in this Union to-day can, if it choose, confer the right of suffrage upon women, and here we are asked to keep out a Territory because it has conferred that right in its constitution. It seems to me, sir, there is nothing to this argument which should debar the Territory from admission.

Now, the Senator from Missouri seems to be filled with righteous indignation over the idea that an alien residing anywhere in this broad land should have the right to own or possess any property, or, if he happens to own or possess any property, that the law should equally apply to him as to citizens of the United States with regard to its possession, disposition, descent, or inheritance. Mr. President, I think that matter has been carried a great way. I think that, while there has been an abuse in this country in the matter of allowing aliens, and especially non-resident aliens, to acquire large bodies of land, we have gone much further than we ought to have gone in applying the remedy.

I have had occasion at this session of Congress to introduce a bill to enable one of the distinguished and wealthy citizens of this District to acquire title to a piece of property which he bought and paid for in good faith, not knowing of the law that had been passed and which under that law was to be confiscated and to the proceeds of which he could have no claim. It would be acknowledged by any citizen of the District, if I were to mention his name here, that he was a person who ought to have as good a right to purchase land in this District of Columbia and to transfer it and to have it descend to his children as any citizen; and yet he happened to be an alien, born in a foreign country, living here all his life, acquiring property and gaining reputation. Living where the right of suffrage is wholly denied he had failed to be naturalized, and not knowing of this law had bought a house, and he found that under the law we had passed here he could not hold the house, it could not descend to his wife or his children when he died.

This matter has been carried a good way, Mr. President. It is one of the things about which public clamor has driven Congress beyond the bounds of propriety; and as I said by way of interruption in reply to the Senator from Missouri, I think there are but three States in which this proscription, that a man who happens to be born outside of the United States shall not acquire real estate, exists. Whether this declaration in the bill of rights of the constitution of the proposed State of Wyoming goes as far as that, I do not know. It says that no distinction shall exist as to the possession, transfer, or descent of property between aliens and citizens; they shall all be treated alike. Why, at this very session of Congress we have been called upon to deal with the law in regard to the Territories so that it should not apply to mining property; and we have been told here by the Senators from Nevada and Senators from mining States that it works an immense injustice upon those Territories engaged in mining. That is no reason why we should keep out a State, in my judgment. Knowing the people of Wyoming as I know them, some of them individually and others by reputation, I am sure that as a State they will never allow any abuse of the right of a foreigner or an alien resident in that State to acquire lands. Public sentiment will take care of that.

The Senator referred to the population. He said it was not large enough, and he assumes 60,000 as the population of Wyoming. I do not wish to take the time of the Senate in reading, but I will read a few words from the report of the governor of Wyoming made in 1889. It is 1890 now. This presents the great rapidity with which in that Territory the population is increasing. It is increasing more rapidly in Wyoming than it ever has before. The ratio of increase is very much larger than it has been at any time in any other period of its history, and for the reason that the work of development has but just commenced and is now rapidly going on.

I spoke a little while ago of the development of towns there since these bills have been pending. It sounds like a romance. A long stretch of railroad has been built to enter the new coal fields of the Territory where anthracite coal, or a coal very nearly approaching anthracite, has been discovered, and where unquestionably there is to be the seat of a great population. The governor says:

The vote in 1890 was 7,667. As communities grew older the ratio in population compared with the vote increases, a change especially noticeable in Wyoming, which is now a community of homes and families. Well-informed judges on the subject, that have lived in the Territory since its organization, estimate the present population from 95,000 to 105,000.

And in conversation with the governor he stated to me that he believed that was a very moderate estimate. There is no use in guesses when the census is so near upon us. Yet no census will gather in all the people of Wyoming. I do not believe that the next census will show more than 75 per cent. of the actual population of the Territory of Wyoming, and for reasons given here with reference to the vote:

Wyoming is the eighth largest in size of the political divisions of the Union, her population in proportion to the area small, and the inhabitants widely scattered. But few voting places are made, and many people live one to three days' journey from the polls. On account of this condition not one man in twenty in the stock business, and not one in fifty of those engaged in prospecting or mining reach the polls.

That is true with regard to the census. The census enumerators who get 2 cents a head for enumerating a man, or possibly get a little more in a sparsely settled Territory like that, do not follow up the water courses where the cattleman has gone or where the prospector has gone or where the miner has built his camp or where men are herding their sheep. The population that lives in the large cities and towns will be found and the population which is scattered over the Territory will not be found; but I apprehend that in the towns and cities of Wyoming from 10,000 down to 1,000 you will find a vastly larger population than the Senator from Missouri has been talking about there. I do not think the governor's estimate is a wild estimate. I believe there are nearer 125,000 people in Wyoming to-day than there are 100,000. So much for the question of real population.

The Senator, reading from the speech of a Representative in another branch of Congress, saw fit to ridicule the statement made by the committee that on the day preceding the election there was a storm, and that the election did not bring out as full a vote as would otherwise have been brought out, and he cited the Signal Office to show that on the day of election the weather was mild and pleasant.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] very naturally and very properly suggested that that might be an argument in support of the fact announced by the committee. The committee took it from the memorial of the committee appointed by the constitutional convention. It is signed by ten gentlemen, whose veracity will not be questioned in the Territory of Wyoming, or questioned by anybody who knows them, who were on the ground, and know what the facts were. It seems hardly necessary to refer to such a matter, and if it were not that it has been made much of to try to keep Wyoming out of the Union, I would not refer to it here, but they say in their memorial:

The constitution so framed was submitted as directed, according to the provisions of section 7 of Article XXI thereof, and was ratified by five-sixths of the citizens voting thereon, by a vote small in itself, and yet large in view of the little opposition felt by the people, and of the facts that no other issue was presented and that the day of the election followed one of the severest snow-storms ever known at that season, and was also marked by extreme cold, rendering it practically impossible for the people of many precincts to reach the polls.

Whether these gentlemen were all wicked Republicans or not I am unable to say, for I assume that the Senator from Missouri would not believe them if they were Republicans; but I venture to suggest that some of these gentlemen were Democrats. I do not believe that that convention, wicked politically, as the Senator from Missouri thinks it was, would quite have the hardihood to appoint a memorial committee to present its constitution to the people which did not contain at least one Democrat.

Oh, Mr. President, they did not tell a lie about this matter. It is one of those things which have been invented to try to cast discredit upon the vote of the people. I do not know where the Signal Office has its reports from with regard to the election day, but I know that that Territory, now standing and knocking for admission at the doors of this Republic, embraces an area of 98,000 square miles, once and a half as large as all New England, and there might have been a Signal Service report from New England on a certain day of last season that said it was mild and pleasant at New Haven when a snow-storm might have been raging fiercely in the section from which my friend who sits next to me [Mr. EDMUNDS] comes. It is a large country, and the truth about that vote is that it is larger proportionately than the vote which has ordinarily been cast upon constitutions which have been thus framed and submitted to the people before the admission of States.

The truth about that vote is that the facts and circumstances attending it show that there was no organized opposition to the adoption of the constitution, nor has it ever been claimed, except as the idea was evolved in the fruitful brain of a gentleman whose speech has been read here and indorsed by the Senator from Missouri, that there was ever anything of a political character or a political question in the formation and adoption of this constitution. Politics never entered into that constitutional convention. There was no political division. There was no political jealousy there, and there is to-day no political division on this subject in that Territory, Democrats as well as Republicans are anxious to have that Territory admitted to the Union as a State, and they do not thank the Senator from Missouri, or any other Senator upon that side, for objecting to it.

The apportionment in the constitution, the Senator says, is a wicked one. This is the apportionment:

Albany County, two senators and five representatives.
Carbon County, two senators and five representatives.
Converse County, one senator and three representatives.
Crook County, one senator and two representatives.
Fremont County, one senator and two representatives.
Laramie County, three senators and six representatives.
Johnson County, one senator and two representatives.
Sheridan County, one senator and two representatives.
Sweetwater County, two senators and three representatives.
Uinta County, two senators and three representatives.

Now, I want to give the vote of those counties at the election in 1889, which elected a Delegate:

Albany County cast 2,608, Carbon County cast 2,633, Converse County cast 1,307, Crook County cast 1,150, Fremont County cast 1,047, Laramie County cast 3,695, Johnson County cast 916, Sheridan County cast 870, Sweetwater County cast 1,747, Uinta County cast 2,037.

The constitutional convention very properly said that in the apportionment each county should have one senator. Is there any objection to that? That has been the usual course in the apportionment of the senate and house of representatives, not only in new States but in Territories before they become States. So the smallest county was entitled to one representative upon that theory. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] remarks that that has been the constitution of Vermont from 1777 down to the present time. It is a principle universally adopted in the new States and Territories so far as I know.

So, Johnson County with 916 votes was to have one senator. It had one senator and two representatives, the house being twice as large as the senate, if not three times as large in the new State, but I am not sure which. Next came Sheridan County with 870 votes. That had one senator and two representatives. Having given it one senator, of course they must give it twice the number of representatives. Then came Fremont County, which had 1,047 votes, still a small county, but it had one senator and they gave it two representatives. Then came Converse County, which had 1,307 votes, with its one senator and two representatives.

I believe I have now given all the counties which were awarded only one senator. Then the larger counties that had from 2,000 to 2,600 votes were accorded two senators and three representatives, and to one large county, Laramie, which had 3,695 votes, were given three senators and six representatives. Admitting that each county was to have one senator and double the number of representatives, because the house was twice as large as the senate, there could have been no other apportionment possibly made by that constitutional convention, and if the vote cast in 1889 correctly represents the population then, with the single exception that each county was to have one senator and twice as many representatives, that apportionment was strictly on the basis of population.

No, Mr. President, this is an afterthought; I do not think I should be far out of the way if I called it a subterfuge. These arguments are born, not of facts, but of political exigency, and to my absolute surprise it has been discovered on the part of the minority of the Senate that for some reason or other these Territories ought to be kept out. It is an argument which up to this time had not entered into my mind, and I had not supposed it had entered into the mind of any member of the Committee on Territories.

I think myself that each one of these Territories which have been already reported upon will be an honor and a credit to the Republic. I think the stars which will represent them on the folds of our flag will shine as brightly and with as pure a luster as any star in that brilliant constellation. These are hardy men who have gone there to conquer this great country. But they are true men; as true, nay truer, than the men who gather in our great cities, where a county may have a population equal to the population of this whole Territory. They have before them a magnificent future. They have before them a territory of natural resources which are not comprehended in this country.

Talk about its agriculture! Wyoming of itself, with irrigation, can support ten millions of people by agriculture. It has a soil more fertile than the Nile Valley, and all it wants is water turned upon it to make it blossom like the rose and bring forth abundantly. It has greater mineral resources, including coal with its other resources, than any other of our Western subdivisions. It has more coal under it than Pennsylvania ever had, and of an excellent quality, now being developed; but it has, above all, a true manhood, which is ready to grapple with all these problems, to develop all these resources, to add not only to its own wealth, but to the wealth of the Republic, to its standing, its greatness, its grandeur, and its glory, and I am sorry that any political exigency has been discovered which, in the mind of anybody, makes it necessary to attempt to keep out this Territory from the Union.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MARTIN, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 8909) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 3940) to amend an act entitled "An act to extend the fees of certain officers over the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona."

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 389) granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents;

A bill (H. R. 344) to grant the right of way to the Pittsburgh, Columbus and Fort Smith Railway Company through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 1110) granting a pension to William J. Bryan;

A bill (H. R. 1405) granting a pension to Betsey E. Cole;

A bill (H. R. 1474) for the relief of George W. Madden;

A bill (H. R. 1783) granting a pension to Mrs. Alice A. Cunningham;

A bill (H. R. 3458) granting a pension to Ann Ruffner; and

A bill (H. R. 5974) extending the time of payment to purchasers of land of the Omaha tribe of Indians in Nebraska, and for other purposes.

HENRY S. FRENCH.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table:

To the Senate of the United States:

In compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 23d instant (the House of Representatives concurring), I return herewith the bill (S. 145) for the relief of the legal representatives of Henry S. French.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 25, 1890.

HISTORY OF BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. CALL. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, which may be printed and lie over.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is, directed to prepare an official statement from the Senate document A History of Bills and Resolutions of the Senate of the number of bills introduced by each Senator, and the number which passed the Senate, and the number which became laws.

Mr. PLATT. Let that lie over and be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over and be printed.

ADMISSION OF WYOMING.

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. PLATT. Why not let us have a vote on this Wyoming bill?

Mr. VEST. You can not get a vote this evening.

Mr. PLATT. I appeal to my friend from Missouri if he will not allow us to have a vote on this bill. He started what he had to say by stating that he did not suppose he could delay the passage of the bill for a great while, and I should like to have him act on that line and allow us to pass it to-night.

Mr. VEST. It is now a few minutes to 6 o'clock, and I move that the Senate adjourn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 51 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, June 26, 1890, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 25, 1890.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report on the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. CONGER. Regular order.

Mr. BLAND. Yes; let us have the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The conference report has precedence.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8909) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 10, 41, 64, 69, 70, and 75.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 9, 20, 22, 23, 24, 33, 39, 43, 44, 45, 50, 51, 52, 53, 55, 66, 67, 78, 79, 81, 82, and 83; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out from said amendment the words "the reception of" and insert in lieu thereof the word "reception;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Provided, That the moneys heretofore and hereby appropriated for the purpose of erecting buildings and making other improvements on said proving-ground may be forthwith expended upon the acquisition by the United States of the title thereto."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the word "dollars," where it first occurs in said amendment, the following:

"Provided, That no part of this money shall be expended until the owners of the patents to be tested under this provision shall agree by contract to give the Government the option within a specified time to contract at such price as shall be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Navy for the exclusive right on the part of the Government to manufacture by contract or otherwise such submarine guns and projectiles without the payment of any royalty on the same: Provided, That submarine guns and projectiles shall prove satisfactory on due test, and be approved by the Secretary of the Navy."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following paragraph:

"Coaling station, Port Royal, S. C.: Toward the construction of a timber dry-dock or floating dock at the coaling station, Port Royal, S. C., in accordance with the recommendation of the commission to report as to the most desirable location on or near the coast of the Gulf of Mexico and the South Atlantic coasts for navy-yards and dry-docks, $200,000. And the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to make a contract for the construction of said timber dry-docks or floating dock, the cost not exceeding $200,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the word "Congress" and insert in lieu of the matter stricken out the following:

"And the President be, and he hereby is, required to appoint a commission composed of two competent naval officers, one competent army officer, and two competent persons from civil life, whose duty it shall be to select a suitable site, having due regard to commercial and naval interests, for a dry-dock at some point on the shores of the Gulf of Mexico, or the waters connected therewith; and having selected such site shall, if upon private lands, estimate its value and ascertain as nearly as practicable the cost for which it can be purchased or acquired, and of their proceedings and action make full and detailed report to the President, and the President shall transmit such report with his recommendations to Congress."

"That to defray the expenses of such commission the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out, after the word "ships," the words "which yard is hereby reopened for the repair of vessels of the Navy;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"Improvement of machinery plant, navy-yard, Boston, Mass.: For extra tools required to put the yard in condition for repairing modern marine machinery with economy and dispatch, including improvements in boiler-making plant and improved machine tools, $40,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 47: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$75,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 77: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 77, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert the following: "$938,083.51;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 80: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 80, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out in line 8, page 35, of the bill the word

"twenty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-one;" and the Senate agree to the same.

C. A. BOUTELLE,
HENRY CABOT LODGE,
H. A. HERBERT,
Managers on the part of the House.
EUGENE HALE,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

During the reading of the conference report the following proceeding took place:

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I observe that there is still considerable of that paper to be read, and I hardly think it is fair for the gentleman from Maine to bring in this report now to use up the time which has been assigned for the consideration of the silver bill, unless we can have unanimous consent that the time may be correspondingly extended beyond 2 o'clock this afternoon. Certainly when a special order is made for the consideration of a measure and the vote is to be taken at a certain time, nothing else ought to be brought in to consume that time.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have no idea that this conference report will occupy any considerable time.

Mr. BLAND. It will take some time to even read the report, and that ought not to come out of the time of gentlemen who desire to address the House upon the silver question.

Mr. BOUTELLE. If the House will be content with a brief statement from me, I will make it.

Mr. BLAND. Then, Mr. Speaker, I hope that whatever time is occupied with this subject will be allowed for and will not be taken out of the time assigned for the consideration of the silver bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the reading of the report will be suspended and the gentleman from Maine will make an explanation.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, the report—

Mr. BLAND. I insist, Mr. Speaker, that there shall be an understanding that whatever time the gentleman consumes shall not come out of the time under the special order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must say to the gentleman from Missouri that by the rules of the House a conference report is given preference even over a motion to adjourn.

Mr. BLAND. I appreciate that; but if a special order is made and a certain time allowed for the debate of a measure, and if then other gentlemen interject their conference reports, they may take up the whole of the time, and I say it is unfair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that this report will probably not give rise to discussion.

Mr. BLAND. I ask unanimous consent that the time under the special order be extended after 2 o'clock to the same extent that time is occupied by this report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I think the gentleman had better withdraw his objection and let me make a brief statement.

Mr. BLAND. The Speaker has withdrawn it for me, and I say it is unfair to interject that report here at this time.

Mr. BOUTELLE. There is no unfairness about doing one's duty. The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the conference report.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the statement accompanying the report will be read.

Mr. BOUTELLE. We have a statement prepared, but as the reading of all the details would occupy considerable time, perhaps the gentleman will consent to hear an explanation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the statement will be read for information.

The SPEAKER. The statement will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8909) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes, submit the following statement as to the effect of the recommendations of the conference report:

The House recedes as to No. 1, to correct an error.
The Senate recedes as to Nos. 2 and 3, change of title.
The Senate recedes from Nos. 4 and 5, as to location of torpedo school.
The House recedes as to No. 7, with verbal amendment.
The House recedes as to No. 8, with addition of a proviso.
The House recedes as to Nos. 9 and 10, with addition of a proviso.
The House recedes as to No. 11, being change of title.
The Senate recedes as to No. 19, as to punctuation.
The House recedes as to Nos. 36 and 37, verbal amendments.
The House recedes as to Nos. 38 and 39, striking out the words "building and" in each paragraph.
The House recedes as to Nos. 42 and 45, changing footing.
The House recedes as to No. 52, changing footing.
The House recedes as to No. 53, changing title.
The House recedes as to Nos. 55 and 56, changing phraseology.
The House recedes as to No. 67, changing title.
The Senate recedes as to No. 73, changing phraseology.
No. 77 is amended to correct footing.
The House recedes as to Nos. 75 and 79, providing regulations for appropriation and purchase of supplies.
The House recedes as to No. 80, changing designation of vessel from "armed" to "protected" cruiser, with an amendment changing required speed from 20 to 21 knots.
No. 83 changes figures of total to conform to the amendments.
(Above includes Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 19, 36, 37, 38, 39, 42, 45, 52, 53, 55, 56, 67, 73, 75, 79, 80, and 83.)

Of the amendments which affect the amount of appropriations, we report: The House recedes as to No. 20, adding $25,000 for public works at New York navy-yard.

Also, as to No. 21, providing $15,000 to connect pumps with old dry-dock at Norfolk navy-yard.

Also, as to No. 22, to complete repairs to sectional dock at Mare Island, $15,000.

Also, as to No. 23, to build wharf at New London, $6,500.

Also, as to No. 24, extending launching ways, etc., at New York and Norfolk navy-yards, $13,000.

Also, as to No. 35, with proviso for a commission to make similar examination of Gulf coast and increasing appropriation for expenses from $10,000 to $15,000 for both commissions.

Also, as to No. 40, providing additional tools for League Island navy-yard, with verbal amendment.

Also, as to No. 41, appropriating $200,000 toward construction of a dry-dock at Port Royal, S. C., not to exceed in cost $500,000; amended by inserting the words "or floating dock," transposing paragraph to follow amendment No. 21.

Also, as to No. 43, increasing appropriation for steam-machinery, $25,000.

Also, as to No. 44, increasing appropriation for handling, preservation, etc., of steam-machinery, $15,000.

Also, as to No. 47, with amendment appropriating $50,000 additional for improvement of machinery plant at navy-yard, Brooklyn, reduced to $25,000 additional.

Also, as to No. 48, with amendment appropriating $23,170 additional for improvement of machinery plant at navy-yard, Mare Island, reduced to $10,000 additional.

Also, as to No. 50, increasing appropriation for special course of study at Naval Academy, $2,500.

Also, as to No. 51, appropriating $3,500 to open King George's street adjoining Naval Academy at Annapolis.

Also, as to No. 81, adding authorization of one torpedo cruiser and one torpedo-boat at a total cost not to exceed $475,000.

Also, as to No. 82, increasing the appropriation for construction and steam-machinery of vessels "heretofore and herein authorized," etc., $475,000.

The Senate recedes from No. 46, and restores the appropriation for improvement of machinery plant, navy-yard, Boston, $40,000, with amendment.

The Senate recedes from Nos. 64, 69, 70, and 75, by amending phraseology and omitting items for rent of buildings for use of assistant quartermaster Marine Corps at San Francisco, discontinued, $490.

C. A. BOUTELLE,
H. C. LODGE,
H. A. HERBERT.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, the naval appropriation bill as passed by the House carried $22,160,535.53; as amended by the Senate it carried $23,126,685.53; as the result of the conference the bill now carries $23,117,589.03, a net increase of $957,183.50 in the bill as now agreed upon, as compared with the bill when originally passed by the House. The larger number of the amendments upon which the conferees have agreed were of a minor character, involving no matters of appropriation, many of them being simply questions of punctuation and phraseology or matters of a purely administrative character.

The increase of appropriation is made up principally by the item of $475,000 provided for the construction of a swift torpedo cruiser of about 750 tons and one torpedo-boat, for which the conferees, concurring with the Senate, have allowed the entire amount authorized upon the ground that these vessels can be constructed within the coming year. The next largest amount of increase by the Senate, agreed to by the conference, is $200,000 toward the construction of a dry-dock at Port Royal, S. C., to cost not exceeding $500,000, a matter upon which I may say I had not deemed it necessary that action should be taken during the current year; but the conferees thought otherwise, and have reported favorably this appropriation. The other amounts are an increase of $25,000 for improvements and repairs at the New York navy-yard, upon representations which seem to make such work imperative; $15,000 for connecting the new pump-house with the old dry-dock at Norfolk, which has been reported as desirable by the Bureau of Yards and Docks; $15,000 for completing the repairs to the sectional dock at Mare Island; $13,000, rendered necessary, according to the reports recently made, for extending the launching-ways at the New York and Norfolk navy-yards so as to provide for the launching of the two battle-ships now under construction there; $25,000 additional for the improvement of the construction plant at New York; and an addition of $5,000 to the appropriation of $10,000 made by the Senate for a commission to examine and report upon the location of a dry-dock on the Pacific coast in the vicinity of Puget Sound, to which the conference committee have added a provision for the appointment of another commission to examine and report upon the location of a dry-dock at some point on the coast of the Gulf of Mexico or the waters adjacent thereto, the appropriation of $10,000 for the one commission being increased to $15,000 for the two. Fifty thousand dollars is also appropriated for the purchase of armor plates for reception-tests of our modern high-power projectiles, this being reported by the Ordnance Bureau as absolutely necessary; $20,000 for testing torpedoes; $50,000 for addition to plant at League Island; $50,000 for machinery plant at New York; $10,000 additional for machinery plant at Mare Island; $10,000 for classifying purchase of supplies, and a number of minor increases.

I will state in conclusion that the clause for the construction of the three battle-ships is reported back by the conference committee in the identical form and language which was reported to and passed by the House. The conference committee have concurred with the Senate in adding two small vessels, one a swift torpedo cruiser of about 750 tons, to cost, exclusive of armament, not to exceed $350,000, and one additional torpedo-boat to cost not to exceed $125,000. These are the additions; and upon the report of the conferees which has been adopted by the Senate we ask the favorable action of the House.

Mr. SAYERS. I would like to put a question to the gentleman in charge of this report.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Certainly.

Mr. SAYERS. I did not catch the total amount which the bill would carry if the conference report be adopted.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Twenty-three million ninety-six thousand five hundred and fifteen dollars and fifty-three cents.

Mr. SAYERS. Another question. As the report was being read, I noticed there was an item for the purpose of reopening another yard.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That was a clause in a Senate amendment, which was stricken out in conference.

Mr. SAYERS. That is stricken out?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Yes, that clause was stricken out. I ought to have stated among the items of increase over the House bill that the Senate appropriated $50,000 for providing additional tools for the League Island navy-yard; and in the provision adopted by the Senate there was a clause declaring the yard reopened. That clause has been stricken out by the conference committee.

Mr. SAYERS. So that practically under this report the Government will have for the building of ships the Norfolk navy-yard, the navy-yard at Brooklyn, and the navy-yard at Mare Island.

Mr. BOUTELLE. In this connection I will state (and I am glad the gentleman has called my attention to it) that in addition to striking out the clause referred to in the paragraph concerning League Island and the conference committee struck out the clauses with reference to additional tools for the Boston and Portsmouth navy-yards, the words "building and," so that the additional tools provided for are to be applied to the repairing of vessels.

I will say that I disapproved the striking out of those words for the reason that I am not willing to give my personal sanction to any legislation that would imply that the two New England navy-yards are not to be provided with a plant that will fit them for the construction of modern ships whenever it may be found necessary to use them for that purpose. But it was the conclusion of the conference committee that that language should be stricken out, so that the appropriations now made for additional tools for the League Island, Portsmouth, and Boston navy-yards include only tools for the repairing of vessels.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the report.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire how many battle-ships and cruisers are authorized by this report.

Mr. WILKINSON. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BOUTELLE. There is no increase from our bill. The Senate appropriates for two small vessels additional.

Mr. WILKINSON. I desire to call the attention of the House to certain items in this conference report which my people are vitally interested in, and which are now in this bill without any previous legislation by this House.

Mr. BOUTELLE. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. WILKINSON. I suppose I have the right to occupy the floor in my own time.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. WILKINSON. I have been recognized by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair did not recognize the gentleman, except, as the Chair supposed, to ask a question.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Besides, I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. WILKINSON. I certainly was recognized by the Speaker and was proceeding—

The SPEAKER. The Chair misunderstood the desire of the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. BOUTELLE. If the gentleman from Louisiana will give me his attention I think I can explain the point to which he desired to call the attention of the House.

Mr. WILKINSON. But I prefer to make my own statement first and let the gentleman from Maine answer it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not desire to take up the time of the House in that manner. It is well known, Mr. Speaker, that bills were pending for the establishment of a navy-yard or naval station in the neighborhood of New Orleans, at Algiers, and it is well known also to the members of the House that there is now established a navy-yard at Pensacola. The proposition was to establish a naval station on the Gulf. Our committee gave hearings to the representatives of both sections in regard to the proposed naval station on the Gulf. We came to no conclusion about that, but one amendment of the Senate to the House bill provided for an additional commission to go to the Pacific coast and re-examine the question of locating a naval dry-dock, and the conferees, as a matter of justice to the southern coast, incorporated with that item a provision for the appointment of an additional commission whose duty it is to examine the location of a site for a dry-dock upon the waters of the Gulf or the adjacent waters, and to make report thereon. That is the only action that the Committee on Naval Affairs and the conferees of the two Houses of Congress have found it practicable to take upon this disputed matter as to where the naval station on the Gulf should be established. I therefore hope that the gentleman will accede to the action of the committee in that regard and let us proceed with other matters.

Mr. WILKINSON. The gentleman has not given an answer to what I desire to say.

Mr. BOUTELLE. What does the gentleman want, then? Will he state any inquiry he may wish to submit to the committee, and I will endeavor to answer it; or state the time he desires to occupy and I will endeavor to secure it?

Mr. WILKINSON. I should like to occupy ten or fifteen minutes in my own right to state facts, not to ask questions of the committee.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I can not yield indefinitely until the gentleman states what he wants.

Mr. WILKINSON. I will wait until the gentleman from Maine gets through with his statement and then attempt to make my own.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But can not the gentleman, in the interest of the dispatch of public business, ask such questions as he may desire of the committee, and we will endeavor to satisfy him?

Mr. WILKINSON. I have no desire, as I have said, to ask the committee any questions. I have a desire to make a statement on the floor of the House, which I think it is only just that I should be permitted to make, about items having their first consideration on this floor now. I can not allow any statement to be made for me by the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I shall ask the previous question on the adoption of the report.

Mr. WILKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to occupy a portion of the twenty minutes—

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Before the gentleman from Maine demands the previous question I desire to ask him a question.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask this: In the appropriation for improving the plant at League Island you have reduced it from fifty thousand to forty thousand, fifty thousand, I understand, being appropriated for the same purpose at Boston and Portsmouth.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman is mistaken in that.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. What is the appropriation at each yard? I desire to get this information, and it will not take a moment.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman is mistaken in supposing that it is different at League Island. The appropriation for construction tools at each of the three yards named is precisely the same.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I am glad to hear it. I wanted to bring that out clearly.

I understand the limitation in these yards for repairs, then, only, has been stricken out. That is to say, not for building ships, but for repairs, as we desired to have it, for I hoped when the appropriation was made for improving the plant, at least at League Island, that the question should be open to the discretion of the Navy Department whether it would begin to build ships or only repair them; in other words, whether League Island should be made an open yard.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I think the gentleman will be satisfied with what has been done. The three yards, Boston, League Island, and Portsmouth, were put on exactly the same footing in that regard.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Then, I builded better than I knew, when, on the 9th of April, I offered the amendment I did. The adoption of the conference report, which I hope the House will accede to, makes League Island navy-yard practically an open yard, which the people have long wanted it to be. So the action of the conference committee does not now remove from the Secretary of the Navy the power of sending iron and steel war-ships there for repairs, and hence realizing as I do the great advantages of location, and the abundant supply of skilled labor accessible there, I believe this appropriation is but the beginning of large annual appropriations for the construction of our naval vessels at that yard. As a matter of fact, as I stated on a former occasion, the expenditure of $1,000,000 there would enable the Government to build at that yard any of the great war-ships which are now being constructed or which may hereafter be built.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I demand the previous question.

Mr. WILKINSON. I claim the time, Mr. Speaker, in my own right in opposition.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Does the gentleman desire to ask a question?

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Maine for the previous question.

Mr. WILKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I claim the right to occupy the floor for a portion of the twenty minutes allowed under the rules in opposition.

The SPEAKER. But there is no time under the rules.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I think we can settle this matter—

Mr. WILKINSON. I will state to the gentleman from Missouri that I have no desire to occupy the floor more than ten or fifteen minutes.

The SPEAKER. But the only question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Maine for the previous question.

Mr. WILKINSON. Is it proposed to shut off all debate on this report?

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Louisiana rise?

Mr. WILKINSON. I rose not long ago to get recognition, which the Chair gave me, and shortly afterwards, when I proceeded to address the House on this subject, the Chair took me off the floor.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But I had not yielded the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana has not stated it accurately, as the Chair thinks.

Mr. WILKINSON. I shall be the judge of that as well as the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Louisiana for the purpose of asking a question of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] who had the floor.

Mr. WILKINSON. The Chair did not state for what purpose he recognized me. What the Chair had in his own mind when he recognized me, of course, I had no opportunity to judge, but I do know that the Chair recognized the gentleman from Louisiana, and I claim my right to the floor.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman please be in order? The Chair desires that the House shall understand this situation. The gentleman from Louisiana seems to be unwilling to do it. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] had the floor, being in charge of the bill. He was answering questions from various members. The gentleman from Louisiana rose in his place, and the Chair supposed that he rose to ask a question of the gentleman from Maine. Otherwise the Chair would have had no right to recognize the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair allow a suggestion?

The SPEAKER. When the Chair found out that the gentleman from Louisiana rose to ask time in his own right, he promptly notified the gentleman from Louisiana that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] had the floor.

Mr. WILKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say—

Mr. BOUTELLE. If the Chair will indulge me I desire to say—

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine has the floor.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I decline to yield the floor and I ask the regular order.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a statement and a correction.

The SPEAKER. If the House will be in order the House will get along with the matter under consideration very much better.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I think I can rectify this difficulty.

Mr. BLAND. I think I can correct a misapprehension. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The inquiry I desire to make is, was not the question being put by the Speaker when the gentleman from Louisiana took the floor and stopped the Chair from putting the question, after the gentleman from Maine had ceased speaking? That is the real fact. I know that to be the fact, for I was standing right there. The Speaker said "the question is"—and was about to put the question to the House when the gentleman from Louisiana rose and addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], in common with other members of the House, must recollect that when a question arises of that sort it is the custom of the House to recognize the gentleman in charge of the bill, when it is understood that some question is to be raised about putting the question to the House.

Mr. BLAND. The Speaker was putting the question.

The SPEAKER. Precisely; but when the question arose about that, supposing the gentleman's statement is correct (the Chair does not recollect it in that way, but the gentleman from Missouri may be correct and the Chair may be wrong), even in that event the gentleman in charge of the bill has the right to ask of the House to put the previous question.

Mr. BLAND. That is very true, but he has yielded.

The SPEAKER. He has not yielded the floor.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The matter is perfectly clear. The Chair does not desire to take advantage of any one.

Mr. BLAND. Evidently this is going to take up all the time set apart for the discussion of the silver bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the time occupied in this discussion shall not be taken out of the time which it was understood should be given to the discussion of the silver bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE. You are taking up the time now.

Mr. BLAND. I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I object at this time.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent for that can be asked afterward. It can not be asked for now.

Mr. BLAND. If the suggestion I make is carried out, that will give the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILKINSON] an opportunity to be heard, and will give opportunity for the discussion of the other measure also.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] has the floor. If the House will proceed in due order to close this business, we can then go on with the other matter and unanimous consent can then be asked. The question before the House is upon ordering the previous question.

Mr. BOUTELLE. With the view to facilitating business and avoiding unnecessary controversy, I desire to say that I have two or three times asked the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILKINSON] if he desired to propound any question to the committee in regard to this bill, and I have stated to him that if he did I would be very glad to hear him. I have also asked the gentleman if he desired to take the floor for any reasonable limited time, and how much time he wanted.

But the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILKINSON] has insisted upon his right to occupy the floor in his own right ad libitum.

Mr. ENLOE. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee demands the regular order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. If the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILKINSON] desires any reasonable time, I would be glad to yield to him; but if the gentleman is insisting on taking the floor in his own right, and taking the bill out of my hands, I can not consent to that. How much time does the gentleman from Louisiana desire?

Mr. BREWER. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] that the better thing to do would be to withdraw this bill for the present.

Mr. WILKINSON. I stated some time ago that I did not desire to occupy more than a few minutes, not to exceed ten or fifteen minutes.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will that be satisfactory to the gentleman from Louisiana?

Mr. WILKINSON. But after the action taken by the Speaker—

Mr. BOUTELLE. Oh, if you are going to put it on that ground, that is destructive of all amicable arrangement. I desire to meet the gentleman's views, if I can. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. WILKINSON. I thank the gentleman from Maine, but decline to accept as a favor that which I think I have been deprived of as a right.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, that is unreasonable. I ask the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. DOCKERY. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 105, noes 75.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BOUTELLE and Mr. WASHINGTON were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 106, noes 78.

Mr. WILKINSON. Yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 139, nays 104, not voting 84; as follows:

YEAS—139.

Adams, Mich.	Culbertson, Pa.	Lacey,	Russell,
Allen, Miss.	Cummings,	Laidlaw,	Sanford,
Anderson, Kans.	Cutcheon,	Lansing,	Sawyer,
Atkinson, Pa.	Darlington,	Laws,	Seranton,
Baker,	Davidson,	Lind,	Scull,
Banks,	De Haven,	Lodge,	Sherman,
Bartine,	De Lano,	Mason,	Smith, Ill.
Bayne,	Dingley,	McAdoo,	Smith, W. Va.
Beckwith,	Dolliver,	McComas,	Snyder,
Belden,	Dorsey,	McCord,	Spider,
Belknap,	Elliott,	McDuffie,	Spooner,
Bergen,	Evans,	McKinley,	Stephenson,
Bingham,	Farquhar,	Miles,	Stewart, Vt.
Bliss,	Featherston,	Milliken,	Stivers,
Boothman,	Finley,	Moffitt,	Stockbridge,
Boutelle,	Flick,	Morey,	Struble,
Bowden,	Flower,	Morrill,	Sweeney,
Brewer,	Frank,	Morrow,	Taylor, E. B.
Brosius,	Gear,	Morse,	Taylor, Ill.
Browne, Va.	Gest,	Niedringhaus,	Taylor, Tenn.
Burrows,	Greenhalge,	O'Donnell,	Thomas,
Burton,	Grout,	O'Neill, Pa.	Townsend, Colo.
Butterworth,	Hall,	Owen, Ind.	Townsend, Pa.
Caldwell,	Hansbrough,	Owens, Ohio	Turner, Kans.
Campbell,	Henderson, Ill.	Payne,	Vandever,
Candler, Mass.	Henderson, Iowa	Perkins,	Van Schaick,
Cannon,	Herbert,	Peters,	Waddill,
Carter,	Hill,	Post,	Wade,
Caswell,	Holt,	Pugsley,	Wallace, Mass.
Cheatham,	Houk,	Quackenbush,	Wallace, N. Y.
Cogswell,	Kelley,	Raines,	Watson,
Comstock,	Kennedy,	Reybura,	Williams, Ohio
Conger,	Ketchum,	Rife,	Wilson, Wash.
Connell,	Kinsey,	Rowell,	Yardley.
Craig,	Knapp,	Rusk,

NAYS—104.

Abbott,	Bullock,	Dockery,	Henderson, N. C.
Allen, Miss.	Bunn,	Dunnell,	Holman,
Anderson, Miss.	Bynum,	Dunphy,	Kerr, Pa.
Andrew,	Candler, Ga.	Enloe,	Kilgore,
Bankhead,	Carlton,	Fithian,	Lane,
Barnes,	Caruth,	Forman,	Lanham,
Blanchard,	Catchings,	Forney,	Lee,
Blount,	Chipman,	Funston,	Lester, Ga.
Breckinridge, Ark.	Clancy,	Gibson,	Lester, Va.
Breckinridge, Ky.	Clements,	Goodnight,	Lewis,
Brickner,	Cobb,	Grimes,	Magner,
Brookshire,	Cooper, Ind.	Hare,	Martin, Ind.
Brown, J. B.	Cothran,	Hatch,	McClammy,
Brunner,	Cowles,	Haugen,	McClellan,
Buchanan, Va.	Crisp,	Haynes,	McCreary,
Buckalew,	Culbertson, Tex.	Heard,	McMillan,

McRae,
Mills,
Montgomery,
Moore, Tex.
Mutchler,
Norton,
Oates,
O'Ferrall,
O'Neill, Ind.
O'Neill, Mass.

Parrott,
Peel,
Pennington,
Pierce,
Quinn,
Reilly,
Richardson,
Robertson,
Rowland,
Sayers,

Shively,
Skinner,
Springer,
Stewart, Ga.
Stewart, Tex.
Stockdale,
Stone, Ky.
Stone, Mo.
Stump,
Tammey,

Tracey,
Turner, Ga.
Vaux,
Venable,
Washington,
Wheeler, Ala.
Whiting,
Wilkinson,
Willcox,
Williams, Ill.

NOT VOTING—84.

Alderson,
Arnold,
Atkins, W. Va.
Barwig,
Biggs,
Bland,
Bostner,
Brower,
Browne, T. M.
Buchanan, N. J.
Cheadle,
Clark, Wis.
Clarke, Ala.
Clunie,
Coleman,
Cooper, Ohio
Covert,
Crain,
Dalzell,
Dargan,
Dibble,

Edmunds,
Ellis,
Ewart,
Fitch,
Flood,
Fowler,
Geissenhainer,
Gifford,
Grosvenor,
Harmer,
Hayes,
Hemphill,
Hermann,
Hooker,
Hopkins,
Kerr, Iowa
La Follette,
Lawler,
Lehlbach,
Maish,
Mansur,

Martin, Tex.
McCarthy,
McCormick,
McKenna,
Moore, N. H.
Morgan,
Mudd,
Nute,
Osborne,
Outhwaite,
Paynter,
Payson,
Perry,
Phelan,
Pickler,
Price,
Randall,
Ray,
Reed, Iowa
Rockwell,
Rogers,

Seney,
Simonds,
Spinola,
Stahneck,
Taylor, J. D.
Thompson,
Tillman,
Tucker,
Turner, N. Y.
Walker, Mass.
Walker, Mo.
Wheeler, Mich.
Whitthorne,
Wickham,
Wike,
Wiley,
Wilson, Ky.
Wilson, Mo.
Wilson, W. Va.
Wright,
Yoder.

So the previous question was ordered.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. ATKINSON, of West Virginia, with Mr. ALDERSON.

Mr. MCCORMICK with Mr. MORGAN.

Mr. WRIGHT with Mr. GEISSENHAINER.

Mr. NUTE with Mr. MCCARTHY.

Mr. THOMAS M. BROWNE with Mr. OUTHWAITE.

Mr. WALKER, of Massachusetts, with Mr. WIKE.

Mr. OSBORNE with Mr. HAYES.

Mr. WHEELER, of Michigan, with Mr. BARWIG.

Mr. DALZELL with Mr. MARTIN, of Texas.

Mr. RAY with Mr. HOOKER.

Mr. COLEMAN with Mr. PRICE.

Mr. THOMPSON with Mr. SENEY.

Mr. ROCKWELL with Mr. ROGERS.

Mr. CLARK, of Wisconsin, with Mr. WALKER, of Missouri.

On this vote:

Mr. COOPER, of Ohio, with Mr. HEMPHILL.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey, with Mr. FITCH.

Mr. HOPKINS with Mr. FOWLER.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR.

For this day:

Mr. WICKHAM with Mr. BIGGS.

Mr. GROSVENOR with Mr. YODER, from Tuesday, June 24, until Saturday, June 28, not to apply to national-election law on its final passage, if voted for on or before Saturday, June 28.

On motion of Mr. BOUTELLE, by unanimous consent, the recapitulation of the vote was dispensed with.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. SPEAKER. The previous question is ordered, and the question now is on the adoption of the report.

The report was adopted.

Mr. BOUTELLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SILVER.

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent that the hour for taking the vote upon the bill known as the silver bill be extended to 3 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SPINOLA. I reserve the right to object for a moment, until I can ask a question. The question I desire to ask is whether the time will be equally divided between the two sides.

Mr. CONGER. The whole time will be divided equally. The time that has been used by the other side will be taken into consideration in dividing the time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered: The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] is recognized for fifteen minutes.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, but for the fact that I am myself a business man and represent on this floor a district having large and important business interests, I would remain silent and simply record my vote, as I believe, in the interests of my constituents and in the interests of the country.

I do not propose any flights of oratory or rhetoric, such as we have witnessed on the other side, but I propose to make a simple, unvarnished statement of the facts with reference to the currency question as I understand it.

What is the present situation of the finances of the country? Gold, silver, greenbacks, national-bank notes, and silver certificates stand at par, not only in this country, but in the markets of the world, and I say without fear of successful contradiction that the United States has to-day the best financial and banking system the world ever saw—a system inaugurated and fostered by the Republican party.

The Senate bill, which we are asked to substitute for the House bill on this subject, is not only a bill for free coinage, but is a bill for the unlimited issue of silver certificates based upon the silver of the whole world.

If the Senate bill shall pass this House and be signed by the President, the United States gives notice to the world to bring its silver to the United States mint without limit and get 72 cents' worth marked 100 cents, 28 cents of which will be "flat" for every purpose except to empty the United States Treasury of gold and drive gold out of the country.

I regard the Senate bill as closely allied to the fiat-money and green-back delusion that swept over the country a few years ago.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] told us yesterday that legislation by Congress would make 412 grains of alloyed silver or 371½ grains of pure silver a dollar.

If his premises are correct and we can make that amount of silver a dollar by legislation of this country alone, why not go further and legislate that half as much silver, 206 grains, will make a dollar? I regard that proposition as arrant nonsense.

Mr. SPINOLA. Let us have order, Mr. Speaker. I want to hear the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. MORSE. I will try to speak so that the gentleman from New York can hear me.

The Morrison tariff bill, which proposed a horizontal reduction in duties of 20 per cent., was denounced in the North as a free-trade measure, and yet here is a bill that proposes to make all duties payable in a 72-cent dollar and proposes a horizontal reduction of 28 per cent. in all duties, and would neutralize largely the proposed protective duties of the McKinley tariff bill.

Suppose such a dishonest measure as this Senate bill should pass this House. Who are going to be the sufferers by it? Who are going to suffer most from a depreciated currency? Bankers? Capitalists? Manufacturers? Wealthy men? They will suffer, no doubt, for in our country when one member suffers all suffer.

But the wage-workers, the laboring people of the country, will be the most oppressed by a depreciated currency. Why? Because wages are the last thing to advance, and such an inflation of the currency would immediately result in an advance in everything that the laboring people and wage-workers eat, wear, and buy.

We should have to pay for imported goods in gold or its equivalent, which would mean a large advance in the price of tea, coffee, sugar, silk, and a thousand necessities as well as luxuries.

This inflation measure passed by the Senate would unsettle values and inflict great and lasting injury to the finances and business interests of the country it might take years to recover from.

No, Mr. Speaker, the rich will not be the principal sufferers by this bill. The trust fund or the little all of widows and orphans deposited in the savings-banks of the country would be payable in this depreciated currency and would shrink 25 per cent. in value the day the bill was signed by the President, if such a thing were possible.

No, Mr. Speaker, the class that would be principally benefited by this bill would be the silver mine and bullion owners who, if reports can be believed, have been guilty in these Halls of "ways that are dark and tricks that are vain," who have crowded the corridors of this Capitol, if reports are true, since this Congress convened, with the most formidable and unscrupulous "lobby" that the Capitol ever saw.

Have the gentlemen who advocate the Senate bill as against the House bill read or forgotten the history of their country? Have they read that after passing through the most gigantic war of modern times, a war that incurred a national debt of such gigantic proportions that the world was appalled by its magnitude; have they read that when peace came and the army of citizen soldiers melted away, and a million of men returned to peaceful pursuits; have they read that the men who fought the war to a successful issue and continued us a nation among the nations of the earth were the first to insist that the national credit should be maintained, were the first to insist that the men who loaned their money to the Government in the hour of its deadly peril and when its credit was poor should be paid, "as nominated in the bond," in the money of the world, based upon gold and silver coin?

Have they read that later the country rose like a great giant and resumed specie payment, in spite of the opposition of the Democratic party, and thus commanded the respect and admiration of every civilized country on the face of the earth?

Now, at this late day, shall we come down from the high financial position which we enjoy among the nations of the earth and Mexicanize our finances, and return to a debased currency, by an unlimited coinage of silver into 72-cent dollars, and insult the Almighty by stamping on them, "In God we trust?"

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts in whom else can we trust for the balance if the dollar is only worth 72 cents.

Mr. MORSE. Well, let us be honest, and stamp this dollar what it is worth, 72 cents, and we trust in God for the other 28 cents. We may deceive men in regard to its value, but certainly we can not deceive the Almighty.

The House bill, which I trust we shall insist upon, though increasing the coinage of silver to meet the growing demands of the country, would still maintain gold and silver at par, in consequence of the "bullion-redemption" feature, which leaves it optional with the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem the silver certificates in a gold dollar's worth of silver bullion and to buy and pay for the bullion by the same standard.

This demand for a cheap 72-cent dollar, like the fiat-money delusion, was born in iniquity and conceived in sin. It is an attempt on the part of the debtor class to repudiate 28 per cent. of its just debts, and should be refused because it violates the command, "Thou shalt not steal."

Gold and silver have been the currency of the world (with no part of it fiat) ever since Abraham bought the cave of Macphela to bury Sarah in, and I believe that gold and silver should both be the money of the country, but I repeat that there should be a hundred cents' worth of silver behind this silver dollar, or silver certificate. Anything else is dishonest.

The vote which this bill received in the Senate is entirely misleading as indicating the sentiment of the country.

Wise or otherwise, our fathers ordained that every State, large or small, should be represented by two Senators, and the States just admitted, which have only one Representative on this floor, and the silver owning and producing States have each two Senators and the same representation in the Senate as the great States of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Massachusetts; and I claim that this House of Representatives is a far better representative of the sentiment of the people upon this question than the Senate, for the reason I have stated, and I trust we shall reject all dishonest, fraudulent, and "fiat" features of the silver bill to be passed.

I am fully persuaded that if such a silver bill as the Senate measure were submitted to a popular vote of the people, it would be voted down by an overwhelming majority.

During this debate I have heard from gentlemen on the other side derisive words spoken of the business men, manufacturers, bankers, and capitalists of New England and Massachusetts. They have been derided in these halls as "bloated bondholders," "gold-bugs," "Shylocks," etc.

Neither New England nor Massachusetts needs any eulogium or defense at my hands. I say to all the traducers of Massachusetts as Anson Burlingame once said on this floor many years ago, "I throw down her glove to the whole band of her assailants;" or as that other great son, Daniel Webster, said, "There she stands, behold her." Eliminate from the West and South the capital and enterprise of these same men, and I tell you the unbroken prairie and the primeval forest of creation would stand in place of some of your cities and populous towns. Who builds the Western railroads that develop that great and growing section of the country? Who joined the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans with a railroad? Who builds the lofty buildings, whose summits pierce the sky, in your Western cities?

I answer, to some extent, at least, New England enterprise and New England capital.

Once more, Mr. Speaker, when the yellow wings of the pestilence flap themselves in a Southern sky, when fire or famine or flood devastate any section of the country, where do they go for funds to relieve the distressed? What section gives more than any other section? What merchants pour out their money like water to relieve distress? Why, these same bloated bondholders, bankers, gold-bugs of Boston and Massachusetts.

Massachusetts has never repudiated any honest debt, has always paid a hundred cents on a dollar, which is more than can be said of some that call her names.

The State or nearly any municipality in the State can borrow money at 3 per cent. interest, and I throw back any charge against the people of Massachusetts, and stand in my place and say that her manufacturers, bankers, merchants, and business men, who believe in honest money, are as honorable and high-toned merchants as can be found on the face of the earth.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the American people as a whole are honest people. I believe the American people want honest money. I believe the American people want the money of the world with 100 cents in a dollar. Gentlemen of the House of Representatives, grave responsibilities confront us here and now. By our votes we are to decide a question big with consequences to the business interests of the country, big with consequences to the welfare of the State and nation. [Applause.]

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Speaker, I only want a few minutes in which to state the position which myself and several other gentlemen on this side of the House from our section of the country occupy on the silver question. I do not propose to make any extended argument against free coinage. For the present, and for what seem to me good reasons, I am opposed to coining the silver of the whole world, and at the same time I am willing to increase the total amount of money so as to meet the wants of a great country with a rapidly increasing population. To do this, however, I am not able to reconcile myself to the position taken by the Secretary of the Treasury to make silver a commodity under what is known as the warehouse system. I think that for the Government to enter upon such a policy as that in reference to any commodity is a very dangerous one, and that Congress would find it hereafter very difficult to oppose any proposition for the purpose of warehousing the other products of the United States. I am opposed to Government pawn-shops, whether for silver, pig-iron, pork, beans, or anything else; and therefore I find that I can not stand by the proposition coming from the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase quantities of this silver with the option that the certificates representing it may be redeemed if necessary by bullion. I think that a reasonable solution of the question, and one about which I am free to confess I am not without some misgivings as to the result, is to make the maximum amount in the present law, $4,000,000 per month, the minimum number of silver dollars to be coined each month. That avoids the danger of making of silver a mere commodity and prevents Congress from entering upon what, in my opinion, as I have said, I believe to be a very dangerous precedent—warehousing the products of the country—and at the same time it avoids free coinage.

There is another advantage. If you make the present maximum the minimum, and compel the Secretary of the Treasury to coin silver to the extent of $4,000,000 a month you will then give silver a fair chance to demonstrate by actual practice its ratio with gold and the effect of greatly increased coinage upon the financial system of the country. If a resolution could be adopted, or if this bill could be amended, so as to provide for the absolute coinage of $4,000,000 a month, the advocates of silver would then have a chance to show to the country the possibilities of this metal.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question if it will not interrupt him.

Mr. MCADOO. Not at all.

Mr. RICHARDSON. How will you put silver upon a par with gold unless you give it the same opportunities for coinage that you give gold? In other words, how can there be a test as to what silver will do when you limit its coinage to $4,000,000 a month, and when you put no limit on the coinage of gold?

Mr. MCADOO. It will settle the question of how far you can inflate the currency of the country on a silver basis and on the present ratio.

Mr. Speaker, there is another advantage. It has been charged freely, both in this Chamber and out of it, that a most powerful lobby, representing the bullion-owners of this country, have organized an artificial demand for free coinage by the most skillful campaign, both in the way of literature and of personal solicitation, to which the Congress of the United States was ever subjected. If we take the whole American product in this $4,000,000 a month, we shall relieve Congress from the pressure of the bullion-owners, who are demanding free coinage and creating an artificial demand in the minds of people who have not examined the question. Then this question can be considered as a great economic one, and not narrowed into a mere local and personal issue. So that, taking it all around, I think this is a fair compromise which can not endanger the business of the country, which takes the entire American product of silver, which does not demonetize silver and make it a commodity, but coins it into the money of the country, and gives a fair chance to demonstrate how far we can increase the currency on the present bimetallic ratio. For these reasons, sir, I am ready to take any opportunity, either by offering an amendment or by my vote on any proposition relating thereto, to secure the result which I have stated. At any rate, this is too important a matter to the great body of the people for Congress to act hastily or allow itself to be stampeded. We can not allow the monetary measure of the value of the labor of the honest people of this land to be unjustly and hastily changed to benefit the plutocratic owners of certain properties.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I believe the silver demonetization act of 1873 was wrong. I believe to restore the silver metal to what it was prior to that act is right. I know there are some who take issue as to the correctness of the legislation of 1873, in the passage of the law demonetizing silver. In my mind, however, there has never been any question on that subject. I know it was claimed at the time that the act of 1873 had a great deal to do with restoring the credit of the Government, but, as was subsequently shown, the credit of our Government was restored, not only by the provisions of the specie-resumption act, but also by the unparalleled prosperity and recuperative powers of our great country. Prior to 1873 gold and silver were the money of the country. Now if, from my standpoint, I believe that the demonetization of silver was wrong and that gold and silver should be the money of the country, then there is but one thing for me to do when this question confronts me, and that is to vote for and support a measure for the free coinage of silver.

Not only this, Mr. Speaker, but ever since my service in Congress began, and always, I have been an outspoken advocate of the free coinage of silver, of the restoration of silver to the place it occupied prior to the demonetization act of 1873. When we were confronted the other day with a question of parliamentary law and of the correctness of the decisions of our presiding officer, although the opposite party tried to drag in the question of the free coinage of silver and to create the impression that the vote sustaining the Speaker was a vote against free coinage—when that question was presented, notwithstanding all the pressure and influence that were brought to bear, I conscientiously voted to sustain the Speaker, because I believed he was right. But now for the first time I am confronted with the question whether I will vote in favor of the free coinage of silver or will vote for a non-concurrence and for submitting to a committee of conference the claims of my people in this behalf.

I do not believe that I would be justified in declining now to vote my sentiments, declining now to vote the sentiments of my people, in declining now to vote in accordance with their instructions, even though by a vote to non-concur a certain dilemma in regard to other branches of the Government might be avoided, or even, perhaps, if the result might be a bill which would be more satisfactory to all sections of our country.

To my mind, the objection that under a free-coinage act the United States will become the dumping-ground of the silver of the world is purely theoretical and imaginary. Considering the amount of silver bullion there is in the world, considering the amount that is used in the fine arts, considering the amount that is used for the coinage of various countries, I do not believe we can reasonably conclude that even by the passage of a bill providing for unlimited free coinage this country will become the dumping-ground for the silver of the world.

Another objection which has been made and which does not strike me as a very strong one is the fear that the bullion-holders will be largely enriched by the passage of a free-coinage act. When I consider that no legislation is ever enacted that does not result in benefit to individuals, that the benefits of our legislation are never distributed with entire equality, that there are always certain classes of people who derive greater benefit from the enactment of a particular measure than others, this objection to my mind has no force. It was the demonetization of silver that brought about the loss to the owners of silver mines, if there has been any loss; and when it is proposed to legislate for 60,000,000 of people who desire to bring about a parity between gold and silver, we can not stop to inquire whether a certain industry of this country will derive directly more benefit from the legislation than any other industry. Even conceding that there may be a temporary benefit of that kind, we must reach out for the ultimate result, the benefit of the entire people; and if our legislation does inure especially to the benefit of certain individuals, it does nothing more than legislation generally does. So that this objection does not impress me as very formidable.

Aside from this, I was struck yesterday by the remark of the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. BARTINE] when he asked, if the bullion-owners are so greatly interested in this legislation for the purpose of making millions of money, how is it that they are willing to have their representatives on this floor vote for unlimited coinage, which, as is rightly claimed, would bring in competition with the silver bullion of the United States the silver bullion of the world, and certainly would have a tendency, if the theory be correct, to decrease the value of the bullion produced in the United States?

If the producers and owners of bullion are actuated entirely by selfish motives; if, as I understood my friend from New Jersey to say, there is a great silver lobby here working for free coinage; if they are here working earnestly in the interest of these bullion-owners, why is it that they do not oppose the provision of the Senate bill looking to unlimited coinage? In other words, why do they not favor the protection of the American silver-bullion owner as against the bullion-owners of Mexico and other foreign countries? It seems to me that this argument of itself is an answer to the suggestions made here as to the financial interests of the bullion-owners of this country in this class of legislation. If they have the interests stated here, they certainly show very great unselfishness in agreeing that the bullion of the world shall come in here for the purposes of coinage, when the result can only be the depreciation of the value of bullion owned in this country.

Mr. Speaker, I come from a portion of the country that is largely interested in this question—not directly, because there is not a man in my whole district, so far as I know, who owns a single pound of silver bullion. They are not directly interested in this question, but indirectly, because they believe that the circulating medium now in use by the business interests of this country should be largely increased; that the amount of money at present in actual circulation is largely inadequate to meet the wants of the business interests of the country. Believing that by free coinage this evil can be corrected, believing also that the demonetization of silver was a wrong which by free coinage can be remedied, representing, as I do, a people with these sentiments, I shall cheerfully cast my vote in favor of free and unlimited silver coinage and for concurrence with the Senate amendments to the House bill. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire first to answer the suggestion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] in relation to the magnanimity of the silver-producers of this country. He seems to think they are very magnanimous because they are willing to allow the silver bullion of the world to come to our mints to be coined. Does he not know that this is a silver-purchasing bill as well as a silver-coinage bill? Every dollar of silver that comes to our mints and is purchased by the Government is coined and laid away in the vaults. The more you thus lay away, the higher you make silver throughout the world. That is the magnanimity of these silver-producers.

Mr. HEARD. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. HEARD. Why would it not benefit them just as much to have the silver laid away in bullion as if it were coined?

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. It would.

Mr. HEARD. Then why do they favor the free-coinage bill of the Senate, instead of the bill of the House?

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. Because under the Senate bill you propose to make 72 cents' worth of silver worth $1 immediately and under the House bill it would be worth only 72 cents.

Mr. HEARD. Do not the friends of the House bill contend that its effect will be to increase the value of silver in the same way?

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. Under the House bill the Government will simply buy silver at the market price; under the Senate bill you propose to pay out $1 for 72 cents' worth of silver; consequently the silver would all come here.

Mr. Speaker, I often admire audacity; consequently I am often led to admire the positions taken by my distinguished friend from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] who is leading the other side of the House upon this question. He took the position the other day and made his whole argument upon the principle that the House bill demonetized silver and upon the principle that the Secretary of the Treasury would not coin a dollar of silver under that bill if it became a law. This was a position of audacity, for it was not founded on fact.

The bill says that the Treasurer shall coin the silver specifically to redeem the Treasury notes; and if all of the Treasury notes are presented for redemption he is compelled to coin every dollar of silver bullion that is placed in the vaults of the Treasury. So I say his position is one of audacity and not founded on fact.

Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to criticize any members on this side of the House. If I represented a silver-producing constituency I, myself, would probably favor this free-coinage act. But I would favor it simply on the ground that it increased the value of the property of my constituents, and not on the ground that it increased the value of the property of all of our constituents throughout the country.

There seems another set of members opposing this bill. I do not know as I can call them by any more appropriate name than that of "wrong-redressers." They seem to be redressing the wrongs of the entire country without regard to location. Their headquarters is mainly out in my friend's State [referring to Mr. KELLEY, of Kansas]. They have got a sort of reputation out there, which they acquired in the past, for redressing wrongs. I can only say to my friend from Kansas, in his own language, uttered in this House, "Keep your rear to the ground." If your constituents ever learn of the great lobby here, the most disgraceful lobby that was ever in this Capitol—you can hardly turn around in one of the corridors outside of this Hall without brushing up against them—I say if they ever learn of that great lobby here—

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. Wait; let me continue.

If they ever learn this, that my friend is in line with that lobby, helping to take from the pockets of the people of this country fourteen or fifteen million dollars a year and put it into the pockets of the parties represented by this great lobby, the place that knows him now will know him no more forever.

Now, I will yield to my friend.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman speaks of "lobbies." I would like to state that my constituents, no doubt, compose a large part of that "lobby."

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. I presume so.

Mr. KELLEY. And they have a right to be here. But they are not here for the purpose that the gentleman indicates, by any means.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, now I desire to say a word in reference to this Senate bill. The name of the bill is misleading. It should be rechristened to be understood. It should be called the "silver-purchasing, free-coinage bill." If it was only a free-coinage bill it would not be so very objectionable.

If the silver-producer, when he puts his silver in the mint and has it coined into the "dollar of his daddies," should be compelled to lug back the dollars of his daddies into his cart, and take it home with him, it would not be so objectionable. But no, it does not do that. He says he has no use for the dollar of his daddies after it is coined. He wants to compel the Government to purchase these dollars that he has been so anxious to have coined, because he says he has no use for them.

If it stopped even there it would not be so objectionable. But it does not stop there. It opens these mints to the mine-owners of the world and says to them, "Bring your silver here and we will coin it into dollars and compel the Government of the United States to buy it from you at its enhanced value." Therefore, gentlemen who favor this bill make this country the dumping-ground for all the silver in the world. It can not be dumped here without taking from this country the gold; and for my own part, Mr. Speaker, I prefer to retain the gold here.

I am for a measure that will take all the silver in this country and utilize it. I am for a measure that shall bring the two metals together within the shortest possible time. I am not for a measure that says to-morrow we will pay a dollar for 72 cents of silver. It would seem to me that these silver producers should be content with the House bill. That House bill has already raised the price of their silver from 96 cents per ounce to 104. Now, it would seem to any reasonable man, if they were so much interested in the prosperity of this country, that they ought to be satisfied with that.

Mr. HEARD. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. HEARD. On what authority do you say that it is the House bill that did this? Might it not have been the Senate bill?

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. I do not believe any man has been found insane enough, in this or any other country, to believe that this country would adopt free coinage.

Mr. HEARD. It seems that a large number of the Senate thought so.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. Insane folly! It was passed and then they come right over here and try to get the House members to vote against it. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEARD. That is all the worse for the Senate.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. A severe commentary on the Senate.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. Therefore, I am for the House bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, I purpose, when the time comes, to give my vote in favor of referring this Senate silver bill to a conference committee. I have never yet taken occasion to occupy the time of this House, in this or any other Congress, for so much as one minute upon the silver question. But in the very few minutes that I shall now occupy the floor I wish to give the reasons why I favor the House bill rather than the Senate bill, or favor, perhaps, some bill that may be framed in conference, in preference to either of them.

Whatever may said of the bill which the Senate has sent to us, it can not be said that it is lacking in audacity or that the men who framed and sent it here are lacking in courage.

A bill which proposes to open the mints of the United States, without limit and without charge, to every silver-mine owner and every bullion-owner in the world, to take his silver, worth 75 cents, or 78 or 80 cents on the dollar, and give him back at his option either gold or silver coin—because this bill does not make any discrimination between them—or certificates redeemable in either gold or silver coin, and invite all the world to bring hither the produce of their mines, their silver bullion, their old coin, and have it recoined at our charge, at our cost—I say that they who make this proposition to an American Congress are not lacking in audacity or in the courage of their convictions, if these be their convictions. But I can not vote for such a proposition. When the time comes, Mr. Speaker, that the farmer of Kansas and Iowa can bring his 75 cents worth of wheat and get a one-dollar certificate for it; when the farmers of Ohio and of Michigan can bring 75, or 78, or 80 cents' worth of wool and get a coin certificate worth $1 for that; when my constituents in Michigan can bring 75 cents' worth of their salt and get a gold or silver certificate for it as good as a gold dollar in every market of the world, then it will be time enough to say to the owners of the silver mines, and the owners of the silver bullion, and the owners of the silver coin of all the world to bring it hither and we will mint it at our own charge and give them back silver certificates payable in coin at their option, payable in gold or silver, because they are not required to wait for the mintage of their bullion. Section 5 of this act provides that—

The owners of bullion deposited for coinage shall have the option to receive coin, or its equivalent, in the certificates provided for in this act, and such bullion shall be subsequently coined.

And then, if we turn back to section 3, we find that "such certificates shall be redeemable in coin of standard value," not the silver dollars deposited, but in gold or silver; not at the option of the Government, but at the option of the men who deposit the silver.

Mr. BARTINE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Certainly.

Mr. BARTINE. If both gold and silver are a legal tender, can not the Government pay at its own option, and not at the option of the holder?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I suppose it could, but that this bill gives the option to the depositor of the bullion to take his coin in either gold or silver, or in certificates payable either in gold or silver coin.

Mr. BARTINE. O, no.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I stand here to answer—

Mr. HALL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CUTCHEON. In just a moment. Mr. Speaker, I stand here, first, to answer at the bar of my own conscience, and my conscience forbids me to vote for any such bill. I stand here, secondly, to answer to my constituents, and they have never asked me to vote for any such bill. I stand here, in the third place, to answer to the greater constituency, to which we are all answerable, the constituency of the people of the United States, and as I believe that this bill will be greatly injurious to the interests of the people of the United States, and I can not get the consent of my own judgment to vote for it, I am sure that it is not the desire of my constituents. They never have indorsed any such bill. Why, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. KELLEY] who sits in front of me declared yesterday in favor of the Senate bill because it would make cheaper money for the farmers of Kansas with which to pay off their mortgages. But I desire to admonish him that the great creditors in this nation to-day, or any day, are the wage-earners and the laboring-men of the people of the United States. Every day when the sun sets upon this continent there is more money owing to the men that wield the ax, the pick, the hoe, the spade, the scythe, and the hammer—the men that work in the great industries of this country—than is owing to the bullion-owners, the bond-owners, or to the bank-owners.

We are told that the banks are the great creditors in this country. Where do the banks get their credits? From the deposits of the business men of the country. And when you scale down the value of the dollar you are scaling down the wages of the laboring men, you are scaling down the produce of the farmer, you are scaling down the merchandise of the merchant, you are scaling down the deposits of every depositor in every savings-bank and in every bank of deposit in the United States. So, Mr. Speaker, I am against the Senate bill. I am not unqualifiedly for the House bill without change, because I believe it can be improved in the conference.

Mr. HALL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan where the farmer is going to get the money with which to pay? How is he going to get any more money under this bill?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I do not think he will. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. KELLEY] thinks he will get a larger price for his crops. He will get, perhaps, more dollars for his crops, but the dollars will not be worth as much. When he goes to pay his mortgage of course a dollar is a dollar, but the very point I have been trying to enforce is that upon the whole it will not take one hour less work to earn a dollar's worth of the necessities of life than now. You simply get a cheap dollar, and when you get a cheap dollar you always get a dollar that has less purchasing power. It is a delusive dollar. It is a cheating dollar.

Mr. KELLEY. Will it not pay a debt just as well as the dear dollar?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes, it will; and it will pay the debts of the great railroad corporations of the United States. It will pay the debts of the great banking corporations of the United States. It will pay the debts of the great capitalists of the United States. We have heard a great deal about farm mortgages. Why, Mr. Speaker, in the town from which I come I know of one manufacturer that to-day owes as a floating debt more dollars than all the farmers in my county put together. He owes it to the banks, he owes it to the producers, and he owes it to his workmen. He is a man that employs a thousand men. While it may help a few farmers to pay off their little mortgages it will help the corporations and the millionaires to pay off their big ones.

You say that it is making cheaper money; and every day the laborer goes home with a cheaper dollar, which buys less sugar, which buys less clothing, which buys less food, and less of everything else that he buys. Is that an honest dollar?

Mr. FUNSTON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Certainly.

Mr. FUNSTON. If there were ten dollars in circulation where there is one now, would not the laborer get more dollars for his labor than he gets now?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I presume that he would eventually.

Mr. FUNSTON. Then, does it not make that difference?

Mr. CUTCHEON. But the gentleman knows as well as I do that when you change the standard of the value of a day's labor, then the price of wages is always the last to go up and the wages of the workman is always the first to go down. When an employer feels that his margin is slipping away from him, the first thing done is to scale down the price of wages, and when he perceives that his profit is rising in value, he puts a big lamp of it down in his own pocket before he raises the price of wages.

Mr. FUNSTON. Then you admit the price of the laborer will go up if we increase the number of dollars, do you?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Oh, it would result in that, nominally, ultimately. While he would get more dollars, he would get no more pay.

Mr. FUNSTON. That is all we want.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I honestly believe that we ought to have a more abundant circulating medium in this country. First, because our population is increasing so rapidly; second, because business is increasing at even a greater ratio than the population. But, Mr. Speaker, when that increase comes let it come in the form of honest money. Let that which we call a dollar be a dollar, I do not care whether it is gold or silver. I am in favor of utilizing every pound of the silver that is taken from the mines of the United States in the form of money for our people, and if there is a seigniorage, if there is a margin between the market price of the bullion and the coined dollar let that seigniorage or margin go into the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of all the people of the United States, and not into the coffers of the few mine-owners and bullion-owners of the country.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Mr. CUTCHEON. Certainly.

Mr. KELLEY. I would like to ask him if it was not an honest dollar until demonetization?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes, and that brings me now to that matter of demonetization, "the great wrong" which was perpetrated in 1873. Why, up to 1873, from the foundation of the Government, we had coined $8,000,000 in dollars and $79,000,000 in subsidiary coin, and since that time we have been coining from $24,000,000 to $38,000,000 a year, and that was the wrong that was inflicted. We never had so much or so good money in this country as now, and I hope that whatever increase may be provided may be as good as that we now have.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, it has been my rule of conduct while I have had a seat upon this floor to follow very largely my convictions when called upon to vote. I have enjoyed as much personal freedom in my votes as any man serving the same length of time that I have, and have not been, as a rule, condemned by my constituents. There is danger, when a gentleman has his ear to the ground all the time, that dust will get into it, and he will be rendered unable to hear some of the arguments that may be adduced in support of a measure or in opposition to it. The people are the source of power, I admit. They send us here and expect us to carry out their will whenever it can be done; but an intelligent constituency do not expect a Representative to fly into the face of danger to the country and so do an unwise thing. I am unable to see my way clear to vote for free coinage to the extent found in the Senate amendments. I imagine a great many of my constituents might cry out for free coinage. They may condemn me in my vote, but I shall enjoy the luxury of voting as I think I ought to vote under the circumstances, and later I think I shall enjoy the luxury of an indorsement when my constituents more fully understand all the surroundings.

This House passed a bill which was exceedingly liberal. It increased the coinage from two millions to four millions and a half per month, taking up and absorbing the entire American product. That, I thought, was enough. I have had letters from some of my constituents saying: "We hope you will vote for that bill." I voted for it, and I see no reason why I should recede from that vote. There were provisions in that bill that I would have had otherwise. The bullion-redemption clause I would have stricken out; and if we fail to concur or shall insist upon the bill which we sent to the Senate and send this bill now pending to a committee of conference, we have reason to believe that that clause or provision will be eliminated and otherwise so amended that we may have this increase of two and a half millions each month, but have it so amended that no loss shall come to the laboring classes of the country whenever paid to them for labor or productions.

We are confronted with a peculiar state of facts and conditions. Shall we get good and reasonable legislation by referring this to a committee of conference? I believe we will. Suppose we follow the Senate and concur in the Senate amendments. We have no right to say that the bill will not receive the approval of the President; but I am clear in my conviction that a free-coinage bill to-day will not receive the indorsement of the conservative men of the country, the real business interests of the country.

All admit that we run risks in a provision for free coinage, the coinage not simply of all our own product, but the silver product of the whole world. Why run these risks? Are we called upon to do it? Is it good legislation? Is it a wise course to take? I have put my ear to the ground, as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. KELLEY] so earnestly advised. I will obey my constituency every time that I receive positive instructions, but have had none in relation to this great and important silver question. I was nominated upon a platform that indorsed the Chicago platform. That platform did not call for free coinage. It called for a recognition of the two metals. We recognize it here.

This side of the House is safe and consistent, and has made for itself a record of which it may be proud. Let the House stand by the record that it made, and we will be safer, not simply as a party, but as men legislating for the great business interests of the country. When we plead for the business interests of the country we plead for the farmers and the wage-workers of the land. They want good money. It is the universal belief that all need a large increase in the circulating money or medium. We shall, as a Congress, fail in our duty if we do not secure it.

The coin and the silver notes which will be put into circulation by the passage of the House bill will, in my opinion, be soon felt in every channel of business, and it will go very far in securing an era of prosperity for which the people of the whole country have been waiting and praying. We do not have a President who puts his foot upon silver, one of the coins of the Constitution, as did President Cleveland, but a President who will cheerfully approve of a bill providing, as the House bill does, for a large increase in silver coinage and the further use of silver notes, a measure that shall go very far in restoring the ancient ratio of value in the two metals. This Administration is pledged to secure this result. I am satisfied that if we non-concur in the Senate amendments the outcome will be the adoption of a measure which will be safe and prove to be a well taken step in the direction of a complete monetization of silver. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Illinois. How much time have I, Mr. Speaker? The SPEAKER. The gentleman has really but seven minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes which I have to discuss this matter I wish to address myself to those questions which concern us most and which are brought out most prominently in this debate. First, as to the objection to the House bill. The principal objection is that it allows or authorizes the Treasury notes to be redeemed in silver bullion. The statement has been made that the provision in the bill authorizing those Treasury notes to be redeemed in silver bullion and allowing the notes to be then canceled enables the Secretary of the Treasury to contract the currency of the country to that extent. To that objection no answer has been made by gentlemen upon the other side, and no answer can be made; it stands there an unanswerable objection to the bill passed by this House.

Now, what are the objections to a free-coinage bill? The objections, as I have caught them from the other side, are, first, that it is not right, as they say, to take 72 cents and make a dollar out of it. But, Mr. Speaker, my position is that the gentlemen who are opposing the free coinage of silver are the men who are advocating the 72-cent dollar. The friends of free coinage are in favor of legislation which will bring the material out of which the dollar is made up to the value of 100 cents, so that we shall have no 72-cent dollar; while the policy advocated by gentlemen upon the other side would leave us still with a dollar of 72 cents.

My distinguished colleague from Illinois [Mr. HILL] devoted the most of his argument to the point that a free-coinage measure would benefit the bullion-holders. When he returns to the people of his district his only answer to their criticisms will be that, while he knew it would be a benefit to them to pass a free-coinage bill, he voted against their interest and their desire because he thought that to pass that bill would benefit the bullion-holders also. He can take that position and make that argument if he chooses, but I prefer to vote for a measure which will benefit the people of my district, even though it may benefit some other class also. Why, sir, you would infer from the arguments of the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures [Mr. CONGER] that under free coinage the people of this country would be taxed 25 cents every time a bullion-holder would receive a dollar certificate from the Treasury for his bullion. The bullion-holder, in fact, would not take anything away from the Treasury that he did not bring there. He would take away a certificate redeemable in coin, but the Government of the United States would have the right to redeem that coin certificate with a silver dollar, and that silver dollar could be coined from the very material which the bullion-holder would take to the Treasury. Now, who is taxed? Nobody is taxed. Gentlemen are also very fearful about increasing the value of the silver dollar, or diminishing the value of the gold dollar, yet they remained silent for years and allowed the gold dollar to increase in value without any objection.

Now, as to the point that the silver of other countries would be dumped upon the United States under a free-coinage law. How would it come here? The Secretary of the Treasury shows in his report that all the silver of the world is being used at present, and when we have passed the free-coinage bill the uses and demands for silver in other countries will exist just the same as they do now. They must have the silver, and that which brings up the price of silver in the United States will bring up its price all over the world. Silver will be used in other countries just the same after we pass this act as before, and the silver which is being coined in other countries is being used at par with gold, so that there will be nothing to gain by bringing it to the United States and exchanging it for gold dollars and then returning the gold to the country from which the silver was brought. All the silver product of the world is being used, and gentlemen might as well say that if New York or some other great central city should increase the price of grain or the price of any other commodity all of the commodity in the country would go to that particular place. It might for a time; but when there was a failure of supply to meet the demand elsewhere and the commodity began to move from where it was needed, and where there was a demand for it, the prices at such points would rise. And so it would be with silver; as soon as silver in other countries would begin to come to the United States this would cause a rise in the price of silver in such countries, and prices of silver in different countries would soon reach a common level; therefore there is no danger of our getting all the silver of the world.

Another objection is that free coinage would drive all the gold out of this country. Mr. Speaker, is that a fact or is it a prediction? It is a mere prophecy and that is all. Now, against every prophet on that side of the question I am willing to put up an equally good prophet on this side, and that settles that part of the controversy. [Laughter.] The trouble is that gentlemen who are opposed to the free coinage of silver have been predicting such results ever since silver was partially monetized in 1873, while on the other hand the records of our imports show that we have been gaining in gold coin every year.

To repeat, the objections to free coinage are, first, that it would give an undue advantage to the bullion-holder. I have already suggested that that is no excuse for refusing legislation that also would be of advantage to the whole country. The next objection is that we would be in danger of receiving all the silver of the world. I say that that objection is unreasonable because the demand for silver in other parts of the world will exist after we pass a free-coinage bill, just as it does now; other parts of the world will get and keep their portion of the general supply, and the report of the Secretary of the Treasury shows that we are in no such danger.

One word more and then I am through. Gentlemen on the other side, many of them, say they are anxious for the free coinage of silver at the proper time, provided always that "the proper time" shall never come. [Laughter.] They are ready to speak for free coinage, but every time they get an opportunity to vote they vote against it. They are ready, they say, to vote for free coinage when silver is brought to a parity with gold. The Secretary and gentlemen on that side claim that the passage of their bill will bring silver to a parity with gold, and then I suppose these gentlemen will be in favor of free coinage. Will silver be any better as a money metal when brought to a parity with gold under your bill, gentlemen, than it will be when brought to a parity with gold under a free-coinage bill? The only difference is, you say you are for the free-coinage station; but you prefer to go there on an ox wagon, with the assurance that the wagon will break down before you reach your destination; we are for the free-coinage station, and we propose to take the lightning express and get silver to a parity with gold in the quickest way possible. Your method is by legislation; ours is by legislation also.

The Secretary of the Treasury has said in his report that his bill will create a market for silver and thereby increase the demand for it and increase the price, bringing it ultimately to a parity with gold; and then we can have free coinage. Now, if a free-coinage bill will do the same thing, only more quickly and more certainly, why is not the free coinage of silver, when brought to a parity with gold under the Senate bill, just as likely to stand and to work successfully in this country as free coinage would do after you had reached the parity of silver and gold under the bill proposed by the other side?

The trouble is that some gentlemen on the other side who are advocating free coinage here are determined to pursue a course which they know will never lead to free coinage, a policy the result of which is uncertain; while gentlemen on this side of the House and some on the other, a few, are in favor of pursuing that course which is certain, which has been tried, which is constitutional, and therefore they propose to vote for a free-coinage bill. And when this Government has extended to silver the privilege of free coinage, it will then be immaterial whether the metal is actually coined or not or whether silver certificates are issued. It is the privilege of having it coined if you desire it that makes it valuable and characterizes it as money metal.

It was said by the chairman of the committee that there is not a district in this country in favor of free coinage that has not been influenced by the bullion-holders. That was the substance of his statement. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, with my colleague from Illinois, Judge PAYSON, that I believe ninety-nine out of every one hundred citizens of my district are in favor of the free coinage of silver; and I propose to vote according to the interests and desire of my people; and I hope my distinguished colleague, Judge PAYSON, will represent the 99 per cent. of the citizens of his district to-day as he represented the 1 per cent. the other day, by his vote on this question.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Illinois. I can not resist the gentleman.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Is it not true that your State convention in Illinois, about a week ago, voted down a resolution in favor of free coinage?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Illinois. I will answer the gentleman. I discover that gentlemen of the Republican party profess to give a great deal of weight to the declarations of platforms; but the people are going to be more interested in legislation—actual votes—than in platforms. The convention in Illinois adopted a platform stating that it was opposed to all unnecessary restrictions upon silver coinage, substantially a free-coinage platform. That resolution had been presented to the convention and adopted as part of the platform, a platform which reads considerably better than the one adopted by the Republicans yesterday and which I see in this morning's Post. After the convention had adopted this platform, a member brought in on his own motion a resolution and submitted it to the convention.

If the gentleman has been in conventions, as I have no doubt he has, he knows that very often a resolution submitted after the regular resolutions or platforms have been adopted—offered without any concerted action or understanding on the part of the convention—is defeated, as was the case in this instance, not because the convention was opposed to the resolution, but because it had already acted upon that subject.

Further, I wish to say that in 1888 you adopted a platform that read very well before the people of this country, but the construction that you have placed upon it in this Congress will not read so well in the next campaign.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONGER. How did the Democratic platform of 1888 read upon the silver question?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Illinois. I have not the platform before me. [Laughter on the Republican side.] I do not remember just what the platform was at that time, nor do I care; but I wish to say this to the gentleman—

Mr. CONGER. Then will you answer another question?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Illinois. Wait until I answer this.

Mr. CONGER. I thought you said you could not.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Illinois. I am voting on this question to represent the people of the Nineteenth Congressional district of Illinois, and I am going to do it regardless of what your party or any other party says in its platform; and I hope gentlemen on the other side will do the same and will adopt the Senate amendments.

Mr. CONGER. Will you answer another question?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Illinois. When I got through with this. But, instead of allowing your people to do that, the President, as it seems, has sent to members of this House his intimation threatening the Senate bill with a veto; and members on the other side have stated time and again that they can not afford to take the risk of a veto. I do not propose to go to the President of the United States and get down on my knees and ask him what kind of silver legislation he is in favor of. I shall represent the people of my own district.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman be kind enough to point me—

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Illinois. This does not come out of my time?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. CONGER. Will you point to any effort made by the Democratic party during the four years they had possession of this Government to do anything in aid of silver legislation?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Illinois. I will answer the gentleman. The people of this country are more interested in this question now than they have ever been. They are more interested in what their Representatives in Congress are doing now than in what was done last year or years ago. I point to the record which the Democratic party has made in this Congress on this question; and if you will only furnish one-fourth of your number to vote in favor of free coinage the people of this country will get it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

[Mr. BAYNE withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who desire to do so may have leave to print remarks upon this question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. The permission ought to be limited to some reasonable length of time.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Unless they are printed in a reasonable time, I should say within five or ten days, I feel inclined to object.

Mr. SHIVELY. Make it before the adjournment of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Speaker, in availing myself of the privileges of becoming the executioner of a few moments of the time of the House I desire to express in a word the reason for the vote I am about to give upon the bill. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the proposition to authorize any owner of 72 cents' worth of silver bullion to take it to the mints of the United States and have it coined into 100 cents is one that can not be adequately characterized in parliamentary language.

In business circles if a man was to seriously argue that it would be honest and just for the Government of the United States to buy of one class of citizens a certain commodity at 28 cents above its market price, while it paid all other citizens for all other commodities their market price only, he would make such an exposure of his intelligence or his morals, or both, that he could scarcely hope long to escape being catalogued among the defective classes. Yet on the floor of this House something near akin to such a romantic device is advocated by statesmen.

I doubt if free coinage of silver was ever in vogue in this country when silver bullion was worth less than 16 to 1 of gold, or when the dollar into which it was coined was worth more than the commodity coined, with the cost of labor added. What sane man would coin a piece of bullion worth more than a dollar into a piece of money worth no more than that sum?

At the date of the coinage act of 1792 the ratio of silver to gold was 15.17 to 1 of gold. In 1873 the ratio was 15.63 to 1 of gold, and in the entire interval of eighty years which covered the life of free coinage in this country silver never fell so low as 16 to 1 of gold. The present ratio is 22 to 1; and it is seriously proposed to give silver the same place under our coinage laws now, when the bullion coined into 100 cents is worth but 72, as when it was worth a dollar or upward. This proposition is urged distinctly upon the ground that this act of legislation will raise the value of silver to a parity with gold. Such an assumption is wholly unwarranted and is without any facts to sustain it. If it is true of silver, why not of any other metal? There is no such potentiality in an act of legislation. It has never been known to nullify the great law of supply and demand which, the world over, fixes prices.

When our silver bullion enjoyed the privileges of the mint it was not kept at a parity with gold, and in order to keep it somewhere in the neighborhood of it the weight of the gold dollar was reduced from 24.75 grains to 23.2 grains of pure gold. Before this change was made silver was at a discount and gold was leaving the country. This occurred in 1834. The new ratio proved too high, and in 1837 the amount of pure gold in a dollar was increased to 23.22 grains, thus making the ratio 15.988 to 1 of gold, at which it has since remained.

It will be remembered by gentlemen familiar with our silver history that prior to 1834, when the ratio was 15 to 1, gold was at a premium of 5 to 7 per cent. and, as I have already stated, was leaving the country, and but little was brought to the mints for coinage. When the ratio was changed in 1834 silver advanced to a premium of 1 to 3 per cent., and remained at a premium to 1873, and very little of it was taken to the mints for coinage into dollars. If the past is any guide to the future, it is fairly inferable that the free coinage of silver now would produce the same results as formerly, other things being equal, and we can rationally look for no other results than the disappearance of our gold and an influx of foreign silver.

Holding this view, I must totally dissent from the Senate amendment, and hold to the House bill, or something of a similar import, whose object will be to swell the volume of our circulating medium to a limited extent, and at the same time to make every dollar of it worth 100 cents.

The free-coinage idea under existing monetary conditions is to my mind the most stupendous wrong that ever reared its head in any legislative body, the most imposing financial heresy that ever shocked an honest mind, and those who advocate it misconceive the character and temper of the American people. And when the gentleman from Kansas is holding his ear to the ground to catch the rising sentiment of his Western farmers I warn him to have a care that he is able to distinguish the honest and temperate sentiment of the calm and judicious citizen from the swelling cry of the demagogue borne along the same conductor.

On this subject, Mr. Speaker, my convictions are firm and unchangeable, and in expressing them I think I voice the sentiment of the Republican party of Pennsylvania, whose convention is now in session at Harrisburg, and may be at this hour formulating the thought I have uttered into its declaration of sentiments upon the public issues of the day.

The position of the Senate, I may say, Mr. Speaker, on this bill is exceedingly anomalous; it seems to reverse the principle which underlies the idea of two Houses in the legislative department of the Government. Benjamin Franklin's celebrated illustration was a cup and saucer. "We pour our steaming morning beverage into a saucer to cool it," said the philosopher, "so we must have a Senate to pour the hot legislation of the House into, to cool it off." But the illustration fails in this instance, for the Senate is hotter than the House. It has become the cup, is more radical and goes to greater excess—further into the face of danger than the House is willing to go. But as in fashionable life the saucer is dispensed with and we take the beverage hot from the cup, I am in favor of taking our coffee fresh from the cup, and adhering to the House bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STOCKDALE. Mr. Speaker, as between these two propositions, I find that locality is the cause of division more than any matured views on the system of finances that ought to be adopted. Democrats and Republicans divide upon this question according to locality. Those who represent constituencies who have largely of gold and bonds vote for the demonetization of silver; those who represent constituencies who make the wealth of the nation and make it possible for the nation to have money are opposed to the demonetization of silver.

I do not challenge any man's right to vote as he deems the interests of his people demand. What I do resent is that gentlemen should come here and claim with serious faces that they do not mean by this bill to demonetize silver. We can not doubt your intelligence, and that leaves your sincerity in question.

If the Republican party were at all friends of silver, if that party was not the sworn enemy of silver coin, it would have been content to leave the present law in force and allowed the Secretary of the Treasury to continue coining $2,000,000 per month at least; but the framers of this bill were so anxious to repeal the law compelling the Secretary to coin silver that they inserted a section in the foreground of the bill repealing the law of 1876, instead of at the close. The only thing in this bill that is clear and unequivocal is the section repealing all laws authorizing the coinage of any silver at all.

The law of 1873 requiring the Secretary to coin $2,000,000 per month and authorizing him to coin $4,000,000 per month, has met the stubborn opposition of every Secretary since the passage of the law. He has coined the smallest possible amount that he could escape an open violation of the letter of the law, while he did, in my opinion, evade the spirit of the law by refusing to coin more when he knew the people wanted more. He shows his hostility to silver by furnishing this bill to Congress repealing all authority to coin silver except upon a contingency that he knows and Congress knows will not occur under this bill as a law. The Secretary evidently regards this bill more in the interest of gold and more against silver than even the coinage of two millions, or he would have gone on coining two millions per month, and not volunteered this bill, presumably gratuitous on his part.

The President is almost sure to appoint his Secretary of the Treasury from the moneyed men in the East, that insures his hostility to silver; therefore, to leave anything in his discretion is to declare for the most hostile treatment of silver that the law will permit, and Congress should define its will clearly, and I have no doubt that the majority is doing that now, knowing that the present Secretary will go only so far as the law drives him in aid of silver. I say he regards this bill better for the gold men than even the coinage of two millions, or he would not have urged its passage; and it is more in their interests, because, so far as it went, $2,000,000 of silver every month was put on an equality with gold, as the Constitution intended it should be. This bill drives it from its place as a coinable metal and degrades it to the position of a mere commodity, and by that means makes gold the only standard of value. This is simply the first step to drive silver out of the currency entirely.

That it saves the cost of coining is of very little force, for the mints are all equipped with machinery and a full corps of employes and officers, not one of whom will be discharged, and the dies and machinery will be better preserved by use than lying idle. Every bondholder is interested in demonetizing silver, for his bonds are payable in coin; with silver out of the way he will get gold, and gold will be worth more. Every holder of gold or gold certificates is interested in getting silver out of the way, for that increases the value of gold in his hands.

The Secretary is required to buy silver at a price to be determined by the prices-current of the silver markets of the world. That means England, and it is equivalent to saying that he shall purchase silver from our own citizens at whatever price England pays. He can cable over to London every morning and ask, "How much may I pay for silver to-day?" He purchases by the prices-current the same as he would purchase iron, or copper, or tin, or wheat, or cotton; not to coin it, but to hold as a basis of credit upon which to issue Treasury notes to the people. It makes a money-broker of the Secretary of the Treasury and furnishes him the capital to trade on.

How men can vote for this bill and refuse to vote for the Alliance subtreasury I can not see, unless it be that this favors the rich, the gold-owners, bond-owners, and the mortgage-owners, and the subtreasury plan is intended to benefit the farmers of the country. In that contest you can count me on the side of the farmers.

I am opposed to the demonetization of silver, because a very large class of the population of the South want the silver coin to use, and not Treasury notes—a class of people whose coldest and cruellest enemy is the Republican party and against whom the Republican party has been enacting oppressive and unfriendly legislation for the last twenty-five years. I refer to the colored people. They want to use the silver coin. They can count the silver coin and they know what they get when they get it, and the older ones, particularly, do not know what they get in a Treasury note. And when this law is passed there will follow down there the first cousins of the carpet-baggers, of the Freedman's Bureau, and of the Freedman's Bank, to swindle them out of the last dollar they have got. Now, I say it is a piece of hostile legislation against that class of people, and I have listened in vain to hear one man on the Republican side of the House raise his voice in their interest. It has not been done this session. The only time that you ever enact a law or speak a word in favor of the colored race is when you want them to vote for your party.

The Republicans have never done aught for the negro but tax him and teach him to hate the white man, who furnishes the money to educate his children. The Government emphasized his entrance into his new-born citizenship by the gentlemanly asportation and conversion, without his consent, of his cotton—the fruit of his toil as a freeman—and then worked off the dose by those other decoctions, the Freedman's Bureau and the Freedman's Bank. You make him specious promises of large sums to educate his children, and when you get into power and are able to comply with the promise you put your fingers to your nose and tell him to wait until you come. After a long fight the Democratic party succeeded in forcing silver coinage back upon the statute-books at the limited rate of $2,000,000. It is the coin suited to the negro. It suited him to count, he liked to carry it with him to lay by; it would not decay; it would not burn; the mts would not eat it; and he knew what he had. But it suits the gold men, it suits the bondholder, it suits the gold-mine owners, to have no more silver coin; and you will send the colored man Treasury notes that he does not want and can not read, in which he has no confidence and can not keep. But if you will organize and lend him ready-made, as you did before, a Freedman's Bank, with all modern improvements, he will have a place where his Treasury notes may be kept, and where they will not trouble him any more.

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the subject now under consideration is grave enough in every aspect to cause us at this, even the last moment of the discussion, to pause and thoughtfully consider whether by our votes here to-day we shall reverse the well-established financial policy of the country.

From 1793 to 1873 we had the free and unlimited coinage of silver in the United States, the two metals fluctuating in value from time to time, rarely if ever at a parity, sometimes so varying and unequal that the President of the United States was compelled to suspend the coinage of the silver dollar—a rule made by Jefferson in 1805 and followed for thirty years afterward. What we are considering here to-day, and what we have been considering almost without interruption for the last ten days, has been only the struggle of the century which has vexed the statesmen of all periods of our history, and that struggle has been to preserve the concurrent circulation of gold and silver, each on a parity with the other. And we have never been able to do it until now. At no time in the history of the United States have gold and silver so circulated side by side, in equal volume, as gold and silver have circulated concurrently since 1873.

Now I believe, Mr. Speaker, that we should preserve these two moneys side by side. And it is because I want to preserve these equal standards of value that I have opposed and shall oppose concurrence in the Senate amendments. I do not want gold at a premium, I do not want silver at a discount, or vice versa, but I want both metals side by side equal in purchasing power and in legal-tender quality, equal in power to perform the functions of money with which to do the business and move the commerce of the United States. To tell me that the free and unlimited coinage of the silver of the world, in the absence of co-operation on the part of other commercial nations, will not bring gold to a premium is to deny all history and the weight of all financial experience. The very instant that you have opened up our mints to the silver bullion of the world independently of international action, that very instant, or in a brief time at best, you have sent gold to a premium, and when you have sent gold to a premium, then you have put it in great measure into disuse and we are remitted to the single standard, that of silver alone—we have deprived ourselves of the active use of both metals. It is only because of the safe and conservative financial policy of the Republican party, aided by conservative men of all parties, which has more than once received the approval of the country, that since 1873 by our legislation we have compelled gold and silver to work together upon an equality, both employed as safe means of exchange in the business of our country. Let the bullion of the world come into this market from Europe and Asia, and then, whether gold flows out of this country or not, it flows out of the channels of business and the avenues of trade, and we are in danger of being driven to the use of silver alone. I oppose the Senate amendments because I want the use of both silver and gold. The gentlemen who favor the amendments of the Senate want silver to do the work alone, to be the sole agency of our exchanges. Those of us who believe in conservative legislation want to utilize both metals and make both respond to the wants of trade.

They talk about silver being cheap money. And gentlemen no longer conceal on that side and on this that the reason they want silver is because it is cheap. I am not attracted by that word "cheap," whether it is applied to nations or to men, or whether it is applied to money. Cheap, as the term has been employed in this debate, is an evidence of financial demoralization and commercial inferiority. Cheap is a badge of degradation whether it is applied to individuals or whether it is applied to money, and I do not propose by any vote of mine to force the people of the United States, the farmers and laborers, to the cheapest money of the world or to any policy which might tend in that direction. Whatever dollars we have in this country must be good dollars, as good in the hands of the poor as the rich; equal dollars, equal in inherent merit, equal in purchasing power, whether they be paper dollars, or gold dollars, or silver dollars, or Treasury notes—each convertible into the other and each exchangeable for the other because each is based upon equal value and has behind it equal security; good not by the fiat of law alone, but good because the whole commercial world recognizes its inherent and inextinguishable value.

There should be no speculative features in our money, no opportunity for speculation in the exchanges of the people. They must be safe and stable.

And I stand here to-day speaking not for a single section, but for my country and for the whole country, and I say that it is for the highest and best interests of all that whatever money we have it must be based upon both gold and silver and represent the best money in the world. [Loud applause.]

Mr. CONGER. The hour has arrived at which the previous question was ordered, and I now demand a vote.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I suppose the first motion would be a motion to concur in the Senate amendments—that the vote to concur takes precedence.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BLAND. I demand the previous question upon that.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is already ordered by action of the House, and the question will first be taken on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri—that the House concur in the Senate amendments. It is the option of any member to ask for the privilege—

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask a separate vote. [Cries of "Oh, no!" on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CONGER. I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. A separate vote is demanded.

Mr. FLOWER. On what?

The SPEAKER. On each one of the Senate amendments.

Mr. PETERS. Why, Mr. Speaker, I do not see why that should be done.

Mr. SPRINGER. The first section of the bill is stricken out, and the first amendment of the Senate is inserted.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the first amendment of the Senate, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the Clerk to read the first section of the House bill, and the amendment of the Senate to that.

The SPEAKER. The Senate amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out section 1 and inserting the following:

"That from and after the date of the passage of this act the unit of value in the United States shall be the dollar, and the same may be coined of 412½ grains of standard silver, or of 23.8 grains of standard gold; and the said coins shall be legal tender for all debts, public and private. That hereafter any owner of silver or gold bullion may deposit the same at any mint of the United States to be formed into standard dollars or bars for his benefit and without charge; but it shall be lawful to refuse any deposit of less value than $100, or any bullion so base as to be unsuitable for the operations of the mint."

Mr. CONGER. I demand the yeas and nays on that.

Mr. BLAND. Can we have the first section read, so that we may know what we are voting upon?

The SPEAKER. The House has already considered that. It has been repeatedly read to the House.

Mr. BLAND. I know that; but I would like to have it read so that the House may understand it. [Cries of "We understand it!"]

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 135, nays 152, not voting 40; as follows:

YEAS—135.

Abbott,	Cowles,	Kilgore,	Pierce,
Alderson,	Crain,	Lane,	Post,
Allen, Miss.	Crisp,	Lanham,	Reilly,
Anderson, Kans.	Culberson, Tex.	Lava,	Richardson,
Anderson, Miss.	Cummings,	Lee,	Robertson,
Bankhead,	Davidson,	Lester, Ga.	Rowland,
Barnes,	De Haven,	Lester, Va.	Sayers,
Barlow,	Dockery,	Lewis,	Shively,
Blanchard,	Dorsey,	Magner,	Skinner,
Bland,	Edmunds,	Mansur,	Smith, Ill.
Blount,	Elliott,	Martin, Ind.	Springer,
Boatner,	Ellis,	McClammy,	Stewart, Ga.
Breckinridge, Ark.	Enloe,	McClellan,	Stewart, Tex.
Breckinridge, Ky.	Featherston,	McCreary,	Stockley,
Brickner,	Fithian,	McMillin,	Stone, Ky.
Brookshire,	Forman,	McRae,	Stone, Mo.
Brown, J. B.	Forney,	Mills,	Tarsney,
Brunner,	Fowler,	Montgomery,	Tillman,
Buchanan, Va.	Funston,	Moore, Tex.	Townsend, Colo.
Bullock,	Gibson,	Morrill,	Tucker,
Bunn,	Gifford,	Morrow,	Turner, Ga.
Bynum,	Goodnight,	Norton,	Turner, Kans.
Candler, Ga.	Grimes,	Oates,	Venable,
Carlton,	Hare,	O'Ferrall,	Wade,
Carter,	Hatch,	O'Neill, Ind.	Washington,
Caruth,	Haynes,	Owen, Ind.	Wheeler, Ala.
Catchings,	Heard,	Owens, Ohio	Whiting,
Chipman,	Hemphill,	Parrott,	Whitthorne,
Clarke, Ala.	Henderson, N. C.	Paynter,	Wilkinson,
Clements,	Herbert,	Peel,	Williams, Ill.
Cobb,	Hermann,	Pennington,	Williams, Ohio
Connell,	Holman,	Perkins,	Wilson, Mo.
Cooper, Ind.	Kelley,	Perry,	Wilson, W. Va.
Cothran,	Kerr, Pa.	Peters,

NAYS—152.

Adams,	Cheatham,	Harmer,	Moore, N. H.
Allen, Mich.	Clancy,	Haugen,	Morey,
Andrew,	Cogswell,	Henderson, Ill.	Morse,
Arnold,	Coleman,	Henderson, Iowa	Mudd,
Atkinson, Pa.	Comstock,	Hill,	Mitchler,
Baker,	Conger,	Hitt,	Niedringhaus,
Banks,	Covert,	Hopkins,	O'Donnell,
Bayne,	Craig,	Houk,	O'Neill, Mass.
Beckwith,	Culbertson, Pa.	Kennedy,	O'Neill, Pa.
Belden,	Cutcheon,	Kerr, Iowa	Payne,
Belknap,	Dargan,	Ketcham,	Payson,
Bergen,	Darlington,	Kinsey,	Pugley,
Bingham,	De Lano,	Knapp,	Quackenbush,
Bliss,	Dingley,	Lacey,	Quinn,
Boothman,	Dolliver,	La Follette,	Raines,
Boutelle,	Dunnell,	Laidlaw,	Reed, Iowa
Bowden,	Dunphy,	Lausing,	Reyburn,
Brewer,	Evans,	Lehbach,	Rife,
Brosius,	Farquhar,	Lind,	Rowell,
Brower,	Finley,	Lodge,	Rusk,
Browne, Va.	Flick,	Malsh,	Russell,
Buckalew,	Flood,	Mason,	Sanford,
Burrows,	Flower,	McAdoo,	Sawyer,
Burton,	Frank,	McComas,	Scranton,
Butterworth,	Gear,	McCord,	Scull,
Caldwell,	Geisenhainer,	McDuffie,	Sherman,
Campbell,	Geek,	McKenna,	Simonds,
Candler, Mass.	Greenhalge,	McKinley,	Smith, W. Va.
Canon,	Grout,	Miles,	Smyser,
Caswell,	Hall,	Milliken,	Snider,
Cheadle,	Hansbrough,	Moffit,	Spinola,

Spooner,
Stephenson,
Stewart, Vt.
Sivers,
Stockbridge,
Struble,
Stump,

Swency,
Taylor, E. B.
Taylor, Ill.
Taylor, Tenn.
Thomas,
Townsend, Pa.
Tracey,

Turner, N. Y.
Vandever,
Van Schaick,
Vaux,
Waddill,
Wallace, Mass.
Wallace, N. Y.

Watson,
Wiley,
Willcox,
Wilson, Ky.
Wilson, Wash.
Wright,
Yardley.

NOT VOTING—49.

Atkinson, W. Va.
Barwig,
Biggs,
Browne, T. M.
Buchanan, N. J.
Clark, Wis.
Clunie,
Cooper, Ohio
Dalsell,
Dibble,

Ewart,
Fitch,
Grosvenor,
Hayes,
Hooker,
Lawler,
Martin, Tex.
McCarthy,
McClormick,
Morgan,

Note,
Osborne,
Outhwaite,
Phelan,
Pickett,
Price,
Randall,
Ray,
Rockwell,
Rogers,

Seney,
Stahneck,
Taylor, J. D.
Thompson,
Walker, Mass.
Walker, Mo.
Wheeler, Mich.
Wickham,
Wike,
Yoder.

So the motion to concur was rejected.

Mr. RANDALL. On this question I am paired with the gentleman from California, Mr. CLUNIE. If he were present, he would vote "ay," and I would vote "nay."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I voted on the first call, and I understand that my name was called the second time. I voted "ay."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The name of the gentleman from Arkansas will be called.

The name of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, was called, and he voted "ay."

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. FITCH, is detained in New York by illness. If he were present, he would vote "nay." He desired me to so state.

The following additional pairs were announced until further notice:

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR with Mr. PRICE.

Mr. PICKLER with Mr. STAHLNECKER.

Mr. ATKINSON, of West Virginia, with Mr. PHELAN.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey, with Mr. LAWLER.

Mr. COOPER, of Ohio, with Mr. DIBBLE, on this vote.

Mr. RANDALL with Mr. CLUNIE on all silver bills; also bankruptcy bill and Federal-election bill.

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the recapitulation of the names.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I think we had better have the names read.

The vote was recapitulated.

Mr. MILLS. I notice that the name of Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio, was called. He is paired.

The SPEAKER. There are two gentlemen by the name of Taylor from Ohio.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR was paired, and I noticed his name was read.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MILLS. That is all right. I see the gentleman is here, and that is a matter for himself.

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 135 and the nays 152. So the House non-concurs in the amendment of the Senate. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not ask for a separate vote on the other amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the request for a separate vote, and the question will now be taken, unless some other gentleman asks for a separate vote, upon the remaining amendments together.

Mr. BLAND. I think that may as well be done on all the remaining amendments.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I did not catch whether there was any objection. I desire to object. I demand a separate vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announced that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] had withdrawn the demand for a separate vote, and asked if there was any other objection.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I only desire a separate vote on the fourth amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question, then, is upon concurring in the amendments of the Senate except the fourth amendment.

The question was put, and the Speaker announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 85, noes 146.

So the House non-concurred in the remaining amendments of the Senate except amendment No. 4.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the motion to concur in the fourth amendment. The Clerk will report the fourth amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 4 and insert the following:

"SEC. 4. That the certificates provided for in this act and all silver and gold certificates already issued shall be receivable for all taxes and dues to the United States of every description and shall be a legal tender for the payment of all debts, public and private."

The question was taken on concurring in the fourth amendment, and the Speaker declared that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. COWLES called for the yeas and nays, but withdrew the call. The amendment was then non-concurred in.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, is the amendment to the title included in the votes that have been taken?

The SPEAKER. The amendment to the title is not included.

Mr. CONGER. Then I move to non-concur in the amendment to the title.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER moved to reconsider the several votes by which the amendments of the Senate were non-concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that a conference be asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen desiring to print remarks upon this question may have leave to do so, provided they are printed within five days.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I hope there will be no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER] asks unanimous consent that gentlemen desiring to do so may print remarks on the silver bill, provided they are printed within five days. Is there objection?

Mr. SPINOLA. I object.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Oh, no.

Mr. SPINOLA. Oh, yes. If any one has anything to say let him get up here and say it. [Laughter.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed House bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 516) to extend the limit for the erection of a public building at Springfield, Mo.; and

A bill (H. R. 887) authorizing the erection of a hotel upon the Government reservation at Fortress Monroe.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. 9104) granting to the Jacksonville, St. Augustine and Halifax River Railway Company a right of way across the United States military reservation at St. Augustine, Fla., with an amendment, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. DAVIS, and Mr. COCKRELL.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a bill (H. R. 9803) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891.

It also announced that the Senate receded from its amendments numbered 9 and 10 to the bill (H. R. 7160) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes.

It further announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House was requested: An act (S. 2786) for the donation of Fort Brooke military reservation at Tampa, Fla., for free schools, and other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KENNEDY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 344) to grant the right of way to the Pittsburgh, Columbus and Fort Smith Railway Company through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 389) granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents;

A bill (H. R. 1110) granting a pension to William J. Bryan;

A bill (H. R. 1405) granting a pension to Betsey E. Cole;

A bill (H. R. 1474) for the relief of George W. Madden;

A bill (H. R. 1783) granting a pension to Mrs. Alice A. Cunningham;

A bill (H. R. 3458) granting a pension to Ann Ruffner; and

A bill (H. R. 5974) extending the time of payment to purchasers of land of the Omaha tribe of Indians in Nebraska, and for other purposes.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill be taken up, the amendments of the Senate non-concurred in, and that the House ask for a conference.

Mr. HOLMAN rose.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not object to the request of the gentleman from Illinois. We only desire to non-concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish either that the amendments shall be read or else that a statement shall be made of what they are.

Mr. HITT. They are very numerous.

Mr. HOLMAN. If they are very numerous that is an additional reason for knowing what they are.

Mr. HITT. They are numerous, and they are all amendments making changes of salary or compensation and provisions to carry out the recommendations of the Pan-American Conference.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The confusion is so great that it is impossible to hear what is going on.

The SPEAKER. The point is well taken. The House will be in order. The Clerk will read the amendments of the Senate.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, if these amendments are considered at all, of course they ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole, but if the gentleman having charge of this bill will state the general character of the amendments, I shall not insist upon their being read.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, in response to the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana, I will state that the amendments made by the Senate to the House bill consist largely of changes in the compensation of diplomatic and consular officers, generally increasing the amounts. The recommendations of the Pan-American Conference recently in session in this city are also provided for. All of these are amendments increasing the appropriations in so far as they provide appropriations, and my motion is to non-concur in them all.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire of the gentleman whether the committee are unanimous in opposition to these various amendments.

Mr. HITT. The committee framed the bill which the House sent to the Senate, and upon that bill the committee were unanimous. They desire to consider carefully these amendments, but what conclusion they will reach upon each and every one of these amendments to be considered I can not say. I move to non-concur that we may consider them.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the committee are opposed to the Senate amendments, I understand.

Mr. HITT. The committee are unanimous in desiring me to move to non-concur in them.

Mr. HOLMAN. But are the committee opposed to them all? Because if not, the instructions of the House might be necessary.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state in reply to the gentleman from Indiana that the committee have not had a meeting, and have not considered the amendments proposed by the Senate to the diplomatic bill. The gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the committee [Mr. HITT], is asking now that the House non-concur in all the Senate amendments, with the view of having a committee of conference. I am in favor of non-concurring in the amendments proposed by the Senate, because I believe that is the quickest and best way to get to the consideration of them.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then, as a matter of fact, the House committee have not considered these amendments at all?

Mr. HITT. The committee has not been in session since the bill came back, but I have consulted members of the committee about it, and I express their wish.

Mr. DOCKERY. Has the bill been referred to the committee?

Mr. MCCREARY. There has been no meeting of the committee in regard to the Senate amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that as a general rule amendments made by the Senate to House bills ought to be regularly considered by the House, so that the gentlemen who may be appointed as conferees may understand what the views of the House are. But indulging the hope that all these increases of salaries will be resisted by the conferees who will be appointed, I will not insist upon the reading of these amendments.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] to non-concur in the amendments of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HITT. I now move that the House ask for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HITT. I ask that an order be made for the printing of the bill with the amendments of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now move that the House adjourn.

Mr. CANNON. I hope the House will not adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE] has a conference report.

FEES OF TERRITORIAL OFFICERS.

Mr. STRUBLE. I ask consideration of the conference report which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to House bill No. 3940 to amend an act entitled "An act to extend the fees of certain officers over the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

I. S. STRUBLE,
B. W. PERKINS,
C. B. KILGORE,
Managers on the part of the House.
GEO. F. EDMUNDS,
G. G. VEST,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The effect of the amendment of the Senate to H. R. 3940 is to state in more distinct and definite terms the amounts marshals and district attorneys of the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, respectively, shall be allowed to retain of fees and emoluments (including salaries) coming into their hands than is stated in the House bill, the amount of such fees, emoluments, and salary in the case of each officer named being limited in the bill and also in the proposed amendment to the sum of $6,000 per annum.

A further effect of the Senate amendment is to provide that all sums coming into the hands of said officials above the said sum of $6,000 each per annum shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and the accounts of said officers shall be made, audited, returned, and settled at the same times and in the same manner that the accounts of other marshals and district attorneys are required to be made, audited, returned, and settled.

In the judgment of the House conferees these points were sufficiently covered and guarded in the House bill by reference to existing provisions of the Federal statutes, but the Senate amendment is regarded more direct and specific to the same purpose, and therefore has been accepted by the House conferees.

I. S. STRUBLE,
B. W. PERKINS,
C. B. KILGORE,
Conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. STRUBLE. I move the adoption of this report.

The report was adopted.

Mr. STRUBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REGULATION OF FEDERAL ELECTIONS.

Mr. CANNON. By direction of the Committee on Rules, I report back a resolution, together with a substitute recommended by the committee.

The Clerk read the original resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That on Tuesday, June 24, immediately after the reading of the Journal, House bill No. 10958 and the substitute therefor, reported with favorable recommendation from the Committee on the Election of President, Vice-President, and Members of Congress, be considered then and thereafter from day to day until Saturday, June 28, at 3 o'clock p. m., when the previous question shall be considered ordered on the bill and all pending amendments.

Mr. MCCREARY. I ask that the Clerk read the title of the bill referred to in the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the resolution reported by the committee as a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately after the passage of this resolution the House proceed to consider House bill No. 11045 until July 2 at 2 o'clock, when the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and any pending amendments and upon a substitute for the whole bill, which the member in charge of the bill shall have a right to offer; that during the last two days amendments may be offered to any part of the bill in the House, with debate under the five-minute rule; that this shall not interfere with general appropriation bills.

Mr. SPRINGER. I thought a motion to adjourn was pending. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House adjourn.

Mr. MCCREARY. In order that we may know exactly what bill is referred to in the resolution, I ask the Clerk to read the title.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has moved that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CANNON. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. MCCREARY. I ask that the title of the bill be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has moved that the House adjourn.

Mr. CANNON. Can the gentleman from Illinois take me off the floor?

Mr. MCCREARY. In order that we may understand what we are voting upon, I should like to have the title of the bill read.

Mr. FLOWER. It is a bill to try to elect a Republican Congress this fall; but they can not do it.

Mr. ENLOE. It is a bill to revolutionize the Government.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be read. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist on his motion to adjourn?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do.

The SPEAKER. Then the question must be taken on that motion. Mr. MCCREARY. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to yield until the title of the bill can be read.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will yield until the title is read.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois withdraw his motion?

Mr. SPRINGER. For the purpose of having the title of the bill read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not withdraw it, unless he withdraws it unconditionally.

Mr. McCREARY. Then I do not ask the gentleman to withdraw it.
Mr. CANNON. I believe the gentleman can not make the motion to adjourn while I am in possession of the floor. I did not yield for that motion.

Mr. FLOWER. Only one "gentleman from Illinois" can be recognized at a time.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman claims possession of the floor the Chair thinks he is entitled to it.

Mr. CANNON. I do claim it. I have made this report and am on the floor. I have not given it up.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, in charge of the resolution, has the floor.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the Chair decide that I did not have the floor to make the motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so decides.

Mr. SPRINGER. Very well.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I make that report by direction of the Committee on Rules. It proposes immediately after its adoption—upon the passage of the resolution itself—that the House shall begin to consider the bill referred to, and that the consideration of that bill shall continue until the 2d day of July, at the hour of 2 o'clock; that the last two days of its consideration shall be in the House for amendment, consideration, and discussion under the five-minute rule, and that at the hour of 2 o'clock, on the 2d day of July, the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the bill and all then pending amendments, and that a substitute for the bill, in the event the gentleman in charge of the bill should move it, should also be included.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question for information?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLOUNT. I want to know whether the gentleman construes that portion of the order which provides for two days' debate under the five-minute rule, with right to offer amendments, to cover one full day and the part of the next day up to the hour of 2 o'clock, to wit, beginning at the opening of the session, whatever the hour may be, up to the time the previous question is to be considered as ordered by the resolution.

Mr. CANNON. The order can speak for itself. As the gentleman himself is aware, I was not in the committee at this meeting until just before the order was made and did not hear all the discussion that took place with regard to that portion of it, so I shall have to ask for the reading of the resolution again, or that portion of it.

The resolution was again reported.

Mr. BLOUNT. Now, I will ask my friend from Illinois his construction of that order.

Mr. CANNON. I think the order speaks for itself. It says "during the last two days." I suppose that would mean at least two full days; possibly it might mean during the first and second alone. But if the gentleman desires it to apply to the day prior to the first, I do not know how the Speaker might rule, but I should have no personal objection to it. How would the gentleman from Georgia like it?

Mr. BLOUNT. As between a day and a half and two full days I would, of course, prefer the two full days for the privilege of offering amendments and discussion under the five-minute rule.

Mr. CULBERSON. May I ask the gentleman from Illinois a question?

Mr. CANNON. In a moment. I am informed—I was not present at the time—that that part of the resolution that refers to the two days for amendment under the five-minute rule was informally talked over in the committee as applying to Monday and Tuesday.

Mr. McKINLEY. I think that was the intention of the committee, that there should be two full days for amendments, and debate under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman, then, does not consider from the hour of meeting, say at 12 o'clock, to 2 o'clock as a full day, in the meaning of this resolution?

Mr. McKINLEY. No.

Mr. BURROWS. Two full days mean Monday and Tuesday.

Mr. CANNON. If there is any doubt about it, and the gentleman will indicate how he would like to have it, I am satisfied there can be no trouble.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will say this, and believe it to be satisfactory to this side in that respect, that we prefer that that time shall be so determined that we shall have two full days at the close, to have the five-minute rule apply for amendment and debate, counting the ordinary hours that the House is in session for a day, say from 12 o'clock to 6 o'clock as one full day.

Mr. CANNON. That will be, of course, two full days, counting by hours.

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes. Suppose we meet, for instance, at 12 o'clock and adjourn at 6; that is six hours, and will be considered one day. We want, therefore, twelve hours of the time allowed for consideration under the five-minute rule at least.

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection to that being considered as the construction.

Mr. BLOUNT. Let the resolution be modified in that way.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Let me ask the gentleman from Kansas as to what is the meaning of the resolution, in his judgment, in that part of it about offering amendments under the five-minute rule. Does it mean that the bill shall be read and amendments offered to each section as it is read, as is ordinarily done in Committee of the Whole, where the sections are read seriatim and amendments offered? Or does it mean that these are to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the rules of the House, so that if there be two amendments pending the right to offer another amendment would depend not only upon the recognition by the Speaker but the disposal of the preceding amendments; and hence the pendency of perhaps two inconsequential or immaterial amendments would prevent the offering of any other or material amendments?

Mr. CANNON. My understanding is that you can go to any paragraph of the bill to offer amendments.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If so, then does it not come within the decision of the Speaker upon the judicial bill, by which two amendments can be offered at different parts of the bill, after which the power of amendment is exhausted? So, in fact, under the pretense of the five-minute rule we have nothing.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend from Kentucky that in my opinion the meaning of the resolution is that there shall be two days allowed for amendments to be offered to any part of the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand further, if the gentleman will allow me—

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. That at any time we can get rid of the difficulty suggested by my friend from Kentucky by ordering the previous question on the amendments pending and allowed under the rule, and get them out of the way, so as to offer further amendments.

Mr. HEARD. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. McMILLIN. In view of the fact that the right of amendment under this kind of a rule has, in a number of instances past, amounted to nothing, and that the right to amend has been cut off, will the gentleman not permit those gentlemen having amendments to offer to offer them and let them be printed in the RECORD, with the understanding that they be voted upon as the bill is reached?

Mr. CANNON. That might mean thirty or sixty days of voting.

Mr. McMILLIN. On the other hand, this rule will mean that a man can get the floor and offer an amendment and some one in sympathy with him may offer an amendment to the amendment and in that way cut off the right to all further amendment. That is what it means.

The SPEAKER. The House can order the previous question. It has always been in the power of the House to do that with regard to any bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. Yes; but, Mr. Speaker, it will be remembered that there were two hundred amendments hanging and undisposed of when the tariff bill was disposed of; and it is a fact known to all men here that a rule similar to this was worked seemingly with the intention of preventing amendments on the part of those who were in favor of free coinage. Now, to prevent the recurrence of that—

Mr. HOPKINS. I will suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that he has the privilege of voting against this resolution if he does not like it. [Cries of "Oh!" on the Democratic side.]

Mr. McMILLIN. That is too insignificant a manner in which to deal with a great question like this.

Mr. HOPKINS. I am glad to get your opinion upon that, but it does not change the fact.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that, after the fullest consideration, the majority of the Committee on Rules tried in good faith to make this order, giving six days for consideration and general debate, debate under the five-minute rule and for amendments, the purpose being to pass the bill, if the majority of the House desire to do so, on the 2d day of next July, and in the mean time give the amplest opportunity to the members of this House to consider the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. In further reply to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] I desire to say that if this bill can not be fully discussed and considered in the six days under the proposed order, it will be for the reason that our friends upon that side of the House do not desire to consider it.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. HEARD. Will my friend yield to me for a question?

Mr. CANNON. I will yield first to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

Mr. BLOUNT. I want to have some regularity about this discussion.

Mr. HEARD. I want to ask a question for information.

Mr. CANNON. I will answer the question of the gentleman from Missouri when I get to him.

Mr. BLOUNT. Before we go on any further, in order that there should be no more desultory debate, I desire to have it understood whether we are occupying time now which is allowed for the consideration of this order.

Mr. CANNON. Every minute we discuss this special order is so much less time, in the event it is adopted, in which to consider this bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman perhaps does not understand my question. In orders of this character it has been understood generally that twenty minutes were allowed for debate on either side.

Mr. CANNON. I think that is after the previous question has been ordered, provided there has been no debate before it is ordered, and it seems to me that this is in the nature of a conversation that might be called debate.

Mr. BLOUNT. That is all I am trying to find out, whether it is conversation or debate.

Mr. CANNON. I suppose it is debate, and I will yield to my friend as much time as he may want in which to discuss the order.

Mr. BLOUNT. The minority are entitled to a certain amount of time, and I want to take care of that time, and I do not want to do anything inadvertently that will lose us that time.

Mr. CANNON. In my opinion, the conversation that has been passing here, under the rule, amounts to debate. Of course, I do not wish to be technical about it.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then, Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as there has been a misunderstanding of this order, and even the gentleman in charge of the order has stated that he did not know what the terms of the order were, in an important matter like this I am quite sure that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] would not take any technical advantage of this rambling conversation, and I hope we can agree on twenty minutes' debate on either side.

Mr. CANNON. I will yield to my friend twenty minutes or twenty-five minutes.

Mr. BLOUNT. Let us agree on twenty minutes' debate on either side for the consideration of this order.

Mr. CANNON. I want to dispose of this question inside of the hour.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Illinois should move the previous question, he can move it without prejudices with regard to the debate that has already taken place, and then twenty minutes can be allowed for debate upon either side.

Mr. CANNON. Very well, I am willing to consent to that. Let the previous question be ordered, and then let the debate go on upon either side for twenty minutes.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not see any objection to that.

Mr. CRISP. Will my friend from Illinois allow me to ask, while the gentleman from Georgia is consulting, whether he would not consider the question of striking out that part of the resolution which excepts general appropriation bills?

Mr. CANNON. No.

Mr. CRISP. Because you see practically that might deprive us of a good deal of time.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend that that matter, as I understand it, was discussed in committee, and the agreement was that the sessions during these six days may be commenced at 11 o'clock and dispose of those bills so far as lay in our power, running till 5, half past 5, and 6 o'clock. The belief was expressed that by lengthening the sessions and commencing at 11 o'clock in the morning much more time would be obtained than would be consumed in the consideration of conference reports.

Mr. CRISP. You will not bring in the deficiency bill?

Mr. CANNON. I think the general deficiency bill will not be reported in that time.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The general deficiency bill can not well be reported within that time; but I want to say this ought not to be stricken out, because we are now near the end of the fiscal year, and when these conference reports come up they ought to be disposed of.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly, the conference reports ought to be disposed of.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I do not see any objection to the course proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], that the previous question be considered as ordered and that twenty minutes be allowed for debate on either side.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, without regard to debate which has taken place, the previous question will be considered ordered and there will be twenty minutes allowed for debate on either side.

Mr. MCADOO. I understood the gentleman from Georgia to say two days were to be devoted to debate under the five-minute rule—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to take the floor now?

Mr. CANNON. In view of the fact that I have already had the floor, I suggest that the gentleman from Georgia occupy a part of his time now.

Mr. BLOUNT. Has the gentleman from Illinois made all the explanation he desires in reference to the matter?

Mr. CANNON. For the present I have nothing further to say. I am ready to vote now. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BLOUNT. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN].

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOUNT. As much as he desires.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, we have so short a time to discuss this question that I shall be brief. Here is a bill of 73 pages and 57 sections, involving the appointment of many thousands of officers and expenditure of millions of money, to be taken up, partially considered, and rushed through, without due deliberation, by a rule adopted for the purpose. Sir, in my opinion there never was presented to this House or to a free government on this earth a more important question than that which confronts the Fifty-first Congress at this moment. Here is a proposition the most far-reaching and the most revolutionary that has ever been presented. It is centralization run mad. Despotism is sure to follow if it be enacted. Why try this dangerous experiment? Why not continue to trust the people? If they can not be trusted, our institutions are a failure. If they can not be trusted in their present disinterested methods, how will it improve them to pay large sums to them out of the Treasury to tramp from house to house as political henchmen? If not trustworthy, will they be when United States marshals put pistols in their pockets and start them out as political dead-beats?

Mr. Speaker, beside this, all other propositions that were ever presented looking to the centralization of this Government, toward the destruction of the rights of the States and the liberties of the people, dwindle into insignificance. When our fathers formed this Government they organized it into three branches, the legislative, executive, and judicial. Up to this good hour these three branches have in the main been kept separate; but to-day, within ten days of the anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, after this Government has gone on bestowing its blessings upon mankind, an example that the world is following; when Brazil has just torn down the monarchy and is forming a Government modeled after ours, it is proposed in this Congress by this bill to turn over the legislative department of the Government shackled and manacled to the judiciary. That is the proposition that is involved here. How is this done? Up to this good hour the officers of the States, the citizens of the States, control their own elections. When a member of Congress is elected, the result is forwarded to the governor or secretary of state, the governor makes a certificate of his election to this House, and upon that he is seated in this Hall. But how is it under this bill? A band of Federal officials is to be appointed by the judiciary. They are to supervise the election, count the vote, certify the result to the clerk of the Federal court, and through that channel it is to be certified to the Clerk of this House. The State, the governor, and the citizen pass entirely out of view in the election of members of Congress. They have no more power to control the election of their Representatives than if they were not citizens.

What more, Mr. Speaker? It inaugurates the most expensive system of election that ever was conceived. Under this bill there may be appointed 350,000 officers of this Government to conduct elections alone—three times as many as now hold office in the United States. They are paid, if I remember correctly, few of them less than $8 a day.

Several MEMBERS. Five dollars.

Mr. McMILLIN. One class does get $5, but some get $10, others get $15 a day, and some $20 to do the henchmen service that is imposed upon them by this bill. Many of them are appointed for life by judges who themselves are life officers, and neither selected by nor amenable to the people.

What more, Mr. Speaker? They are sent from house to house days before the election, weeks before the election, for the purpose of seeing the electors at their homes. They are intended to be, and will become, mere political bums. Where is there any warrant in the Constitution for these usurpations? Where is there any necessity in the present situation that justifies such an action if authorized by the Constitution? Whence came the inspiration of these modern statesmen, who propose by this bill to improve on the institutions of our fathers? How is it that their example is not to be followed any longer? Are these wiser than their fathers? Are they better? Were the framers of the Constitution groping in the dark? Oh, for one day of the wisdom of Hancock, Adams, and Jefferson, of Webster, Clay, and Jackson, to rebuke the modern mediocrity which sees not the right, or the modern recklessness that heeds it not!

The minority of this committee estimate that when this bill is put into full operation it will take $10,000,000 for each election that is held under it. That is another phase of this question for the people of the United States to consider. Gentlemen on the other side have got tired of being elected by the people; they want to be elected by the Federal courts. They have become tired of having a governor's name on their certificates of election; they propose that the certification shall be done hereafter by Federal authority, and, as I suggested in the beginning, the legislative department of the Government is to be turned over to the control of the judiciary. Mr. Speaker, he who wrote the Declaration of Independence, and who was spared to witness the operations of this Government, wrote to one of his compatriots concerning its future destiny. Mr. Jefferson, in a letter to Nathaniel Macon, written in 1821, said:

Our Government is now taking so steady a course as to show by what road it will pass to destruction, to wit, by consolidation first, and then corruption, its necessary consequence. The engine of consolidation will be the Federal judiciary; the two other branches, the corrupting and corrupted instruments.

That was the language of the prophet who wrote the Declaration of Independence, and now, on the second day before the return of that glorious anniversary, the prophecy is to be fulfilled and the Government is to be subverted. Rome retained her freedom five hundred years. Is it possible we will tamely, ignobly surrender ours in less than one hundred and fourteen years? No; God grant no! What does this mean? It is no sectional question. It reaches beyond sections; it rises above sections. It is a question equally affecting every State in this Union, wherever our flag floats, wherever our eagle soars. We have led the world on the idea of home rule. We have got that issue by our example, made red-hot in England to-day. Victory is almost in the grasp of those who advocate local self-governments—"home rule." I ask gentlemen on the other side if they are willing to send the message across the water to the grand old patriot Gladstone that home rule is a failure and that America itself is willing to adopt the opposite doctrine and to retreat from the advanced ground? If so, vote for this bill and the message will go, whether you send it or not. Do it and your children will blush and tell that their sires ignobly surrendered what their grandsires' blood bought and defended. [Great applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD].

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I desired to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] presenting this report a question, which I was not permitted to do, and I now desire to make a statement of my views on one proposition contained in the report, and to ask the attention of the gentleman to it when he comes to take the floor to explain the report further. It is this: Careful provision is made in the order for two days of discussion during which amendments may be offered and discussed, but beyond that there is a provision that when we come to vote upon the bill and such amendments as may be pending, there shall be reserved to the gentleman in charge of the bill the right to offer a substitute upon which also we may vote, but which substitute may not have been considered for one minute by the committee. Now, I apprehend the purpose to be this: We shall be trifled with by giving us this bill to discuss for two days, and then a caucus of the majority will be called and a substitute agreed upon and projected upon this House, the previous question will be ordered upon it, and we shall be required to vote upon that substitute without any opportunity to discuss it, much less to amend it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will take part of his time now.

Mr. CANNON. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. LODGE. I only want to say, in reply to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD], that the substitute bill proposed by the committee has been in the hands of the members of this House ever since it was agreed upon by the committee, on Wednesday last, I think. It is in the hands of members and I have had it annotated.

Mr. HEARD. That is the bill that we are to consider here.

Mr. LODGE. That is the substitute.

Mr. HEARD. But this order provides that you may offer another substitute for the whole bill.

Mr. LODGE. That is the substitute which I propose to offer. The number of the bill given is the bill considered by the committee, and the order says that a substitute therefor may be offered.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts, then, withdraw that part of the order?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no. The gentleman from Massachusetts—

Mr. HEMPHILL. Does not understand, evidently. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Does not, I am satisfied, understand the scope of the order. The substitute that he speaks of, if I understand him, is the one reported back from his committee. This order provides that the gentleman in charge of the bill may move a substitute if he sees proper to do so.

Mr. HEARD. At the last moment, after the opportunity for discussion is over.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, that is just what it provides; and in my opinion it is just what the general rules of this House mean, even without that provision.

Mr. HEARD. Then, why discuss the original bill and have it amended when at the last moment a substitute may be presented which we shall have no opportunity to discuss or amend?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, if my friend will recollect, he will understand that you may perfect a measure by amendment. It is always in order to perfect it first, and then it is in order to move a substitute.

Mr. HEARD. But my friend will surely allow that the language of this order will authorize the offering of a substitute which has no relation to the original bill and is in no wise connected with it.

Mr. CANNON. And that is true under the general rules of the House and under general parliamentary law.

Mr. HEARD. Then, why put it in this order?

Mr. CANNON. Because we wanted to give you notice and give you a chance to talk.

Mr. HEARD. And the people an opportunity to understand what you propose to do.

Mr. CANNON. We will take the risk about the people.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman from Massachusetts is in error. The bill referred to in the order is the bill 11045.

Mr. LODGE. And that is the substitute bill.

Mr. CRISP. It does not say so in the order.

Mr. LODGE. I know it; but that is the substitute bill proposed by the committee for the bill which was introduced and submitted to them.

Mr. CRISP rose.

Mr. LODGE. Wait a moment. That is the only bill that the committee propose to offer or consider, the one the gentleman now holds in his hand. The clause put in by the committee, "and a substitute therefor," was to give an opportunity to anybody to offer a substitute.

Mr. HEARD. No; the order says "the member in charge of the bill." [To Mr. LODGE.] The privilege is limited to you.

Mr. CANNON. That is just what we intended.

Mr. HEARD. That is what we want the people to understand.

Mr. CANNON. That is just what it means; the member in charge of the bill, under the rules generally and under this order, has the right to offer a substitute.

Mr. HEARD. Then we have a definite understanding, and the people can not be mistaken about it.

Mr. CRISP rose.

Mr. CANNON. I wonder whether all this is coming out of my time.

Mr. CRISP. But the gentleman from Massachusetts was in error. I only wanted to call his attention—

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Massachusetts had three minutes and his time has expired. I now have the floor.

Mr. CRISP. Then, I want the privilege of saying in your time that the gentleman is mistaken in saying that this is the substitute to be offered, because your resolution says that we shall consider House bill 11045, and that then he may offer a substitute for it—he alone may do it.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. Now, I will ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] to occupy the balance of his time.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I wish it distinctly understood that the minority of the Committee on Rules are consenting to not a line or a syllable in this order—not one. What is done is done by the majority of the committee from their own standpoint as to what they are willing to do. Enough has been said to indicate generally the character of this order. A moment ago the question was raised as to what substitute was contemplated by the order, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] announced, as his opinion, that it would be competent for the gentleman in charge of the bill to ask a vote upon a substitute, which this House has never seen or heard of heretofore. I wish to say that that was my understanding in the Committee on Rules. I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has not gainsaid it. I am quite sure that I am not speaking from inference, but from the comments of the majority of that committee, when I say the purpose was that after we had considered this bill, and perhaps amended it in a manner not to suit the majority, they should recover the situation by the right to offer a substitute. That is exactly what this order means. There can be no doubt about that.

The minority members of this committee did not concur in the disposition of the majority in relation to this order, for many reasons. In the first place, the rules of the House prescribe that this class of bills involving appropriations (and I think my friend from Tennessee has not overestimated in supposing that in any given year the expenditures under this measure may be worked up to $10,000,000) should have their first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House. Not only that, but the provisions of this measure, out of which this enormous expenditure is to arise, involve a total revolution of our Government in the matter of conducting elections of Representatives and Delegates to the Congress of the United States. In this matter, from the beginning of the Government until now, following the understanding of the fathers in framing the Constitution, faith has been reposed in the people of the States.

This bill, which we are brought to consider in this way, reverses the whole theory of our institutions. I have not time to state details, but suffice it to say that the measure provides for the superintendence of Congressional elections by supervisors appointed under United States authority, whose conclusions as to the result of an election in any Congressional district are final. The having of State officers or the permission for them to be present in the conduct of elections is coupled with the idea that, no matter what the State officials may do, when the returns of the Federal and the State officers reach here, the Clerk of the House, at the peril of fine and imprisonment, shall put upon the roll the man indicated by the Federal supervisors. Not only these State supervisors, but the chief supervisors are life officers. Most of your circuit judges are of one political faith. Your supervisors and your marshals, amounting in number to multitudes, are of your own selection. There is provision for a house-to-house count in cities of 20,000 population. Prior to an election you have a house-to-house examination, where there is a registry to be had; and the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania who sits before me [Mr. BUCKALEW], an able lawyer, interprets this provision as going to the extent of authorizing a house-to-house canvass by Federal marshals in every precinct. More than that, we are arming the Federal courts, we are arming the marshals of a partisan character, with these powers of organizing and supervising the machinery for conducting the elections.

There is in this bill a provision re-enacting the test oath in the Federal courts. It is a declaration that a large part of the population of the South, the most intelligent, most virtuous, and most eminent, shall be excluded from the Federal jury-box. I have seen its operation in the past, Mr. Speaker, by the standing aside of those summoned when not ten white men were selected in the Federal court juries in the city of Savannah.

More than that, there has been taken from the statute in reference to the enforcement of civil rights a provision of law and made specially applicable to this bill authorizing the sending of troops, not alone into the State of Georgia and other Southern States, but into every State of the Union, to aid Federal supervision in the control and supervision of the polls.

These, sir, are some of the grave matters involved in this proposition. If it shall become a law this year they may not alarm the public by their action in reference to the appointment of supervisors in the Southern States. They may not alarm the people of the North, but the proposition is a declaration against the people of the States in these matters, and the election machinery involves the use not only of United States marshals, but the use of troops in connection with this very election. Sir, if such a grave proposition as this, with a bill containing 76 pages, with 57 sections to it, with 49 sections of the Revised Statutes incorporated in this bill, the meaning and purport of which no man can state or determine upon the face of the bill itself, and with other propositions repealed, and coupling with that the right of the majority side of the House when the debate shall have closed, when the right of amendment shall have been exhausted, that then one of these gentlemen shall come forward—these gentlemen who are recommending this monstrous proposition, this revolutionary proposition here—and bring the House to a vote on an unknown question, to wit, the adoption of a bill more satisfactory to them than this may be made by such amendments as the House may adopt—I say, if such a proposition is to be accepted, it must be in the face of and against the protest of this side. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, this order proposes that for the next six days the House of Representatives shall consider the propriety of passing an amendment to the Federal election law. The bare proposition to consider it sets my friend from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] and my amiable friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] into a very fever of excitement and declamation. This side of the House proposes, if possible, to pass, so far as this House is concerned, a bill under whose provisions everywhere in the United States, when they are called into action, an election may be supervised, so far as members of the House of Representatives are concerned, by United States officials acting under the authority of the Federal Government. That is the size of it. Nothing more nor less.

Many people believe in many places North and in many places South that now and heretofore there has been a necessity for Federal supervision of the election of members of the House of Representatives.

Mr. McMILLIN. What part of the North do you propose to take charge of by this bill?

Mr. CANNON. I will answer the gentleman in a moment.

It was believed years ago, before the gentleman from Tennessee or myself came to this House, that it was necessary, and hence Congress passed a Federal election law, under which, in the city of New York, in the State of New York, and other large cities, we have now, comparatively speaking with the past, fair elections, by which all the people of all political parties in the election of members of the House of Representatives can deposit their ballots and have them honestly counted.

Mr. FLOWER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. CANNON. I will.

Mr. FLOWER. I challenge any Republican on that side of the House from the State of New York to say, after having in the Legislature of New York voted unanimously for the American ballot system, that they are not perfectly satisfied with it and believe that the people of New York are able to regulate their own domestic affairs.

Mr. BELDEN. And I desire to say in response that the Federal election law first made a demand in New York for the State registry law and the good results were worked out under a good registration law adopted by that State.

Mr. CANNON. I believe—

Mr. FLOWER. And I say that every Republican in the State voted for the American system.

Mr. BELDEN. But the good registry system did the work.

Mr. CUMMINGS. And it was passed by a Democratic State Legislature, signed by a Democratic State governor, and was not passed by the Federal Government. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FLOWER. And we are perfectly competent to take charge of our own affairs.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. TRACEY. And the people of New York will solidly oppose any attempt to overthrow their recently adopted election system.

Mr. SPINOLA. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. CANNON. Will all due deference to my friend, I will not yield.

Mr. SPINOLA. Not to your old friend, just for a question or two?

Mr. CANNON. Not to any one.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. SPINOLA. I only want to tell you what we will do in New York, as we did in years gone by: That we will send your hirelings away from the ballot-box and not permit them to go there and control our affairs by any authority you can establish, military authority or otherwise; just as twenty years ago, when you sent them there, they were compelled to withdraw. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will proceed, if gentlemen will cease their interruptions.

Mr. FLOWER. Mr. Speaker, let me say to the gentleman—

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. The gentleman from Illinois will suspend for a moment.

The Chair desires to call the attention of the House to what has just transpired. The gentleman from Illinois had the floor and a dozen men were trying to take it away from him without his consent. The Chair has in vain called for order on the floor.

Now, gentlemen ought not to permit such a scene to take place on the floor of the House of Representatives. It ought not to be done. Gentlemen owe it to themselves not to do it.

Mr. FLOWER. Mr. Speaker, I rose and asked the gentleman from Illinois a question by his permission.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman rose to ask a question, and received the right and did ask it.

Mr. FLOWER. And it has not yet been answered.

The SPEAKER. And if the gentleman is not reflected upon by anything the Chair has said, of course it does not affect him.

Mr. SPINOLA. If it affects me, Mr. Speaker, I am sorry—

The SPEAKER. Well, the Chair had a remote reference to the gentleman from New York when he spoke. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON—

No rogue e'er felt the halter draw
With good opinion of the law.

[Great applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. SPRINGER. If your party pass this bill it will be a halter to you. [Loud applause on the Democratic side and great confusion in the House.]

Mr. SPINOLA and Mr. FLOWER addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has the floor. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has not the floor.

Mr. SPRINGER. It seemed to me that the remark of my colleague from Illinois was unparliamentary.

Mr. CANNON. I will try to be parliamentary and not hurt the feelings of either of the good gentlemen from New York or the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPINOLA. Do not refer to my constituents in the manner you did, then.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, your constituents in many places, in New York and in many other cities throughout the North, have been aided and protected in selecting members of Congress by the Federal election law that has been upon the statute-book for over twenty years.

Mr. HEARD. And by John Davenport.

Mr. CANNON. A law which has been sustained by the courts and which was enacted under the Constitution, that I believe Washington had some hand in making.

Mr. SPINOLA. Do not pollute his name by connecting it with this bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will my friend permit me to ask him again what part of New York does he propose controlling by this law? That is what I want to know.

Mr. SPINOLA. He said New York City.

Mr. CANNON. Wherever the number of people referred to in this bill, North or South, East or West, believe or have cause to believe that it is necessary that the Federal Government under the general law should have an eye to see that the election of members of this House is fair and the ballots are cast and counted fairly, there it will go into force; and the arm of the Federal Government will be strong enough to count the vote of the strongest and wealthiest man, North or South, or the weakest and poorest man that is entitled to protection under the law. [Applause on the Republican side and in the galleries.]

Mr. McMILLIN. If my friend will not consider me captious, for I do not wish to be, I wish to say to him that he is proposing a revolutionary method of conducting elections, and I want to know what part of the North in its present status demands this kind of legislation. I do not want generalities, I want you to designate something specific.

Mr. CANNON. We are enacting a law here amending a general law that has been upon the statute-book for twenty years. In addition to enforcing that law we propose to enact this one. Now, if in the State of Tennessee or Illinois, in the State of New York or of South Carolina, people hold their elections for members of this House fairly and count their ballots honestly, and do not ask this law to go into force, it will not go into force in their respective districts.

Mr. BLAND. Do you need it in Illinois?

Mr. CANNON. If we need it in Illinois or any district of Illinois we will petition for it, and Illinois will say amen.

Mr. BLAND. Do you need it now?

Mr. FLOWER. Your party seem to think they need it.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, there are men who have perpetrated frauds on the ballot-box in Illinois, especially in Chicago. Some of these men were sent to the penitentiary and some of them ought to go there. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BLAND. Why do not you send them there if they ought to go there? Are you unable to take care of your own elections? Do you want the Federal Government to take care of them for you?

Mr. CANNON. Every time that one of them has gone it has reduced the Democratic majority. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAND. I suppose the object of this bill is to cut down the Democratic majority.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to discuss this bill under this order. Six days are given for that, and if it be enacted into law, as it seems to me would be apt and proper, no man of the sixty-five millions from one ocean to the other, or from the north to the south in this country, need have any fear, if he obeys the law and supports the Constitution of the United States. [Applause on the Republican side and in the gallery.] If he does otherwise, then he may fear, because the arm of the Federal Government is long enough and strong enough, under the Constitution made by the fathers, to protect itself and to protect its citizens in the election of members of this House. [Renewed applause on the Republican side.]

A MEMBER. And without this law.

Mr. TURNER, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I think this House has endured the applause of the colored delegation in the gallery brought out by the gymnastics of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] quite long enough.

Mr. CANNON. It is a source of great grief to me if I have failed to meet the approval of the immaculate gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'NEALL, of Indiana. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

I want to know if there is any provision in this bill to prevent the purchasing of votes in the Fifteenth Illinois district?

Mr. CANNON. I did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. O'NEALL, of Indiana. What provision is there in this bill to prevent the repetition in the Fifteenth Illinois district of what is alleged to have taken place there every year for a number of elections?

Mr. CANNON. What is that?

Mr. O'NEALL, of Indiana. The buying of votes.

Mr. CANNON. I do not think the Democrats have bought many votes. I know, or think I know, that the Republicans did not buy any [cries of "Oh!" on the Democratic side]; and, if they bought any or tried to buy any, I suppose it was not necessary to buy a Republican. Do you want some of your people bought? [Laughter on Republican side.]

Mr. O'NEALL, of Indiana. The gentleman will do well to answer my question as to whether the same practices are to be conducted in the Fifteenth district of Illinois in future elections under this bill that have been practiced in that district in past elections, and I want him to answer me directly, and not by dodging in Yankee style by asking some other question.

Mr. CANNON. In my judgment the same practices will obtain in the Fifteenth Illinois district that have always obtained. Under the State law we have been enabled in that agricultural district to hold fair elections and to count the vote of each man who voted according to his preference. I further state, to the credit of the Democrats as well as the Republicans in that district and in that section, that has been true, and I believe will be true in the future. If this law passes, however, and the requisite number of citizens under its provisions from that district ask for the intervention of the Federal law, it will intervene, and there is no Republican that will say "nay." People who do not want to cheat at elections do not object to an electric light being turned on.

Now, one further remark. Do you stand there in your place and by your accusations say or intimate that in my district there has been bribery or corruption at any time?

Mr. O'NEALL, of Indiana. I say this: If there has not been bribery and corruption and if the gentleman who is now upon this floor has not been engaged in it, then that Congressional district and the gentleman now talking have been very badly slandered. [Applause on the Democratic side and cries of "Oh!" "Oh!" on the Republican side.]

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, in reply. There is no responsible Democrat in the Fifteenth Illinois district that would dare now or who has ever dared to make that accusation. The gentleman himself, coming as he does from the State of Indiana, the Vincennes district, so long and so worthily represented by that learned gentleman and Democrat, Judge Niblack, and afterwards by that honorable Democrat, Mr. Cobb, when he rises in his place, the successor of these honorable men and seeks to bring into this House and retail here an accusation that some one without character has made, demonstrates in the presence of the House and the country that he is a gentleman so careless in his accusations and insinuations that whatever may fall from his tongue is powerless slander that injures no one, unless it be himself. [Great applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to lay this resolution on the table.

Mr. O'NEALL, of Indiana. There has been so much disorder that my question has not been understood. I desire to repeat it again—[Cries of "Sit down!" "Sit down!"]—as to what provision is made in this bill about buying votes. [Renewed cries of "Sit down!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the resolution be laid on the table.

The question was put; and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 116, noes 133.

So the motion to lay on the table was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the adoption of the substitute.

Mr. BLOUNT. On that I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 136, nays 127, not voting 64; as follows:

YEAS—136.

Adams,	Culbertson, Pa.	La Follette,	Sanford,
Allen, Mich.	Cutcheon,	Lansing,	Sawyer,
Anderson, Kans.	Darlington,	Leibach,	Seranton,
Arnold,	De Lano,	Lind,	Seull,
Atkinson, Pa.	Dingley,	Lodge,	Sherman,
Baker,	Dolliver,	Mason,	Simonds,
Banks,	Dorsey,	McComas,	Smith, Ill.
Bartine,	Dunnell,	McCook,	Smith, W. Va.
Bayne,	Evans,	McDuffie,	Smyser,
Beckwith,	Farquhar,	McKenna,	Snider,
Beiden,	Featherston,	McKinley,	Spooner,
Belknap,	Finley,	Miles,	Stephenson,
Bergen,	Flick,	Milliken,	Stivers,
Bingham,	Flood,	Moitt,	Stockbridge,
Bills,	Frank,	Moore, N. H.	Sweeney,
Boothman,	Funkston,	Moroy,	Taylor, R. B.
Boutelle,	Gear,	Morrill,	Taylor, Ill.
Bowden,	Gifford,	Morse,	Taylor, Tenn.
Brewer,	Greenhalgo,	Mudd,	Thomas,
Brosius,	Hall,	Niedringhaus,	Townsend, Colo.
Brower,	Hansbrough,	O'Donnell,	Townsend, Pa.
Burrows,	Haugen,	O'Neill, Pa.	Turner, Kans.
Burton,	Henderson, Ill.	Payne,	Vandever,
Butterworth,	Henderson, Iowa	Payson,	Van Schaick,
Caldwell,	Hermann,	Perkins,	Waddill,
Candler, Mass.	Hill,	Peters,	Wade,
Cannon,	Hitt,	Post,	Wallace, Mass.
Carter,	Hopkins,	Pugsley,	Wallace, N. Y.
Cheadle,	Kennedy,	Quackenbush,	Watson,
Cheatham,	Kerr, Iowa	Raines,	Williams, Ohio
Cogswell,	Ketcham,	Reed, Iowa	Wilson, Ky.
Comstock,	Kinsey,	Reybura,	Wilson, Wash.
Conger,	Knapp,	Rowell,	Wright,
Craig,	Lacey,	Russell,	Yardley.

NAYS—127.

Abbott,	Cooper, Ind.	Kerr, Pa.	Reilly,
Alderson,	Cothran,	Kilgore,	Richardson,
Anderson, Miss.	Covert,	Lane,	Robertson,
Andrew,	Cowles,	Lanham,	Rowland,
Bankhead,	Crain,	Lester, Ga.	Sayers,
Barnes,	Crisp,	Lester, Va.	Shively,
Blanchard,	Culbertson, Tex.	Lewis,	Skinner,
Bland,	Cummings,	Magner,	Spinola,
Blount,	Davidson,	Malsh,	Springer,
Bostner,	Dibble,	Mansur,	Stewart, Ga.
Breckinridge, Ark.	Dockery,	Martin, Ind.	Stockdale,
Breckinridge, Ky.	Dunphy,	McAdoo,	Stone, Ky.
Brickner,	Edmunds,	McClammy,	Stone, Mo.
Brookshire,	Elliot,	McClellan,	Stump,
Brown, J. B.	Ellis,	McCreary,	Tarsney,
Brunner,	Enloe,	McMillin,	Tracy,
Buchanan, Va.	Fithian,	McRae,	Tucker,
Buckalew,	Flower,	Mills,	Turner, Ga.
Bullock,	Forman,	Montgomery,	Turner, N. Y.
Bunn,	Forney,	Moore, Tex.	Vaux,
Bynum,	Fowler,	Mutcher,	Venable,
Campbell,	Geisenhainser,	Norton,	Wheeler, Ala.
Candler, Ga.	Gibson,	O'Ferrall,	Whiting,
Carlton,	Goodnight,	O'Neill, Ind.	Whithorne,
Caruth,	Grimes,	O'Neil, Mass.	Wiley,
Catchings,	Hare,	Owens, Ohio	Wilkinson,
Chipman,	Hatch,	Parrott,	Willcox,
Claney,	Heard,	Paynter,	Williams, Ill.
Clarke, Ala.	Hempbill,	Peel,	Wilson, Mo.
Clements,	Henderson, N. C.	Pennington,	Wilson, W. Va.
Cobb,	Herbert,	Pierce,	Yoder.
Coleman,	Holman,	Quinn,

NOT VOTING—64.

Allen, Miss.	Pitch,	McCormick,	Rogers,
Atkinson, W. Va.	Gest,	Morgan,	Rusk,
Barwig,	Grosvenor,	Morrow,	Seney,
Diggs,	Groat,	Nute,	Stahnecker,
Browne, T. M.	Harmer,	Oates,	Stewart, Tex.
Browne, Va.	Hayes,	Osborne,	Stewart, Vi.
Buchanan, N. J.	Hooker,	Outhwaite,	Struble,
Cawell,	Houk,	Owen, Ind.	Taylor, J. D.
Clark, Wis.	Kelley,	Perry,	Thompson,
Clunie,	Laidlaw,	Phelan,	Tillman,
Connell,	Lawler,	Pickler,	Walker, Mass.
Cooper, Ohio	Laws,	Price,	Walker, Mo.
Dalzell,	Lee,	Randall,	Washington,
Dargan,	Martin, Tex.	Ray,	Wheeler, Mich.
De Haven,	McCarthy,	Rife,	Wickham,
Ewart,		Rockwell,	Wike,

So the resolution was adopted.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. BROWNE, of Virginia, with Mr. LEE, until Friday next.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont, with Mr. OATES, for the rest of this day.

Mr. HARMER with Mr. TILLMAN, for the rest of this day.

Mr. GEST with Mr. STEWART, of Texas, for the rest of this day.

Mr. HOUK with Mr. WASHINGTON, for the rest of this day.

Mr. GROSVENOR with Mr. DARGAN, for the rest of this day.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I was in my seat and my attention was attracted to something else when my name was called, but after my name, and probably some other name had been called, I said "no," but I do not think my name was taken down. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman respond to his name when it was called?

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. No, sir. Some person sitting beside me called my attention to the fact that my name had been called, but by that time the name of some one else had been called.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman hardly brings his case within the rule.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's vote may be recorded.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to entertain the request. This rule is a matter of extreme embarrassment to the Chair, but the Chair has endeavored to enforce it in accordance with its literal signification.

On motion of Mr. MCCOMAS, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names of members voting was dispensed with.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. CANNON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, it was agreed, as I understand, in the Committee on Rules, although it was omitted from the order, that during the consideration of this bill the House should meet at 11 o'clock a. m. I ask unanimous consent that that order be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ERIE AND OSWEGO CANALS.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a short memorial on commercial water ways by an ex-member of the House.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The memorial is as follows:

ENLARGEMENT OF THE ERIE AND OSWEGO CANALS.

Whereas experience in all countries is condemning the neglect, during late years, of the water channels of commerce, and demonstrating afresh the importance of their improvement and development as a means of securing effective competition and cheapness in transportation; and

Whereas the wonderful system of water communication which nature has stretched across half the American continent in the chain of the Great Lakes, and which will be for all time the most important of the highways of American commerce, is perfected for usefulness within the United States by the connecting canals which the State of New York has constructed from Lake Erie and Lake Ontario to the Hudson River; and

Whereas the vast commercial interchange for which these channels are employed between the Northwestern interior of the country and its seaboard is continental and national in range and character and only in a small degree local or limited in interest to the State of New York; and

Whereas it has become a part of the settled and unquestioned national policy of the United States to include among the functions and duties of the General Government the development and improvement of the commercial water ways of the country wherever they lie in the track of a commerce that is large and general instead of being limited and local; and

Whereas it was only the tardiness of the Federal Government in the acceptance of this function which impelled the State of New York to construct the Erie and Oswego Canals, after vain endeavors on the part of Clinton, Morris, and Fulton to procure action toward the same end from the Congress of the United States; and

Whereas an enlargement of the said Erie and Oswego Canals to a capacity for their navigation by boats of not less than 600 tons burden is now demanded imperatively in the interest of the commerce of the West and Northwest, and especially as a means of cheapening the transportation of breadstuffs to the seaboard and all the Atlantic States: Therefore

Resolved (if the Senate concur), That the President be authorized to appoint a commission of three persons, of whom one shall be an officer in the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, to confer with any commission or other representative or representatives who may be appointed on behalf of the State of New York upon the subject of an enlargement of the Erie and Oswego Canals, to consider and report:

First. Whether the transportation of the chief products of the country that are exchanged between its Western regions and the Atlantic seaboard would be importantly cheapened by an enlargement of the said canals.

Second. Whether it is expedient and desirable that the Government of the United States should co-operate with the government of the State of New York in effecting the enlargement in question, and whether the State of New York, which is the owner of the canals referred to, would assent to such co-operation.

Third. How extensive an undertaking of enlargement and improvement, if any, is to be recommended in the interest of the commerce of the country, and what would be its probable cost.

Resolved, That the commissioners who may be appointed in accordance with the foregoing resolution shall be required to serve as such without compensation; but the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to pay whatever expenses may properly be incurred by them in the performance of their duty.

DAVID S. BENNETT, Buffalo, N. Y.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

COMMITTEES OF CONFERENCE.

Pending the motion to adjourn, the Speaker announced the appointment of the following committees of conference:

On the bill (H. R. 4570) to authorize the Leavenworth and Platt County Bridge Company to substitute a pivot draw-bridge over the Missouri River in place of a ponton bridge—Messrs. BAKER, ANDERSON of Kansas, and DAVIDSON.

On the bill H. R. 9603, the diplomatic and consular bill—Messrs. HITT, DUNNELL, and MCCREARY.

On the bill (H. R. 7263) to increase the pension of Henry L. Potter—Messrs. MOREHILL, BELKNAP, and TURNER of New York.

The motion of Mr. LODGE was then agreed to; and the House accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) adjourned until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following communication was taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

LINEAL PROMOTION IN THE LINE OF THE ARMY.

Communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from Second Lieut. Edwin A. Root on the subject of lineal promotion in the line of the Army, as proposed by House bill 8202 and Senate bill 3716 of the present Congress, which letter is indorsed by the major-general commanding, and also by the Secretary of War—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A bill (S. 2786) for the donation of Fort Brooke military reservation at Tampa, Fla., for free schools and other purposes—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HOUSE BILLS WITH SENATE AMENDMENTS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a House bill of the following title, with Senate amendments, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9856) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk and disposed of as follows:

Mr. DINGLEY, from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, reported favorably the bill of the House (H. R. 10436) in regard to collisions at sea, accompanied by a report (No. 2550)—to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, reported with amendment the bill of the House (H. R. 10438) to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea, accompanied by a report (No. 2551)—to the House Calendar.

Mr. CARLTON, from the Committee on Claims, reported favorably the bill of the Senate (S. 2700) for the relief of the legal representatives of Albert Blaisdell, deceased, accompanied by a report (No. 2552)—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported with amendment the bill of the House (H. R. 7430) to reimburse the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada for moneys by them expended in the suppression of the rebellion, accompanied by a report (No. 2553)—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills and a petition of the House:

A bill (H. R. 6190) for the relief of C. Augusta Urquhart;

A bill (H. R. 6191) for the relief of Cora A. Di Brazza;

A bill (H. R. 11054) for the relief of the heirs of Wesley Hartlove; and

A petition of Mrs. C. Augusta Urquhart; reported in lieu thereof the following resolution:

Resolved, That the following bills, Nos. 6190, 6191, and 11054, for the relief of C. Augusta Urquhart, Cora A. Di Brazza, and heirs of Wesley Hartlove, with accompanying papers, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, under the provisions of the act of Congress commonly known as the "Bowman act" and an act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States, approved March 3, 1887; which, with the accompanying report (No. 2554), was referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. DE LANO, from the Committee on Pensions, reported favorably the bill of the House (H. R. 5969) granting an increase of pension to James M. Mullin, accompanied by a report (No. 2555)—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. RUSSELL, from the Committee on Printing, reported with amendment the bill of the House (H. R. 594) for the release of the first five volumes of the Records of the War of the Rebellion, accompanied by a report (No. 2556)—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GIFFORD, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported with amendment the following bills of the Senate; which were severally referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union:

A bill (S. 1572) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Fargo, in the State of North Dakota. (Report No. 2557.)

A bill (S. 1571) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Grand Forks, N. Dak. (Report No. 2558.)

Mr. QUACKENBUSH, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported with amendment the bill of the Senate (S. 222) providing for the erection of a public building at the city of Norfolk, Nebr., accompanied by a report (No. 2559)—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, a bill and a joint resolution of the following titles were introduced, severally read twice, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GROUT: A bill (H. R. 11134) to constitute Beecher's Falls, Vt., a port of entry, and to extend the provisions of the act of June 10, 1890, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," to the said Beecher's Falls—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. FLOWER: A joint resolution (H. Res. 182) to permit the Secretary of the Treasury to sign for cable railway in front of the New York post-office and army building—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the following changes of reference were made:

A bill (S. 395) for the relief of Sarah K. McLean, widow of the late Lieut. Col. Nathaniel H. McLean—Committee on Military Affairs discharged, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

A bill (H. R. 9882) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Michael Baker—Committee on Military Affairs discharged, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (H. R. 5969) granting an increase of pension to James M. Mullin—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to Committee on Pensions.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. BLISS: A bill (H. R. 11135) granting a pension to Joseph Elder—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11136) increasing the pension of Olive C. Morton, a Revolutionary pensioner—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. COOPER, of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 11137) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Charles Reep—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GOODNIGHT: A bill (H. R. 11138) for the relief of D. E. Downing—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GREENHALGE: A bill (H. R. 11139) for the relief of Samuel Bryan, Felton, Parker, and other graduates of the Naval Academy, who, having completed their four-year course at the Naval Academy prior to August 5, 1892, were discharged from the service under the act of August 5, 1892—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. HITT: A bill (H. R. 11140) granting a pension to Margaret A. Deming—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MCADOO: A bill (H. R. 11141) for the relief of Charles W. Cronk—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MOREY: A bill (H. R. 11142) for the relief of Elijah Abbott—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11143) for the relief of Samuel Carter—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11144) for the relief of Peter Ehrstine—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11145) for the relief of Henry Holderman—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11146) for the relief of Rally Moore—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PEEL: A bill (H. R. 11147) for the relief of John H. Curtis and Thomas Austin, partners, doing business under the firm name of Curtis & Austin, or the proper representative of said firm—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. QUINN: A bill (H. R. 11148) for the relief of Peter Duffy—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RUSSELL: A bill (H. R. 11149) granting a pension to Catherine Miller—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11150) granting a pension to Hannah Mitchell—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11151) granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Murray—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SCULL: A bill (H. R. 11152) for the relief of George Rushburger—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SHERMAN: A bill (H. R. 11153) to relieve James Larkin of the charge of desertion—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas: Petition of John Hasselman, H. W. Stienfort, and 67 others, citizens of Dickinson County, Kansas, asking Congress for an appropriation of money for a complete system of levees on the Mississippi River from Cairo to the Gulf, to prevent disastrous floods and improve navigation—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, resolutions of the temperance mass meeting held at Clay Center, Kans., June 6, 1890, petitioning the House of Representatives to pass the Senate bill known as the Wilson bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of 28 postal clerks, for an increase of salaries—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BINGHAM: Petition of Ellen Downs, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BLISS: Petition of Olive C. Morton, for an increase of pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BLOUNT: Petition of J. R. Compton, William Malone, and 27 others, citizens of Jasper County, Georgia, asking Congress for appropriation of money for complete system of levees on the Mississippi River from Cairo to the Gulf, to prevent disastrous floods and improve navigation—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. BULLOCK: Petition of H. R. McDollough and 6 others, of Madison County, Florida, for passage of House bill 7162—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of John W. Carver and 14 others, of Suwannee County, Florida, for same measure—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BUTTERWORTH: Petition of Lizzie W. Carew, with argument attached—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. CANDLER, of Georgia: Petition of B. J. Hood, M. A. Souther, and 55 others, citizens of Union, Washington, and Banks Counties, Georgia, asking Congress for an appropriation of money for a complete system of levees on the Mississippi River from Cairo to the Gulf, to prevent disastrous floods and to improve navigation—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of William Wilson, J. H. Smithwick, and 19 others, citizens of Cherokee County, Georgia, for same measure—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of Blue Creek Alliance, White County, Georgia, for appropriation to improve Galveston Harbor—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of 26 citizens of Cherokee County, Georgia, for same improvement—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of J. A. Sailors and 34 others, of Jackson County, Georgia, asking passage of House bill 7162—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. EDMUNDS: Petition of certain voters of Halifax County, Virginia, for a deep harbor at Galveston, Tex.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa: Paper from D. G. Ley, secretary of Farmers' Alliance, Woolstock, Wright County, Iowa, urging the passage of the Butterworth bill against gambling in farm produce, and the Conger land bill—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolution by Dayton Centre Alliance, No. 1128, of Butler County, Iowa, in favor of same measure—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolution of the Farmers' Alliance of Woolstock Township, Wright County, Iowa, in favor of same measure—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. LANE: Petition of citizens of the Seventeenth Congressional district of Illinois, against the transmission of obscene literature through the United States mails—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition from other citizens of the same district for same purpose—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of citizens of Altamont, Ill., for same purpose—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of other citizens of Illinois, for same purpose—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. McCLAMMY: Petition of D. S. Williams and 22 others, asking for a first-class harbor on Gulf coast—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. McKINLEY: Petition of American Company of Operative Association of Potters, of East Liverpool, Ohio, against any reduction of duty on pottery—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MOREY: Petition for the relief of Rolly Moore—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, claim for horses used by the United States Government without payment for the same, of Samuel Carter, of Williamsburgh, Clermont County, Ohio—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of Elijah Abbott, West Chester, for repayment of $400 improperly demanded of him for a substitute in the United States Army—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of Peter Ehrstine, late of Company I, Sixty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, war of the rebellion, for removal of charge of desertion from his military record—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of W. L. Crane, for removal of charge of desertion—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania: Memorial of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, for legislation to prevent overflow of the Mississippi River—to the Committee on Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River.

Also, memorial from the same association for an appropriation for an additional building for the National Museum—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. PAYSON: Petition of H. Miller and 38 others, of Iroquois County, Illinois, asking passage of House bill 7162—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. PEEL: Petition of Flavius J. Lindsey, administrator of the estate of John N. Curtis, deceased, praying that the claim of Curtis & Austin for property taken by the Army during the late war be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PENINGTON: Resolutions of the Farmers' Institute of Kent County, Delaware, in favor of the free coinage of silver—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. PERKINS: Petition of William Coventry and 48 other residents of Longton, Kans., asking for legislation to counteract the effect of the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court regarding the sale and importation of intoxicating beverages—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of S. E. Beach, G. P. Payton, and 39 others, citizens of Neosho County, Kansas, asking Congress for appropriation of money for complete system of levees on Mississippi River from Cairo to the Gulf, to prevent disastrous floods and improve navigation—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of A. J. Bennett, W. A. Tyler, and 16 others, citizens of Sedgwick County, Kansas, for same purpose—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of J. W. Hague and 181 other residents of Parsons, Kans., asking for legislation that will give to States the right to restrain and control the importation and sale of intoxicating liquors—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PIERCE: Petition of L. A. Rozell, Eugene Crawford, and 38 others, citizens of Lauderdale County, Tennessee, asking Congress for an appropriation of money for complete system of levees on the Mississippi River from Cairo to the Gulf, to prevent disastrous floods and improve navigation—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of John Conner, W. H. Jackson, and 38 others, citizens of same county, for same purpose—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. RUSSELL: Petition of Hannah Holmes Mitchell, for pension—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, petition of Catherine Hess Miller, for pension—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, petition of Elizabeth A. Murray, for pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STIVERS: Petition of James H. Hawxhurst and 29 others, of New York, for the passage of the bill prohibiting the transportation of alcoholic liquors, etc.—to the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. TOWNSEND, of Colorado: Resolutions of Hope Alliance, No. 21, of Montezuma County, Colorado, in favor of House bill 5353—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolutions of the same Alliance, in favor of House bill 283—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio: Petition of J. W. Campbell and 66 others, citizens of Troy, Ohio, for the passage of laws for the perpetuation of the national-banking system, under which the interest of depositors is protected by Government supervision—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. YARDLEY: Petition of citizens of Bucks and Montgomery Counties, Pennsylvania, for the passage of the act entitled "An act prohibiting the transportation of intoxicating liquors from one State or Territory of the United States to any other State or Territory"—to the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

Also, petition of other citizens of the same counties, for same legislation—to the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

Also, petition of other citizens of the same counties, for same legislation—to the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

Also, petition of other citizens of the same counties, for same legislation—to the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 26, 1890.

Prayer by Rev. W. E. PARSONS, of the city of Washington.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. TURPIE presented a petition of the National Furniture Company, composed of firms of Indianapolis, Cincinnati, and Chicago, praying for the admission free of duty of imported woods and other material entering into the manufacture of furniture; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PADDOCK presented a petition of the National Furniture Manufacturers' Association, praying that mahogany lumber, German looking-glass plates, chair cane, and burlaps may be placed on the free-list; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Board of Trade, of Savannah, Ga., remonstrating against the duty on tobacco wrappers as proposed in the McKinley tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TELLER presented the petition of Hope Farmers' Alliance, No. 21, of Montezuma County, Colorado, praying for the passage of the Conger land bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. BLAIR presented resolutions of the New England Normal Council of Education, affirming their belief in the necessity and the principle of national aid to public education; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions of the board of managers of the National Temperance Society, praying for the prompt passage of the bill to prohibit the exportation of intoxicating liquors to Africa and the Western States; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PAYNE presented a petition of the Methodist Episcopal Church (112 members) of Dorset, Ohio; a petition of the pastor, officers, and leading members of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Powell, Ohio; a petition of the Church of Christ, the Congregational and Methodist Episcopal Churches, and the Independent Order of Good Templars, of North Fairfield, Ohio, praying legislation to prevent the transportation through the mails of the Police Gazette and other immoral publications; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. DOLPH. I present a memorial of the Maritime Association of the port of New York, praying for the passage of Senate bills 3917 and 3918. These are the bills that were passed the day before yesterday to adopt regulations for sea-going vessels; I ask that they may lie upon the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BATE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Francis S. Hagadorn, praying to be allowed compensation for an improvement in the construction of ammunition chests and the packing of ammunition therein for the use of light batteries in the artillery service of the United States, asked that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the petition, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1020) to authorize the President to restore Edwin R. Parks to his former rank in the Army and place him on the retired list, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3678) to grant an honorable discharge to N. Parker Doe, and for other purposes, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WALTHALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7756) making an appropriation to construct a road and approaches from the town of Culpeper, Va., to the national cemetery near that place, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 526) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to procure and submit to Congress a proposal for the sale to the United States of the western part of the Crow Indian reservation in Montana, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred an amendment submitted by Mr. PLATT, June 24, intended to be proposed to the Indian appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that the amendment be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported an amendment, in the nature of a substitute, for the bill (S. 3863) to extend the time for the construction of its road by the Newport and Kings Valley Railroad Company through the Siletz Indian reservation, now on the Calendar; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4096) for the relief of William W. Burns, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 373) for the relief of Claude H. Mastin, surviving partner of the firm of Le Vert & Mastin, of Mobile, Ala., reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

J. B. BERNADOU.

Mr. PAYNE. From the Committee on Foreign Relations I report favorably, with an amendment, the joint resolution (H. Res. 166) authorizing Ensign J. B. Bernardou, United States Navy, to accept two vases presented to him by the Government of Japan. I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution. The amendment is merely to strike out a letter in the name.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have it read for information.

Mr. PAYNE. A similar joint resolution has passed the Senate once and this is a House joint resolution in the same words precisely, except one letter in the name.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think I remember that it appeared in the Committee on Foreign Relations that this is in recognition of an act of gallantry and at personal hazard, and that being the state of the case I do not oppose the measure. I am opposed in general to all foreign decorations of anybody except in cases where there is a special personal risk or gallantry or charity or something other than the ordinary run of these things. Although we ought to go on with the regular business, I will not object to this particular measure, but from this time forth to-day I shall ask for the regular order so as to get on with the business we have in hand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. PAYNE. I ought to state in a single word that the report of the committee of the other House shows this to be one of those extraordinary cases that I know the Senator from Vermont would approve.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 3 strike out "Bernardou" and insert "Bernadou."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read, "A joint resolution authorizing Ensign J. B. Bernadou, United States Navy, to accept two vases presented to him by the Government of Japan."

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 4162) for the relief of Henry H. Wheeler, of Crook County, Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Select Committee on Indian Depredations.

Mr. HISCOCK introduced a bill (S. 4163) for the erection of a public building at Hudson, N. Y.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. CARLISLE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying letter from the Secretary of War recommending an appropriation for the enlargement of the military post at Newport, Ky., referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COKE presented an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I ask the consent of the Senate that I may have leave of absence for a week. I am compelled by my business to go to Florida, and I desire leave of absence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPOONER in the chair). The Chair hears no objection, and leave is granted.

REVISION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is a bill reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations affecting our treaty of commerce and navigation with Sweden and Norway, which I think will take but a moment, and it ought to pass.

Mr. PLATT. Is the morning business closed?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there are no concurrent or other resolutions, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. INGALLS was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be directed to inquire into the publication of the personal explanation of Hon. WILKINSON CALL in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of this date, and report whether the same is in accordance with the rules, regulations, and practice of the Senate; and that the said explanation be withheld from the permanent edition of the RECORD until the further orders of the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator who offered the resolution is not here, and I suggest that it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made—

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not open to objection. Let it go over without prejudice, to come up to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over without prejudice.

HISTORY OF BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. CALL; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is, directed to prepare an official statement from the Senate document, "A history of bills and resolutions of the Senate," of the number of bills introduced by each Senator, and the number which passed the Senate, and the number which became laws.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator to withdraw that motion for a moment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will withdraw it if my friend does not wish to take more than five minutes; but it appears to me, if he will allow me to say so, withdrawing the motion, that it is a resolution which ought not to be adopted. It is an entirely new idea, and to save time, which in this hot weather is of some value, I propose to make this motion. But I withdraw it for five minutes to give the Senator an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. PADDOCK. Why not let it go over until to-morrow?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, let us finish it now.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I only wish to say that I have not the slightest desire to have the resolution passed, and I am perfectly willing for the Senate to make any disposition it pleases of it.

Yesterday, as the Senate is aware, I was arraigned here before the Senate in a very improper manner upon a personal explanation which I had printed by leave of the Senate, and which was inserted in the RECORD under the direction of a majority of the Committee on Printing. That statement contained a table with a statement of the number of bills which had been introduced by each Senator and the number which had become laws. That statement had been very carefully prepared by a gentleman to whom I referred it from a public document, the history of bills introduced in the Senate. I considered it to be a correct statement. I have found upon inquiry last night and examination carefully of a new table which I had prepared that it is substantially correct. With the exception of one or two bills omitted here and there it is substantially a correct table.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], for whom I have very great respect, mentioned yesterday his own case. I find upon examination that the number of bills credited to him in that statement as having passed the Senate is the number contained in this public document, the history of legislative bills. I have carried it that far.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me I will say that I think I am credited with one bill.

Mr. CALL. Nine bills was the number in the statement. The Senator read it wrong.

Mr. TELLER. Then it is different in the copy which the Senator has from that which I had yesterday. I was credited with only one.

Mr. CALL. The Senator will find in the RECORD here that he is credited with nine bills.

My statement was simply designed to vindicate the Senate and Senators from any judgment of that kind which could be passed upon a public record which they had made, and I asked to have ordered published simply the bills introduced and the number which had become laws. My only desire in this matter was to vindicate my own accuracy and my own statement of this matter as substantially correct. That is all I desired.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, it is of course perfectly clear to everybody, not only Senators, but all the people of the United States, that the true measure of the value of the public service of a Senator is the number of bills that he has introduced. I find that I am of not much use, and, so being, I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont to lay the resolution on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

ADMISSION OF WYOMING.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? If not, that order is closed.

Mr. PLATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 982) to provide for the admission of the State of Wyoming into the Union, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] yesterday seemed to derive a great deal of satisfaction from some imagined difference that he had found between the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and myself as to the political necessity for admitting this Territory to be a State. There was nothing in that difference, but I shall perhaps gratify the Senator from Connecticut very much this morning by saying that there is a marked difference, a very decided difference between the opinions as expressed by the Senator from Missouri yesterday and myself on the general question as to whether the Territory of Wyoming should now be admitted as a State or not.

That Senator expresses an unwillingness that Wyoming should now be admitted into the Union, and I am very decidedly in favor of Wyoming being made a State. I believe that it is not right for this Government to keep Territories in the condition of Territories when they have a sufficient number of population and a sufficient amount of wealth to justify a State organization and to support a State government. I should be in favor of the admission of every Territory of the Union where there is a sufficient number of people and a sufficient amount of wealth in the possession of the inhabitants of the country to sustain State government. I am in favor now of such steps being taken by the United States Congress as will result in the division of the land of the five civilized tribes in what is called the Indian Territory and of opening so much of the land as is not occupied by the Indians to settlement by the white people, and of enabling the people of that country to organize themselves into one or two States and to be admitted as early as possible into the Union.

I would be in favor of the admission of Utah but for the danger that would be incurred in giving increased powers to the people of that Territory by making them citizens of a State. But in the Territories where there is no such objection as there is to Utah I am in favor of the admission of all.

I believe that there are enough people now in Wyoming, in Idaho, in New Mexico, and in Arizona to justify the admission of these four Territories as States, and I believe that the increase in population after their admission would be such as soon to give them all that any one could ask as being necessary to make a State.

So the Senator from Connecticut will find that there is a marked difference between the Senator from Missouri and me upon this question. But I am unwilling to see the Territory of Wyoming admitted in the way that is now proposed by the majority of this body to admit that State, and I propose to present some of the reasons why, in my opinion, this would be exceedingly unwise.

In the memorial presented by the delegates to the convention, asking admission as a State, a very remarkable statement appears, as follows. After reciting some of the preliminary steps that have been taken, they say:

Whereupon the governor of the Territory, "recognizing the superior and material advantages of a State government over our Territorial system, and being desirous of carrying into effect the will of the people," issued his proclamation, recommending the necessary action, and directing that an election be held throughout the Territory on the second Monday of July, 1889.

The people of Wyoming presented a bill proposing to enable them to be admitted into the Union—an enabling act. It had been acted upon by a committee of this body, but the Senate itself had not taken any steps upon it, the House of Representatives had taken no action; and without any enabling act on the part of Congress, without any action of the Legislature of Wyoming, "the governor," as these accredited delegates from that Territory tell us, "recognizing the superior and material advantages of a State government," proposed to proceed at once to have Wyoming admitted into the Union.

I submit, Mr. President, that no such unauthorized action has ever been instituted in the history of any State as simply following out the ipse dixit of the governor of the Territory to take steps for the formation of a constitution, and the demand of admission without any authority from Congress or the Territorial Legislature. The Committee on Territories in reporting the manner in which this Territory proposes admission uses the following language:

At the last session of Congress your committee reported favorably a bill authorizing the people of Wyoming Territory to hold a convention to frame a constitution, and to submit the same to the people of the Territory for adoption or rejection, preparatory to admission as a State. This bill having failed to receive consideration in the Senate, a majority of the boards of county commissioners in Wyoming petitioned the governor of the Territory to issue a proclamation for a constitutional convention such as was contemplated by the bill.

An apportionment of the Territory into districts was thereupon made in the same manner as was provided in the bill by the governor, chief justice, and secretary of the Territory.

A proclamation was issued by the governor, calling a constitutional convention for the purpose of framing a constitution and forming a State government preparatory to admission. In his proclamation the governor substantially adopted the provisions of the Senate bill.

The election of delegates was held on the second Monday of July, 1889, and the convention assembled on the first Monday of September, 1889, at Cheyenne, the capital of the Territory. The convention adjourned on the 30th day of September, 1889, having framed a constitution, a copy of which is hereto annexed. (Appendix A.)

The constitution was submitted to a vote of the people of the Territory of Wyoming, at a special election held in pursuance of a proclamation of the governor, on the 4th day of November, 1889, and adopted by a vote of 6,272 in favor of the constitution to 1,923 against it, the total number of votes cast being 8,195. The vote on the adoption was small, compared with the vote cast at the Delegate election in 1888, which was 18,010. But a severe snow-storm occurred on the day before the election, and election day was an unusually cold and uncomfortable one throughout the Territory, etc.

Mr. President, I think the Senate ought to bear in mind Wyoming is here and asking admission when neither House of Congress has acted, nor the Territorial Legislature, but the governor acting upon his own authority issued a call for that election. There was no penalty prescribed for false voting in that election; there was no law by which that election could be regulated or controlled. It was a mere voluntary assembling of the people of Wyoming upon the suggestion of the governor of the Territory which had no legal or binding force. These people assembled—

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. Did a majority of the people of the Territory participate in that election?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. There are no returns, so far as I know, in the papers as to the number of people who voted for delegates. It is claimed that fifty-five delegates were elected. There were but thirty-nine delegates who signed the constitution; and where the other sixteen were, about a third of the total number, and why they did not sign the constitution, is not explained. I believe it is said they got tired and went away, I suppose taking no special interest in it. But when they had framed the constitution which was submitted to a vote of the people in November, at that election, there was a total of 8,195 votes cast, while there were 18,010 votes cast one year before at the election of Delegate. Now we understand that in all these Territories the question of admission into the Union is always a burning issue. I am satisfied they all take a deep and lively interest in the prospect of becoming a State of this Union. Why, then, was it when there had been a polled vote of 18,010 for Delegate the year before, there was a vote cast upon this great question of only 8,195?

Mr. GRAY. If I may interrupt the Senator from Arkansas a moment, I wish to inquire of him whether there was a majority of the legal voters of the Territory present at the election to ratify the constitution.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. By no means.

Mr. GRAY. Was the number which is necessary to make up a majority, or a quorum as we say in a legislative body, recognized as being present in the Territory by any competent authority?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. They must unquestionably have been present in the Territory, as they were citizens of the Territory, and these applications that are made for admission claims that in the next election the vote polled will not be less than twenty-three or twenty-four thousand votes. I especially call attention to the fact in connection with the question asked me by the Senator from Delaware, that yesterday the Senator from Connecticut stated that the population of Wyoming was nearer, in his opinion, 125,000 than 100,000.

Every Senator will notice this circumstance, and it certainly ought to be carefully considered in a matter of such serious consequence as the admission of a State into the Union. If the Senator from Connecticut is correct, if there are 125,000 people in Wyoming, would not that fact have been indicated by the number of votes cast? Take the average communities in this country, and there is about one adult male voter to about every four or five residents—in some communities four, in some five.

I submit in a Western community like Wyoming the percentage of adults is very much greater to the total population than it would be in an old settled community like Delaware or Connecticut. So I assume that there should be fairly one adult male to every four citizens. That would give, if that estimate is correct of the adult male population in the Territory of Wyoming, a little over 30,000 or about 31,255. If the supposition of the Senator from Connecticut is correct that there are 125,000 citizens in the Territory, there would be then over 30,000 adult males in the Territory of Wyoming.

But in addition to the voting males, the females are authorized to vote there, and the presumption is that they are not far from equal in numbers; that there are about as many females as there are males who are adults and entitled to vote; and if the supposition of the Senator is correct there must be somewhere in the neighborhood of twenty-five or thirty thousand female voters added to the 30,000 male voters that must be there; thus we have an aggregate of from 50,000 to 60,000 voters.

Mr. GEORGE. How many votes were actually cast?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Eight thousand one hundred and seventy-five; and of that 8,175 actually cast 1,923, about one out of every four, voted against this constitution.

Here, then, you have the voting population, according to the Senator's hypothesis, and according to his own supposition, that must agree gate 50,000 votes, and there were actually cast about 8,000, of whom one-fourth voted against the adoption of this constitution.

Mr. GRAY. As I understand, about 6,000 out of the 50,000 voted for the constitution.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. And on the vote of that 6,000 people the Senate proposes to admit that Territory without waiting to hear from the other people, who are equally interested in the question with them.

Mr. President, my opinion about this may be illustrated by reference to a circumstance that occurred in New Mexico some years ago. The Legislature passed an act there providing that the governor should call a constitutional convention. It was called. There had been no enabling act passed by Congress, and when the constitution was framed it was submitted to the people, and submitted at the same time that the Delegate to Congress was to be elected. There were about 40,000 votes cast for Delegate, and less than 4,000 voted on the question of the constitution at all, and I believe the majority of these voted against it on the ground that the call was unauthorized by Congress, and ought not to be voted for by the people.

In the case I have just mentioned in New Mexico, if there had not been a vote for a Delegate those people who went out in great numbers and did vote would have staid away from the polls. But even in this case, perhaps, as large a percentage voted for the constitution as did in the Wyoming case.

Mr. PLATT. May I interrupt the Senator? I did not catch his remarks so as to understand what Territory he was talking about when he said the constitution was submitted at the time of the election of the Delegate.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I was attempting to draw a parallel between Wyoming and an incident that occurred in New Mexico some years ago, with which the Senator is familiar, no doubt.

Mr. President, there are objectionable features in this constitution. We may reasonably suppose that the people who refused to vote for the ratification of this constitution, which was the product of the convention called by the governor without authority from Congress and without authority from the Territorial Legislature, were opposed to the adoption of this constitution embracing these objectionable features. They simply staid away from the polls and did not vote, and here we have this large majority, amounting, according to the calculation I have just now made, to perhaps nine-tenths of all the citizens of the Territory, who were opposed to this proposition.

But the Senator from Connecticut in his argument yesterday stated that there was no opposition to this constitution, and that the reason why the people did not turn out was on account of a snow-storm and because everybody was agreed in support of this instrument. The Senator seemed to forget the fact that of the votes actually cast about 25 per cent. voted against the ratification of the constitution, and that an immense majority of the voters of Wyoming refrained from voting. But there is another circumstance in connection with that which I think ought not to be forgotten just here. I suppose we might infer that the majority of females in Wyoming were in favor of woman suffrage; that whatever votes there were in that Territory cast against the constitution with the provision of woman suffrage in it, would be the votes of the males, but that the women would all vote in favor of that instrument.

Now let us look at these 8,000 votes with an eye to that. I suppose there is no great difference between the number of males and females who are authorized to vote in Wyoming. They would naturally not be far from equal in number. I suppose perhaps there may be some few more men than women, but for the sake of the argument and to illustrate the idea I have in my mind, I will assume that they were equal, and of the 8,195 votes that were cast 4,097 of them were males and 4,097 were females. We then have 4,097 females and all voting for the ratification of this constitution, and of the 4,097 males 1,923 voted against the ratification, leaving 2,174 in its favor or a majority of 251.

The fact that so small a percentage of the voters of the Territory went to the polls at the time of this vote is a fact that must be considered by the Senate. This fact of course found its way to the minds of the majority of the committee when they were preparing their report.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand there was no enabling act.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. No, and no act of the Territorial Legislature authorizing the calling of the constitutional convention. There was no act of the Legislature, but it was called by the governor upon his own motion, and, as I called to the attention of the Senate in the beginning, there was no penalty for false voting in any one of these elections, and any one man could have gone to the polls and might have cast any number of votes and there was no penalty for it.

Mr. MORGAN. Is the proclamation to which the Senator refers found anywhere in the papers in this case?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I think it is in some of the papers.

Mr. GEORGE. Who made the apportionment of the delegates?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The governor, the chief-justice, and the secretary of the Territory, and upon their apportionment the election was held.

Mr. GEORGE. Was it authorized by any law?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. By no law upon the face of the earth.

There was a bill introduced in Congress which went to the Committee on Territories and they reported favorably upon it, but the Senate did not act upon it and the House did not act upon it. It was not passed by either body. The governor did not call the Legislature together to get even an act of the Legislature to authorize him to call a constitutional convention, but acting upon his own motion, as he was solicited to do by certain members of the county boards in seven counties out of ten, he ordered the election—and that was of necessity an absolutely illegal election—first, for delegates to the constitutional convention, and then the election ratifying the constitution. As I have shown, the utter absurdity and unfairness of this matter was so plain to the thinking, reflecting men of that Territory that it seems to me they regarded this election as an absolute nullity, and that was the reason why, out of all the voters said to be resident in that Territory, but 8,000 went to the polls.

Mr. GEORGE. Eight thousand out of about 60,000?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I can not tell now about the total number of votes. I was taking the population as assumed by the Senator from Connecticut, and figuring out the voting population on that assumption it must be fifty or sixty thousand. On the other hand, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] estimates that there can not be more than sixty or seventy thousand people in all this Territory. The Delegate claims that they will poll from twenty-three to twenty-four thousand votes in their next election. If that be true they have not anything like the population that gentlemen on the other side have been claiming that they have. I was simply assuming that their figures were correct and arguing this case from the standpoint of their own assumption as to the population of Wyoming Territory.

Mr. GEORGE. Upon their own hypothesis nothing like a majority of the voters in that Territory cast their votes.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Under no hypothesis have more than one-fourth of the voters of that Territory voted for this constitution, and in that one-fourth are the women who voted at the time the men voted; and I respectfully submit to the Senate that even if that election had been legal, even if they had had a right to hold the election and if there had been penalties of perjury protecting and guarding the polls against ballot-box stuffing and fraudulent counting, the allowing of women to vote at that election was not authorized under the laws of the United States.

In the decision rendered in the Washington case in the supreme court of Washington Territory, where this identical question was raised as to whether a Territorial Legislature could confer the right of suffrage upon women, in a case that seems to me to have been well considered, ably argued, it was solemnly decided that the powers conferred upon the Territories by Congress did not authorize the Territories to grant the right of suffrage to women, and upon that decision the women of Washington Territory were not allowed to vote. But with that understanding of the construction of law the people of Wyoming, when this unauthorized election, when this election not guarded or protected by any law, when this election where there were no penalties for false voting or false counting or any other crime, took place, allowed women as well as men to cast their votes.

Mr. MORGAN. In what volume is that decision?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. If the Senator will permit me I will call attention to it just here. It is in the third volume of Washington Territory Reports, the case of Bloomer vs. Todd and others.

Mr. GEORGE. A decision rendered by the supreme court of the Territory?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. By the supreme court of the Territory, and I think perhaps it might not be out of place for me to read a page from the conclusion of the court upon this question. I begin in the middle of the decision. The whole of it is very interesting, but I will not detain the Senate by reading it all.

The same act provides that every Territory shall have the right to send one Delegate to Congress, and the only limitation is that he shall be a citizen. It will not probably be contended by any person but that the Delegate was intended to be and, indeed, must be a man, and an elector within the Territory; and it certainly was not within the intent of Congress that a woman should go to the House of Representatives as a Delegate. The thought was not in the mind of anybody. The act also provides for the election of justices of the peace and other judicial officers. Yet will it be claimed that it was within the contemplation of Congress at the time of the passage of this act that these might be filled by women?

"Yet will it be claimed" is the expression—

That at that time it was within the intent of Congress that under that act women might be elected to hold those offices. It might have been better, and perhaps would now be a step in advance, if such had been the case; but was that the legislative intent at that time?

If we turn to the Constitution of the United States we find that the whole structure of the instrument is based upon the idea present in the minds of the makers of it that the officers provided for therein shall be males. In the first place, and as of minor importance, the form of every word in the Constitution relating to the holding of office under that Constitution is masculine. It provides that the Senate shall be composed of two Senators from each State. No person shall be a Senator who shall not have reached the age of thirty years. The Vice-President shall be the President of the Senate. No person shall be eligible to the office of President except a native-born citizen, who shall hold his office during the term of four years, and shall be elected as therein provided.

The judicial power shall be vested in one Supreme Court, the judges whereof shall hold their offices during good behavior. In numerous other instances it is conclusively apparent that at the time of the framing of that instrument the idea of a woman holding office under that Constitution was as foreign to the mind as that a woman might be President under that Constitution; else the sole limitation would not have been that the President should be a native-born citizen of the United States. If the word "citizen," as there used, had been supposed to include females, it will not now be questioned but that there would have been an express negation in that regard. Such has been the uniform practical construction ever since its adoption, and for more than thirty years our organic act has likewise been construed to mean "male citizen" when the privilege of voting has been under consideration, and even now it is not disputed but that was the sense in which Congress then used the word.

This practical construction is not to be ignored or evaded.

Ever since the colonial law provided that a person accused of a crime should be tried by a jury of "twelve honest men," the word "jury," standing alone, has meant the same thing. That there have been here and there exceptions help to establish the rule.

I will not detain the Senate by reading the whole of this decision, but will read a little more. It proceeds:

The case of Minor vs. Happersett (21 Wall., 163) is also cited for the purpose of showing that the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, wherein it is said that all persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside, are by the words used in affirmance of the construction contended for by appellant. The decision proceeds upon an exactly opposite theory and denies the doctrine contended for, and therefore it does not follow that the use of the word "citizen" in the enabling act conveys the idea or carries with it the proposition that the Legislature has the right to confer the privilege of suffrage upon female citizens; nor can it be true, unless it be further contended that at the time of the passage of the organic act of the Territory the word "citizen" necessarily implied a female as well as a male citizen when used as empowering the Legislature to grant the privilege of voting to all citizens.

In conclusion the court say:

In 1852, when this act was passed, the word "citizen" was used as a qualification for voting and holding office, and, in our judgment, the word then meant and still signifies male citizenship and must be so construed. That the rule contended for might be better, we are not called upon to determine. The Congress can confer the desired power upon our Legislature, and we cherish the hope that in the near future our own citizens will have an opportunity to determine this question for themselves in the formation of a constitution for the State of Washington.

Now, Mr. President, with the decision of this court by which women in Washington were denied the right to cast their votes, in the Territory of Wyoming, in utter disregard of this construction of the law, in plain violation, I believe, of the laws of Congress conferring authority upon the Territories, they have given their women the right to vote in Wyoming; and upon this the governor of the Territory, ordering an election which he was not authorized to call under the law, not provided for by Congress or by the Territory, proceeded to hold an election at which women voted. On account of the extreme smallness of the vote, it seems to me that there is no such expression in favor of the constitution as to warrant this Congress in holding that this Territory ought to be admitted under this constitution which embraces a provision for female suffrage; which embraces a provision for alien ownership of lands. It has an additional provision in favor of compulsory education, against which, in my opinion, many an American citizen would revolt.

There would certainly be a large percentage of people in that Territory opposed to these provisions. We ourselves, only two or three years ago, passed a law in which we provided that aliens should not own land in the Territories.

The Senator from Connecticut yesterday gave a very pathetic account to the Senate of some citizen, the mention of whose name he said would command the respect of every man present if he were to call it, who, under that law, would not be allowed, after spending a lifetime in this country, to own his home and have it to descend to his children. He said there had been a great deal of gush and sentiment about this that was wholly unjustifiable and unwarrantable. So far as I am concerned, I wish to say for myself that whenever any man chooses to come from abroad to live in this country, unless he is willing to cut loose from the home of his childhood, unless he is willing to avail himself of the privileges of the laws which give him easy access to American citizenship, to become one of us and cast his lot with us and identify himself as an American citizen, I for one am willing to say he shall not own one foot of real estate in this country.

I believe this country ought to be the heritage of American citizens. We have been for a hundred years through the gates of Castle Garden, which, as President Harrison expressed it, "always swing inward," receiving a stream of millions of people who have come from other countries, and made them partners in our inheritance. We have never denied to them any right that we accorded to our own native-born citizens, and I am in favor of liberal treatment to those who come here and desire to become citizens of the United States, but for a man who comes here retaining his foreign allegiance, not willing to become an American citizen, I am ready to say he shall not own one solitary foot of American soil; and to vote for the admission of a State which has embodied in its organic law a provision that such a foreigner shall have exactly the same rights as an American citizen is absolutely revolting to me. So far as I am concerned, I can not and will not cast a vote in favor of any such monstrous doctrine.

The truth about it is that we have been talking so long about our great desire to protect American labor, to guaranty high wages to laboring men, and at the same time welcoming the very same pauper laborers from Europe against whom we have said we wished to protect our own laborers, that I think the time has come when there ought to be some sort of difference between an American citizen and a man born abroad who is an alien.

I am not willing to make this the dumping ground of all the people in Europe. I am not willing that the paupers and the miserable classes that are absolutely worthless abroad shall be dumped upon us, and when they come here retaining their foreign allegiance to be regarded as good as American citizens and entitled to all rights our own people have. If they want to come to be a part of our people, to live with us, to sustain the burdens of Government, to meet the nation's foes in time of war, to incur the dangers that any American citizen incurs, then I am in favor of treating them fairly and properly; but when they come to live off the fat of the land and to refuse the responsibilities of citizenship, and to retain their allegiance to the country from which they came, then I say there ought to be a distinction between them and our own people.

This other provision for compulsory education is one which I do not fancy. It may be a very good plan to compel a man to join my church and to make him think as I do about religion, to measure him up according to my moral ideas and to compel him to go my way, but this idea of compulsory education is not American. The Kaiser, at the head of the great German Empire, considers himself the father of all his people, and undertakes to compel the education of his subjects, but I am not ready to transport his imperial ideas to this country yet.

I believe that when school-houses are provided, when the means of education are opened, when the ways by which children may obtain an education are provided at the hands of the State, American citizens may well be left to determine whether or not their condition is such that they can send their children to school.

I will not undertake to enlarge upon these obnoxious features of this constitution, but embracing as it does these features, submitted as it was, as I have shown, without authority of law, and without right, submitted to the votes of the people in an irregular and improper and lawless way, it seems to me it ought not to command the respect of the Senate of the United States to such an extent as to agree that the Territory of Wyoming shall be admitted upon this constitution as a State in the Union.

In connection with this matter, there was a paragraph published in one of the papers in that Territory to which I wish I could refer, but I can not find it just now, but it stated in effect that a fraudulent election might have been held without penalties in this case.

This paragraph in a Wyoming newspaper, read in the other House when this matter was under discussion, was flatly and positively denied by some one on the floor, I do not know who, but though I have seen the paragraph of this Wyoming newspaper, I have never heard of any denial of its statement except the one which was made by the gentleman, whoever he may have been. The statement was to the effect as I remember it that the banner county in Wyoming—I repeat it as well as I can from memory, though I can not fully recall it—that in the banner county in that Territory the election was held in a back room of a store by three men who had a cigar box, and after putting in three or four hundred votes for one side, one of the men said he was tired of casting so many votes for one man and would cast some for the other fellow, and thereupon he put in six or seven votes for the "other fellow," and these votes cast at this election held by three men, with every ballot put in by themselves, were counted and returned, and made that county the banner county of the Territory.

If that statement was true, those men could not be punished. If it was not true, it ought to have been more authoritatively denied than it has been. When it was read by a member of the other House, somebody rose and said he pronounced that story absolutely untrue, and that was all that was said. There has been no other statement against its truth and authenticity so far as I have ever heard. It was printed by a paper in the Territory, and it was charged that that was the way in which that county became the banner county of the Territory. Now at an election where that was possible, admitting that there is no proof at all that it did occur, I ask if the Senate is going to accept as being proper and right a constitution which was framed by a lot of delegates who could have been elected in that way.

Mr. GRAY. I ask the Senator what would have been the consequences if the persons charged with conducting that election in that so-called banner county which he has described had confessed the truth of the charge; or had it been proved by any number of reputable witnesses and not denied by them, what would have been the consequences to the persons so charged?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I suppose it would have been considered a good joke by them, and that is all. There was no law to punish them. It was an election held without authority of law, and they could not be punished. Elections held in this way certainly can not command the respect of reasonable and right-thinking men.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from Arkansas allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. The provision of the twenty-ninth section of the constitution of Wyoming upon which the Senator has been commenting reads as follows:

SEC. 20. No distinction shall ever be made by law between resident aliens and citizens as to the possession, taxation, enjoyment, and descent of property.

I should like to ask the Senator if he knows of any State in the Union which makes any distinction between resident aliens and citizens as to the possession, taxation, enjoyment, and descent of property. If there is any such distinction made in any State of the Union, I should like to know it.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The distinction was made by this body of which the Senator from Nevada is a member, and if I am not mistaken he voted for the law making that distinction in every Territory in this country. The law is in the volume here on my desk. I can point the Senator to it. It is a law enacted by Congress, and it certainly seems to me to be entitled to some consideration by members of Congress when it has become a law by the solemn act of both Houses.

Mr. STEWART. That was not the question I asked the Senator. The law of Congress forbids to aliens the right to acquire real estate in a Territory; but I ask the Senator if there is any State in the Union which makes any distinction between resident aliens and resident citizens, as to possession, taxation, enjoyment, and descent of property? If there is any State which makes that distinction, I have been unable to find it. I believe, on the contrary, that every State in the Union allows to aliens and to citizens the same enjoyment of possession and the same rule as to taxation and descent that is applied to citizens of the United States.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I have not examined the question. I can not undertake to say what the States have done, but I have said what I believe the States ought to do, and I have said what the Congress of the United States has done, and there is no sufficient reason why this body shall "go back" (to use a vulgar phrase) upon its own action and ratify in Wyoming a state of things that they themselves have said should not exist. It is not necessary for us to go back and hunt up whether there are other States who have taken that action or not.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President—

Mr. PLATT. The Senator will allow me to ask a question.

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. Have we passed any law in Congress which treats an alien resident in the Territories any differently from a citizen in regard to the possession of his property, the transfer of it, the descent of it, the taxation of it, and the inheritance of it—have we passed any such law as that?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I will read to the Senator what the law is.

Mr. PLATT. You will find no such law as that.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. This is the law of Congress:

That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons not citizens of the United States, or who have not lawfully declared their intention to become such citizens, or for any corporation not created by or under the laws of the United States or of some State or Territory of the United States, to hereafter acquire, hold, or own real estate so hereafter acquired, or any interest therein, in any of the Territories of the United States or in the District of Columbia, except such as may be acquired by inheritance or in good faith in the ordinary course of justice in the collection of debts heretofore created.

That is what the law says. That is what the Senators both voted for, and now they ask the Senate of the United States to admit Wyoming under a constitution which goes directly in the face of this provision.

Mr. STEWART. I do not understand that it is in the face of the provision.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I can not help the Senator's not being able to understand it. It is plain enough.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President—

Mr. SPOONER. May I ask the Senator from Arkansas a question?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I will yield with pleasure to one at a time. The Senator from Nevada is still on the floor.

Mr. STEWART. I am through.

Mr. SPOONER. Is it not one thing for Congress to declare a policy as to alien ownership by act of Congress operative in the Territories, which are subject, of course, to the jurisdiction of Congress, and another thing by a fundamental condition attached to the admission of that Territory into the Union as a State to preclude the people of the prospective State from regulating that matter in accordance with the public sentiment within its borders? Is it the proposition of the Senator that, as to all the Territories, it shall be made a fundamental condition of their admission as States that as a rule of property no alien shall be permitted to own real estate within the limits of the State?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Mr. President, I have not assumed any such position. I have not said that I occupied any such position. What I object to in this constitution is an affirmative assertion now that aliens shall have under all circumstances and everywhere the same rights as resident citizens have. If that had been left out of the constitution there would be no ground for complaint on this score. I have not asked for a provision in the constitution that would forbid aliens from holding lands. I am willing to leave the State to regulate that for itself.

But the question of the Senator from Wisconsin opens a very wide field, one which I have not fully investigated, but one which I hope to investigate at some time and to arrive at a definite conclusion upon, and that is as to whether it is not competent for the Congress of the United States in the organization of a national policy to declare that alien shall not hold lands in the States.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not deny now that Congress might impose this as a fundamental condition, but, as I have always understood it, the question which controls Congress in passing upon a constitution submitted for approval is whether the constitution is republican in form. The Senator will not claim for a moment that a constitution which authorized aliens to hold lands the same as citizens was for that reason not republican in form. I remember several State constitutions which affirmatively declare that in this respect there shall be no distinction between citizens and aliens.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. There is no question of that.

Mr. SPOONER. I voted, as I presume the Senator from Arkansas did, for this act of Congress precluding alien ownership of land in the Territories, but I would not vote to forever preclude the people of a State from making their own rules of property upon that subject, as the people of all the other States have done. While this constitution affirmatively declares, as I believe the constitution of my own State affirmatively declares, that aliens may own lands, it would be entirely competent for the people at any time to change it, and it is a subject which ought to be left to the people of a State when it shall become a State, if there is anything in the doctrine of home rule, it seems to me.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I cordially agree with the Senator in every word he has said, and I am gratified to find upon his own statement of his position that he can not vote for the admission of Wyoming under this bill, because this constitution takes the power out of the hands of the Legislature to regulate this very business. That is precisely the thing that I complain of, because it ought to be left to the people and their representatives to regulate this. That is the reason why I am opposed to it.

Mr. SPOONER. It leaves it to the people, but not to the Legislature. At any time when a majority of the people see fit to do so, they may amend the constitution so as to prohibit alien ownership of land. I would leave it to the people, but not to the Legislature.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Constitutional prohibitions are for the curbing and restraining of Legislatures. They are the representatives of the people. It is because there is a fear that they can not be trusted. I believe when the people speak through their own Legislatures they are apt to be right, and I believe this power ought to be left with the Legislature, and I am unwilling that it should be a part of the organic law, unchangeable except by amending the constitution of the State.

Mr. DOLPH. I suppose the Senator takes no objection to the constitution of his own State, which contains substantially the same provision that is contained in the constitution of the proposed State of Wyoming.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I am aware of that.

Mr. DOLPH. And that is contained in the constitutions of three-fourths of all the States of the Union, as I am prepared to show.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I think that is quite likely.

Mr. DOLPH. And the question of what Congress has done in regard to the Territories, where we have plenary power to legislate, has nothing to do with it, because every State must come into this Union upon an equality with every other State in its power to legislate.

This is, it seems to me, a question within the power of the State when it comes into the Union. This constitution is framed as an organic law of the future State, and the Supreme Court would say without hesitation, I think, that Congress would have no power to declare that a clause should be inserted in the constitution of a State that should come into the Union prohibiting aliens from acquiring real estate. Congress, in admitting a State, can pass upon the question of whether the constitution is republican in form and consistent with the laws and Constitution of the United States, but it can not put any limitation upon the power of the State, when once admitted, to legislate upon any of these questions.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Precisely so, and that is the reason I object to this constitution, because only about 6,000 votes were cast for it in Wyoming, when, according to the calculation of the Senator from Connecticut, if his estimate of the population is correct, there must be fifty or sixty thousand voters there, and there must be 25,000 votes, accepting the lowest estimate made by anybody on either side; and the fact that less than one-fourth of the population incorporate a provision of this kind in the constitution of the State that can not be changed except by a change in the constitution is a reason why the State ought not to be admitted on this constitution.

If the Senator from Oregon is right and the Senator from Wisconsin is right, if this matter ought to be left in the hands of the people, then they ought to vote with me not to allow a handful, a mere minority of the people of Wyoming, to frame a constitution with such a provision, when we all know it can not be changed except in a slow, tedious, and expensive manner. This sort of legislation ought not to be done in this hasty and inconsiderate way, with the indorsement of a small percentage only of the people of the Territory.

I believe it ought not to be the law in a single State. I believe it ought to be changed when it does exist, and I believe Congress having set the example in providing that foreigners shall not hold land in America, the example of Congress ought to be followed by the States in not permitting people to hold the lands who are not bona fide citizens of the country.

Mr. SPOONER. What does the Senator mean by saying that this could only be changed by some expensive method? I have not read the constitution through, but I presume it provides for amendments in about the same form as the other constitutions—that the Legislature may at any time submit an amendment to the people.

Mr. MORGAN. Two-thirds of the Legislature.

Mr. SPOONER. Two-thirds of the Legislature may, at any time, submit an amendment of the constitution to the people and cause it to be voted upon at a general election. There is no additional expense involved.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. It is always slow and laborious to change a constitution, as the Senator from Wisconsin and every one else well knows.

Mr. SPOONER. I was not talking about the speed of it. I was simply directing my question to the observation of the Senator from Arkansas, that it could only be done by an expensive method. It does not require a constitutional convention to change the constitution. If at any time the Legislature sees fit to submit that question to a vote of the people upon a proposed change of policy in this regard, it can be easily and speedily done.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Mr. President, I have never yet known of an election in a State that was not expensive. Elections are always expensive. The amendment of a constitution is a slow and tedious and expensive process, and it always gives rise to trouble and often to bad blood, to change a constitution. That is well known to everybody, and nobody knows it better than the Senator from Wisconsin.

I have presented in a brief way the reasons why I think this constitution is objectionable, and the reasons why Congress ought not to admit Wyoming upon this constitution. It has not been ratified in any fair sense of the word by the people of that Territory. The action taken by the governor was not authorized by law. The thing has been entirely outside of the rules and regulations that ought to govern matters of this great importance.

As I said in the beginning, I am in favor of the admission of Wyoming and of Idaho and of the other Territories, of Arizona and New Mexico. I would not be willing to admit Utah now on account of the one objection which every one understands, because an increased power conferred there by statehood might bring about difficulties that could not be dealt with. I think that Territory ought to be kept in the condition of a Territory until such time as that matter has been settled; but when that one great question has been gotten out of the way I am in favor of Utah taking her place in the sisterhood of States. I believe the Indian country ought to be a State as soon as possible. I am in favor of keeping none of these people out wherever it can be avoided. I believe that the true doctrine of the propriety of the admission of States is set out very properly and correctly in this memorial:

Discussing briefly the grounds upon which the admission may be urged as a right, it may be declared a settled principle of the Government that territory acquired by the United States is, in the language of Chief-Justice Taney (19 Howard, 446), "acquired to become a State, and not to be held as a colony and governed by Congress by absolute authority;" that "Territorial governments are organized as matters of necessity, because the people are too few in number and scant in resources to maintain a State government," but "are contrary to the spirit of our American Constitution" and "are to be tolerated and continued only so long as that necessity exists."

I believe, Mr. President, that that is correct, and that in every instance where the people have shown the intelligence and accumulated the necessary property to sustain a State government then it is the absolute and solemn duty of Congress to allow them to take their place among the sisterhood of States. These great Territories have all accomplished this; they reckon their wealth by millions; they have a population at least sufficient in numbers; they have intelligence; they have pluck; they have sagacity. The foresight of the people of these Territories compares favorably with that of any other part of this country.

We last year admitted four great Territories along our northern border. Those people ought to have been admitted. The people who are there are American citizens and ought to have all the rights that any other American citizens have; and there is no reason why admission should be denied to the residents of these Territories any more than it should have been denied to those four.

This view has been entertained by leading statesmen from Washington's day to the present time. It found expression in the ordinance of 1787, which, giving to the Northwest Territory at first a colonial government, yet carefully provided for an early transition to the Territorial state and then for the admission of States formed therefrom at as early a day as practicable, and on such conditions as should be deemed "consistent with the general interests of the Confederacy." It also had expression in the Louisiana treaty, which secured to the Government the territory out of which have been formed so many great States, the third article of which treaty says:

"The inhabitants of the ceded territory shall be incorporated in the Union of the United States, and admitted as soon as possible, according to the principles of the Federal Constitution, to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States."

The same principle is recognized in the treaty of 1825 with Mexico, whereby yet other vast areas were added to our domain.

I believe, Mr. President, that these Territories having a large and intelligent population, having a large amount of wealth, are capable of organizing a State government and are financially able to maintain it. This being true, I think they have an inalienable right to be admitted as States in the Union. I am opposed, however, to the admission of Wyoming upon this constitution. I am opposed to the admission of any State in the irregular, unauthorized way in which Wyoming proposes to come here now. I am opposed in the same way to the admission of Idaho upon the constitution that is now presented. I am opposed to the unauthorized action of her governor. I am opposed to the admission of New Mexico upon a similar constitution formed under similar circumstances.

But I am in favor of passing an enabling act now authorizing all four of these Territories to call constitutional conventions to frame constitutions to be submitted by them to the people, and then to present themselves here to be admitted into the Union. When they do that, when they have had a fair election, a fair vote; when their governors, authorized by an act of Congress, have called a constitutional convention, and that convention has framed a constitution, and that constitution has been submitted to the people and has been voted upon, then I am in favor of their taking their place as a State.

Mr. President, to get my views before the Senate, and to express in a clearer way than I can in words exactly what I think, I move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the pending bill and to insert what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and in lieu of the matter stricken out to insert:

That the inhabitants of all that part of the area of the United States now constituting the Territories of Arizona, Idaho, New Mexico, and Wyoming, as at present described, may become the States of Arizona, Idaho, and Wyoming, respectively, as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. That all male persons who are qualified by the laws of said Territories to vote for representatives to the Legislative Assemblies thereof are hereby authorized to vote for and choose delegates to form conventions in said proposed States; and the qualifications for delegates to such conventions shall be such as by the laws of said Territories, respectively, persons are required to possess to be eligible to the Legislative Assemblies thereof; and the aforesaid delegates to form said conventions shall be apportioned among the several counties within the limits of the proposed States in proportion to the aggregate number of votes cast in each of the counties thereof for Delegate in Congress, at the elections held in said Territories on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, 1888. One delegate shall be allowed to each county, and one additional delegate for every 400 votes cast in each county, and one additional delegate for any fraction of 200 votes cast in each county of said Territories, respectively, at said elections. That said apportionments shall be made by the governor, the chief justice, and the United States attorney of each of said Territories; and the governor of each of said Territories shall, by proclamation, order an election of the delegates aforesaid in each of said Territories, respectively, to be held on the Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1890, which proclamation shall be issued within thirty days after the passage of this act; and such elections shall be conducted, the returns made, the result ascertained, and the certificates to persons elected to such conventions issued in the same manner as is prescribed by the laws of the said Territories, respectively, regulating elections therein for Delegate to Congress.

All male persons resident in said proposed States, who are qualified voters of said Territories, respectively, as herein provided, shall be entitled to vote upon the election of delegates, and under such rules and regulations as said conventions may prescribe, not in conflict with this act, upon the ratification or rejection of the constitutions: Provided, That if any elector in said Territories who may offer to register as a voter or to vote at either of said elections shall be challenged on the ground that he is a polygamist or bigamist, or a member of any religious sect or denomination that teaches or countenances polygamy or plural or celestial marriages, it shall be the duty of one of the judges of the registration or of the election, where such elector is challenged, to tender him the oath prescribed in section 24 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1887, known as the anti-polygamy act, with such modification only as is necessary in order to comply with the laws of the Territory in which the election is held in respect to his residence therein; and if such elector shall take and subscribe said oath so modified, his vote shall be received and counted at such election. But if said elector shall swear falsely in taking such oath, he shall, on conviction, be deemed guilty of perjury, and he shall be punished accordingly.

SEC. 3. That the delegates to the conventions elected as provided in this act shall meet at the seat of government of each of said Territories, on the second Monday in January, 1891, and, after organization, shall declare, on behalf of the people of said proposed States, that they adopt the Constitution of the United States; whereupon the said conventions shall be, and are hereby, authorized to form constitutions and State governments for said proposed States, respectively. The constitutions shall be republican in form, and make no distinction in civil or political rights on account of race or color, except as to Indians not taxed, and not be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of Independence. And said conventions shall provide, by ordinances irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of said States:

First. That perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and that no inhabitant of said States shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship.

Second. That the people inhabiting said proposed States do agree and declare that they forever disclaim all right and title to the unappropriated public lands lying within the boundaries thereof, and to all lands lying within said limits owned or held by any Indian or Indian tribe; and that until the title thereto shall have been extinguished by the United States, the same shall be and remain subject to the disposition of the United States, and said Indian lands shall remain under the absolute jurisdiction and control of the Congress of the United States; that the lands belonging to citizens of the United States residing without the said States shall never be taxed at a higher rate than the lands belonging to residents thereof; that no taxes shall be imposed by the States on lands or property therein belonging to or which may hereafter be purchased by the United States or reserved for its use. But nothing herein, or in the ordinances herein provided for, shall preclude the said States from taxing as other lands are taxed any lands owned or held by any Indian who has severed his tribal relations, and has obtained from the United States or from any person a title thereto by patent or other grant, save and except such lands as have been or may be granted to any Indian or Indians under any act of Congress containing a provision exempting the lands thus granted from taxation; but said ordinances shall provide that all such lands shall be exempt from taxation by said States so long and to such extent as such act of Congress may prescribe.

Third. That the debts and liabilities of said Territories shall be assumed and paid by said States, respectively.

Fourth. That provision shall be made for the establishment and maintenance of systems of public schools, which shall be open to all the children of said States, respectively, and free from sectarian control.

SEC. 4. That in case a constitution and State government shall be formed in compliance with the provisions of this act in any of said Territories the convention or conventions forming the same shall provide by ordinance for submitting said constitution or constitutions, respectively, to the people of said proposed States, respectively, for their ratification or rejection, at an election to be held in said Territory or Territories, respectively, at such time as may be fixed by said convention, at which election the qualified voters of said proposed States shall vote directly for or against the proposed constitutions, respectively, and for or against any provision separately submitted. The returns of said elections in each proposed State shall be made to the secretary of said Territories, respectively, who, with the governor and chief justice thereof, or any two of them, shall canvass the same; and if a majority of the legal votes cast on that question shall be for the constitution, the governor of such proposed State shall certify the result to the President of the United States, together with a statement of the votes cast thereon and upon separate articles or propositions, and a copy of said constitution, articles, propositions, and ordinances. And if the constitutions and governments of said proposed States or in either of them are republican in form, and if all the provisions of this act have been complied with in the formation thereof, it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to issue his proclamation, announcing the result of the election in each, and thereupon the proposed States which have adopted constitutions and formed State governments as herein provided shall be deemed admitted by Congress into the Union under and by virtue of this act on an equal footing with the original States from and after the date of said proclamation: Provided, That if either of the proposed States provided for in this act shall reject the constitution which may be submitted for ratification or rejection at the election provided therefor, the governor of the Territory in which such proposed constitution was rejected shall issue his proclamation reconvening the delegates elected to the convention which formed such rejected constitution, fixing the time and place at which said delegates shall assemble; and when so assembled they shall proceed to form another constitution or to amend the rejected constitution, and shall submit such new constitution or amended constitution to the people of the proposed State for ratification or rejection, at such time as said convention may determine; and all the provisions of this act, so far as applicable, shall apply to such convention so reassembled and to the constitution which may be formed, its ratification or rejection, and to the admission of the proposed State.

SEC. 5. That until the next general census, or until otherwise provided by law, said States shall be entitled to one Representative in the House of Representatives of the United States, and the Representatives to the Fifty-second Congress, together with the governors and other officers provided for in said constitutions, may be elected on the same day of the elections for the ratification or rejection of the constitutions; and until said State officers are elected and qualified under the provisions of each constitution and the States, respectively, are admitted into the Union, the Territorial officers shall continue to discharge the duties of their respective offices in each of said Territories.

SEC. 6. That upon the admission of each of said States into the Union sections numbered 16 and 36 in every township of said proposed States, and where such sections, or any parts thereof, have been sold or otherwise disposed of by or under the authority of any act of Congress, other lands equivalent thereto, in legal subdivisions of not less than one-quarter section, and as contiguous as may be to the section in lieu of which the same is taken, are hereby granted to said States for the support of common schools, such indemnity lands to be selected within said States in such manner as the Legislature may provide, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections embraced in permanent reservations for national purposes shall not, at any time, be subject to the grants nor to the indemnity provisions of this act, nor shall any lands embraced in Indian, military, or other reservations of any character be subject to the grants or to the indemnity provisions of this act until the reservation shall have been extinguished and such lands be restored to, and become a part of, the public domain.

SEC. 7. That all lands herein granted for educational purposes shall be disposed of only at public sale, and at a price not less than $10 per acre, the proceeds to constitute a permanent school fund, the interest of which only shall be expended in the support of said schools. But said lands may, under such regulations as the Legislatures shall prescribe, be leased for periods of not more than five years, in quantities not exceeding one section to any one person or company; and such land shall not be subject to pre-emption, homestead entry, or any other entry under the land laws of the United States, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, but shall be reserved for school purposes only.

SEC. 8. That upon the admission of each of said States into the Union, in accordance with the provisions of this act, 50 sections of the unappropriated public lands within said States, to be selected and located in legal subdivisions as provided in section 10 of this act, shall be, and are hereby, granted to said States for the purpose of erecting public buildings at the capital of said States for legislative, executive, and judicial purposes.

SEC. 9. That 5 per cent. of the proceeds of the sales of public lands lying within said States which shall be sold by the United States subsequent to the admission of said States into the Union, after deducting all the expenses incident to the same, shall be paid to the said States, to be used as a permanent fund, the interest of which only shall be expended for the support of the common schools within said States, respectively.

SEC. 10. That the lands granted to the Territories of Arizona, Idaho, and Wyoming by the act of February, 1881, entitled "An act to grant lands to Dakota, Montana, Arizona, Idaho, and Wyoming for university purposes," are hereby vested in the States of Arizona, Idaho, and Wyoming, respectively, if such States are admitted into the Union, as provided in this act, to the extent of the full quantity of 72 sections to each of said States, and any portion of said lands that may not have been selected by either of said Territories of Arizona, Idaho, or Wyoming may be selected by the respective States aforesaid; but said act of February, 1881, shall be so amended as to provide that none of said lands shall be sold for less than $10 per acre, and the proceeds shall constitute a permanent fund, to be safely invested and held by said States severally, and the income thereof be used exclusively for university purposes. And that the lands to the extent of two townships in quantity, authorized by the sixth section of the act of July 22, 1864, to be reserved for the establishment of a university in New Mexico, are hereby granted to the State of New Mexico for university purposes, to be held and used in accordance with the provisions of this section; and any portion of said lands that may not have been selected by said Territory may be selected by said State; but said act shall be, and hereby is, so amended as to provide that none of said lands shall be sold for less than $10 per acre, and the proceeds shall constitute a permanent fund, to be safely invested and held by said State of New Mexico, and the income thereof be used exclusively for university purposes. But all of said lands mentioned in this section may be leased in the same manner as provided in section 7 of this act. The schools, colleges, and universities provided for in this act shall forever remain under the exclusive control of said States, respectively, and no part of the proceeds arising from the sale or disposal of any lands herein granted for educational purposes shall be used for the support of any sectarian or denominational school, college, or university.

SEC. 11. That 90,000 acres of land, to be selected and located as provided in section 6 of this act, are hereby granted to each of said States, for the use and support of agricultural colleges in said States, respectively, as provided in the acts of Congress making donations of lands for such purposes.

SEC. 12. That in lieu of the grant of land for purposes of internal improvement made to new States by the eighth section of the act of September 4, 1841, and by section 2378 of the Revised Statutes, which sections are hereby repealed as to the States provided for by this act, and in lieu of any claim or demand by the States of Arizona, Idaho, New Mexico, and Wyoming, or either of them, under the act of September 28, 1850, and section 2479 of the Revised Statutes, making a grant of swamp and overflowed lands to certain States, which grant it is hereby declared is not extended to the States provided for in this act, and in lieu of any grant of saline lands to said States of Arizona, Idaho, New Mexico, and Wyoming, the following grants of land are hereby made to each of said States, respectively, for the purposes indicated, namely:

For the establishment of permanent water reservoirs for irrigating purposes, 250,000 acres; for the establishment and maintenance of an insane asylum, 50,000 acres; for the establishment and maintenance of State normal schools, 50,000 acres; for the establishment and maintenance of a school of mines, 50,000 acres; for the establishment and maintenance of a deaf and dumb asylum, 50,000 acres; for the establishment and maintenance of a reform school, 50,000 acres.

The said States of Arizona, Idaho, New Mexico, and Wyoming shall not be entitled to any further or other grants of land for any purpose than as expressly provided in this act, and the lands granted by this section shall be held, appropriated, and disposed of exclusively for the purposes herein mentioned, in such manner as the Legislatures of the respective States may severally provide.

SEC. 13. That all mineral lands shall be exempted from the grants made by this act. But if sections 16 and 36, or any subdivision or portion of any smallest subdivision thereof, in any township shall be found by the Department of the Interior to be mineral lands, said States are hereby authorized and empowered to select, in legal subdivisions, an equal quantity of other unappropriated lands in said States, in lieu thereof, for the use and the benefit of the common schools of said States.

SEC. 14. That all lands granted in quantity or as indemnity by this act shall be selected, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, from the surveyed, unreserved, and unappropriated public lands of the United States within the limits of the respective States entitled thereto. And there shall be deducted from the number of acres of land donated by this act for specific objects to said States the number of acres in each heretofore donated by Congress to said Territories for similar objects.

SEC. 15. That the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to each of said Territories for defraying the expenses of the said conventions, and for the payment of the members thereof, under the same rules and regulations and at the same rates as are now provided by law for the payment of the Territorial Legislatures. Any money hereby appropriated not necessary for such purpose shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 16. That each of said States, when admitted as aforesaid, shall constitute one judicial district, the names thereof to be the same as the names of the States, respectively; and the circuit and district courts therefor shall be held at the capital of such State for the time being, and each of said districts shall, for judicial purposes, until otherwise provided, be attached to the eighth judicial circuit, except Arizona and Idaho, which shall be attached to the ninth judicial circuit. There shall be appointed for each of said districts one district judge, one United States attorney, and one United States marshal. The judge of each of said districts shall receive a yearly salary of $3,500, payable in four equal installments, on the 1st days of January, April, July, and October of each year, and shall reside in the district. There shall be appointed clerks of said courts in each district, who shall keep their offices at the capital of said States, respectively. The regular terms of said courts shall be held in each district, at the place aforesaid, on the first Monday in April and the first Monday in November of each year, and only one grand jury and one petit jury shall be summoned in both said circuit and district courts. The circuit and district courts for each of said districts, and the judges thereof, respectively, shall possess the same powers and jurisdiction, and perform the same duties required to be performed by the other circuit and district courts and judges of the United States, and shall be governed by the same laws and regulations. The marshal, district attorney, and clerks of the circuit and district courts of each of said districts, and all other officers and persons performing duties in the administration of justice therein, shall severally possess the powers and perform the duties lawfully possessed and required to be performed by similar officers in other districts of the United States; and shall, for the services they may perform, receive the fees and compensation allowed by law to other similar officers and persons performing similar duties in the State of Nebraska.

SEC. 17. That all cases of appeal or writ of error heretofore prosecuted and now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States upon any record from the supreme court of either of the Territories mentioned in this act, or that may hereafter lawfully be prosecuted upon any record from either of said courts, may be heard and determined by said Supreme Court of the United States. And the mandate of execution or of further proceedings shall be directed by the Supreme Court of the United States to the circuit or district court hereby established within the State succeeding the Territory from which such record is or may be pending, or to the supreme court of such State, as the nature of the case may require. And each of the circuit, district, and State courts herein named shall respectively be the successor of the supreme court of the Territory, as to all such cases arising within the limits embraced within the jurisdiction of such courts respectively, with full power to proceed with the same, and award mesne or final process therein; and that from all judgments and decrees of the supreme court of either of the Territories mentioned in this act in any case arising within the limits of any of the proposed States prior to admission, the parties to such judgment shall have the same right to prosecute appeals and writs of error to the Supreme Court of the United States as they shall have had by law prior to the admission of said States into the Union.

SEC. 18. That in respect to all cases, proceedings, and matters now pending in the supreme or district courts of either of the Territories mentioned in this act at the time of the admission into the Union of either of the States mentioned in this act, and arising within the limits of any such State, whereof the circuit or district courts by this act established might have had jurisdiction under the laws of the United States had such courts existed at the time of the commencement of such cases, the said circuit and district courts, respectively, shall be the successors of said supreme and district courts of said Territory; and in respect to all other cases, proceedings, and matters pending in the supreme or district courts of any of the Territories mentioned in this act at the time of the admission of such Territory into the Union, arising within the limits of said proposed State, the courts established by such State shall, respectively, be the successors of said supreme and district Territorial courts; and all the files, records, indictments, and proceedings relating to any such cases shall be transferred to such circuit, district, and State courts, respectively, and the same shall be proceeded with therein in due course of law; but no writ, action, indictment, cause, or proceeding now pending, or that prior to the admission of any of the States mentioned in this act shall be pending in any Territorial court in any of the Territories mentioned in this act, shall abate by the admission of any such State into the Union, but the same shall be transferred and proceeded with in the proper United States circuit, district, or State court, as the case may be: Pro- vided, however, That in all civil actions, causes, and proceedings in which the United States is not a party transfers shall not be made to the circuit and district courts of the United States except upon written request of one of the parties to such action or proceeding filed in the proper court; and in the absence of such request, such cases shall be proceeded with in the proper State courts.

SEC. 19. That the constitutional conventions may, by ordinance, provide for the election of officers for full State governments, including members of the Legislatures and Representatives in the Fifty-first and Fifty-second Congresses; but said State governments shall remain in abeyance until the States shall be admitted into the Union, respectively, as provided in this act. In case the constitution of any of said proposed States shall be ratified by the people, but not otherwise, the Legislature thereof may assemble, organize, and elect two Senators of the United States; and the governor and secretary of state of such proposed State shall certify the election of the Senators and Representatives in the manner required by law; and when such State is admitted into the Union the Senators and Representatives shall be entitled to be admitted to seats in Congress and to all the rights and privileges of Senators and Representatives of other States in the Congress of the United States; and the officers of the State governments formed in pursuance of said constitutions, as provided by the constitutional convention, shall proceed to exercise all the functions of such State officers; and all laws in force made by said Territories, at the time of their admission into the Union, shall be in force in said States, except as modified or changed by this act or by the constitutions of the States, respectively.

SEC. 25. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act, whether passed by the Legislatures of said Territories or by Congress, are hereby repealed.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Mr. President, as the Senate has observed, I know, from the close attention given the reading of the substitute, this is a proposition to adopt an enabling act for Wyoming, Idaho, Arizona, and New Mexico, in lieu of the present bill to admit Wyoming under this constitution. I have, I think, given good reasons to the Senate why Wyoming ought not to be admitted in this irregular way, and why the constitution proposed by Wyoming ought not to be accepted by this body as a proper constitution for a State. I have the same objections to the proposed admission of Idaho, and what I propose is perfectly fair to those Territories and just to the remainder of the country. It is the regular, proper way to admit them, that we shall now pass an enabling act which shall authorize all four of these Territories to organize conventions and to be admitted into the Union as States.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPOONER in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask for information. I do not know how the fact is. Have the people of Arizona and New Mexico, or any of them, made any application in any way, shape, manner, or form for the passage of an enabling act?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. There have been, I think, twenty-seven Legislatures in the Territory of New Mexico since it was a Territory, and of those twenty-seven more than half have memorialized Congress asking to be admitted. As far back as 1850 when, under the treaty of 1848 the honor of the United States having been pledged that that Territory should be admitted as a State within a reasonable time, when they believed they had a right then to come in as a State, they had a convention called under an act of the Legislature, which organized a constitution, submitted it to the people, it was ratified, they elected members to this body and members to the House of Representatives, and they were not admitted. Again and again have they had constitutional conventions, and every session of Congress they are here asking for admission.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President—

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I am endeavoring to answer the Senator's question.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator misapprehended my question, however, or he would not have made the answer he did.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Then I will listen again.

Mr. MITCHELL. Have the people of Arizona and New Mexico presented any application or memorial to this Congress? I should like to have that answered.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I can not say whether memorials have been presented.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. REAGAN. The people of the Territory of New Mexico had a constitutional convention this last summer and fall, and adopted a constitution with a view to its presentation, and I suppose it has been presented, though I do not know the fact, with a request for admission.

Mr. STEWART. They did not submit the constitution—

Mr. REAGAN. They adopted a constitution by delegates in convention.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas has the floor.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. STEWART. I say New Mexico failed to submit her constitution to the people after she had adopted it. The other Territories did, Idaho and Wyoming.

Mr. PLATT. There is a bill pending here now for the submission of that constitution in New Mexico to the people and the admission of New Mexico as a State if the people ratify that constitution, and they are divided down there about whether they want to be admitted, or if they do, whether they want to be admitted in that way. The Republicans want to come in that way, and the Democrats do not. That is the situation down there.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut—

Mr. REAGAN. Will the Senator allow me—

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. REAGAN. The Democrats have a most excellent reason for not desiring it, as the Territory was so gerrymandered that there was but one single Democratic delegate allowed to go to the convention.

Mr. PLATT. I am exceedingly glad to know that the Senator from Texas is so thoroughly opposed to gerrymandering, and I hope he will have an opportunity to express that opposition in an official way before long.

Mr. REAGAN. I am no more in favor of Congressional gerrymandering than I am of State gerrymandering.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The Senator from Connecticut has perhaps sufficiently answered the inquiry of the Senator from Oregon; but I will say in addition, in answer to his question, that New Mexico has a Delegate in the House of Representatives, and that Delegate has introduced bill after bill for the admission of New Mexico. He made a speech that I remember, delivered last January a year ago, in the last Congress, urging that that Territory be admitted. The Senator from Oregon is perfectly well aware of the fact that at the time the States of South and North Dakota and Montana and Washington were admitted, in that bill New Mexico was provided for, and was dropped out in the conference committee.

There was some reason for that. We have all our own views about the reasons why these things are so. As some allusions have just been made by the Senator from Connecticut to the political bearing of this question, I will say now I believe the reason why New Mexico was dropped out at that time was because the conviction prevailed with the majority here that New Mexico would be Democratic if she came in as a State, and because the intention was in the admission of new States to increase the hold of the Republican party and to make their hold, if possible, securer on the Government of the United States.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. If the Senator will permit me to answer one Senator at a time (I think I have now about six on my hands), as soon as I get through with the others I will with the greatest pleasure yield to the Senator from Connecticut and hear what he has to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas declines to yield.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I want to say in further reply to the question of the Senator from Oregon that again and again for the Territory of New Mexico bills have been presented here to allow her to become a State. The bills have been pending in the other House for a long time at this session. The bills for the admission of Wyoming and Idaho have passed the House; that for the admission of New Mexico has not passed. Recently, upon the urgent solicitation of some gentlemen, the committee of the Senate, have taken up and are now considering a bill proposing to admit New Mexico.

I said in the first part of my remarks that there had been a convention called in New Mexico which was as irregular in every respect as the convention held in Wyoming and in Idaho; that I am opposed to the admission of New Mexico upon that constitution; and that I am in favor of proceeding in a regular way and allowing all those Territories to come in in the proper way by passing an enabling act for all four. That proposed act I have just had read to the Senate, and I hope it will receive the careful consideration of the body.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator said that he thought the reason why New Mexico was not included in the act for the admission of certain States in the last Congress was because of a conviction on the part of the majority in the Senate that New Mexico would be Democratic, if admitted. I wish to say with regard to New Mexico, that for the last four years the leading Republicans of New Mexico have been urging the point upon me that if New Mexico were admitted it would be purely a Republican State, and whatever I have done about delaying the admission of New Mexico has not been because I thought it would be a Democratic State, but upon grounds which affected in my mind the question as to whether she is fit for statehood. I believe to-day that the admission of New Mexico with the other four States which were admitted would have given us two more Republican Senators on this floor at this time, and I believe that its admission at any time within the next two years would give us two Republican Senators and a Republican Representative in the other House.

Mr. FRYE. Is not the percentage of illiteracy there very great?

Mr. PLATT. I wish to acquit myself of any charge that I have not favored the immediate admission of New Mexico upon the ground that I thought it was likely to be a Democratic State.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Mr. President, I stated the impression that I had about the reason why New Mexico did not come in. We have considered the objections that have been presented to that Territory again and again. I do not believe they are well founded. If you accept as true the widest and broadest charges that may be made against the people of that Territory, there might be something in them; but that the charges which have been made have been refuted again and again by intelligent and honorable men, by Republicans, there can be no sort of question. Considering the fact that New Mexico has more population, has more wealth, and is the oldest of the Territories, I can not conceive of any valid reason why she should not have been admitted with the earliest of those that came in.

In spite of the fact that the Republican politicians of New Mexico have told the Senator from Connecticut that that Territory would be Republican, I do not believe that anybody thinks that would be true with a fair election. It may be that if you should admit that Territory with its gerrymandered apportionment as it stands now under this constitution, considering the fact that there was but one Democrat allowed to go to the constitutional convention and the rest were absolutely legislated out, you might by some such means hold that Territory and make it Republican, but in any fair election I do not believe that any reasonable man would for one moment suppose that there is any foundation in the world for that belief.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. With the greatest pleasure.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is the Senator from Arkansas aware that a Republican Senate more than fourteen years ago passed a bill through this body admitting New Mexico as a State in the Union, and that that bill was defeated by a Democratic House the same year?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I am aware that there was a failure to admit New Mexico in 1876, and I am aware that in a number of other instances there were failures, and I know one reason and another has been presented why that was not done. I will not undertake to go into that now, but I will begin, in connection with the proposed substitute which I have had read to the Senate, to give the reasons why I am in favor of the passage of that amendment.

I called the attention of the Senate awhile ago to a charge made in a newspaper published in Wyoming that there had been fraudulent voting, and showing an instance of it that was given. I stated the fact that it was flatly and positively denied in the other House; but that no paper, no certificate, that nothing more than the ipse dixit of some gentleman on the floor of the House has ever been presented in opposition to this is a significant fact. I propose now to read it. I wanted to read it to the Senate at the time I called attention to it because I wanted to state it exactly as it was stated in the paper. I propose now to read the statement to which I allude, taken from a Wyoming paper:

One of the arguments used before the Legislature in favor of Weston County is that Newcastle is the banner town of Crook County, and the 300-odd votes credited to Newcastle at the constitutional election are pointed to with great pride as proof of the assertion. We should think that that particular election would be given a wide berth, especially by Newcastle. There was no election there on that day, but three persons, each of whom we could name, went into a back room and conducted a cigar-box election. No one else was present, and these men marked the tickets and dropped them into the slot of the cigar-box.

How 7 votes came to be cast against the constitution arose from the fact that one of the parties, after nearly all the tickets had been cast, exclaimed, "I'm d-d tired of voting for the same man all the time; I'm going to vote for the other fellow." And he accordingly dropped in 7 votes with "Yes" scratched out. The cigar-box, the ballots, and a tally-sheet giving the result, were sent here, the same canvassed at this point, and with the other, but bona fide returns forwarded to Cheyenne, where they were duly recorded. And that is how Newcastle came to be the "banner town" of Crook County.

The above particulars were related to us by one of the trio who conducted the cigar-box election, and a gentleman whose word is as good as gold. As there was no color of legality about the election in Crook County, the scheme was devised and carried out more in a spirit of levity than otherwise, and it was not thought the returns would be forwarded to Cheyenne and made a part of the record.

Now, when a charge of this kind can be made, although it is denied as I have stated, but when it is possible that a charge of this sort of fraud can be made, and we can not deny that if it had been the truth the parties would have gone scot-free and could not have been punished, I ask in the name of common sense how the Senate can consider a constitution adopted in that way as representing the voice of the people. You tell me here that 6,000 votes were cast in favor of the constitution in Wyoming. This statement here comes, taken from a Wyoming paper, that four hundred of those votes were put in a cigar-box by three men at a little town in Crook County. How many were in the same way cast by other parties elsewhere nobody can tell; God only knows. This thing in no sense can be said to represent the intelligent people of Wyoming. It was not in any sense a fair election, and is entitled to no support and no consideration at the hands of this body.

We have upon the Calendar a bill to admit Idaho under a constitution adopted in a similar way by an election called by the governor, without authority of Congress or without authority from the Legislature, held without any penalties in regard to the purity of the ballot-box; and in that constitution we have a provision which in so many words forbids Mormons from voting. It does not mention them by name, but it is so framed in a long section that I will not take the time of the Senate to read that it means that Mormons shall not be allowed to vote in Idaho. In Wyoming, right by the side of it, you propose at the same time to permit Mormons to vote.

We have on the Calendar of this body a bill reported within a day or two from the Committee on Territories proposing to disfranchise all Mormons in Utah. We have a bill on the Calendar proposing to disfranchise the Mormons of Arizona Territory, proposing to disfranchise the Mormons everywhere except in Wyoming; and you propose to admit this Territory here with its constitution authorizing the Mormons to vote, who are disfranchised everywhere else, and allowing their wives to vote besides.

Mr. MORGAN. How many wives?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I do not know. This constitution does not make any reference to that.

Mr. VANCE. That depends upon the constitution of the individual rather than of the Territory. [Laughter.]

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. But seriously, Mr. President, how can the Senate vote for the admission of one of these Territories with this sort of a constitution and then vote for the admission of the other with exactly the reverse? How can you do it? There is no consistency in it. There is no right or justice in it. If one is a proper policy the other is not. If it is a proper thing to disfranchise Mormons in Idaho, Utah, and Arizona, Mormons ought to be disfranchised in all the Territories just as well; there ought not to be any discrimination. What is the reason of that I do not know. I am not sufficiently familiar with it, but I suppose that some political considerations have entered into it.

Mr. President, I believe that it is perfectly fair and right and just that the Senate should pass a bill authorizing these four Territories to organize constitutions for themselves. I wish to call the attention of the Senate now just one moment to a comparison between these four Territories. We have some authentic data about them. Wyoming was organized a Territory on the 25th of July, 1868, and is about twenty-two years old. Idaho was organized as a Territory on the 3d of March, 1863. Arizona was organized on the 24th of February, 1863, and is therefore older than both Wyoming and Idaho. New Mexico was organized September 9, 1850. In point of area, Idaho is the smallest, and has 84,200 square miles, Wyoming the next smallest, with 97,575 square miles, Arizona comes next with 112,920 square miles, and New Mexico goes beyond and above all of her sisters, not only in point of age, but in extent of territory, and has 123,460 square miles—twice as large as all New England put together.

In 1880, when we had a census taken, the population of Wyoming was 20,789. That same year the population of Idaho was 32,610. The Territory of Arizona in the same year had 40,440, twice as many as Wyoming and 8,000 more than Idaho, while New Mexico, this step-child of the Union, this Territory that has been for forty years a Territory, had a population in 1880 of 119,565. The valuation of property in Wyoming was, according to the census, $20,000,000; in Idaho it was $12,000,000; in Arizona it was $23,000,000; and in New Mexico it was $30,000,000.

So you have the fact staring you in the face, Mr. President, that New Mexico is the oldest, is the largest, is the most populous, and is the wealthiest of the four Territories; yet when we admit that we have no right to keep a Territory in the condition of a Territory any longer than it has the necessary population and wealth, we propose to admit two Territories younger in years, poorer by millions, with fewer inhabitants, as States in this Union, while we are not even talking about admitting New Mexico or Arizona. This is a monstrous injustice. It is absolutely astounding that such a state of things shall exist.

I know the old story that is being constantly used against New Mexico, that there is a lot of Mexicans down there. There is hardly a man to be found in New Mexico who was not born an American citizen. And, under the Constitution of the United States, when he was born under the flag he became one of its citizens, whether he can speak a word of English or not. When the history of that Territory is considered for a moment I am astonished that gentlemen here should hesitate to accord her the right of statehood. When, in 1861, this country was convulsed by a war from one side to the other, when an armed force went up from Texas and was attempting to get possession of the northwestern part of the Union, New Mexico, Southern as she was, down on the Rio Grande, under a burning sun, rallied to the flag of the Union and drove back the invading force. They made a record, so far as the war goes, that any State in the Union North would be proud of. Yet you say they are not sufficiently intelligent, not sufficiently loyal, that they have not sufficient wealth, to be welcomed into the sisterhood of States.

Mr. President, these things do not come from nothing. There is something beyond and behind all this, and I stated my honest conviction when I stated awhile ago that it was because the conservative and patriotic people down there are largely Democratic. That is the reason she has not been a State long ago.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. With pleasure.

Mr. PAYNE. I will state to the Senator from Arkansas that I hold in my hand a document relating to the Territory of New Mexico which was presented by a large delegation from that Territory and I have no doubt gives very accurate data as to the resources and extent of the Territory. If it will not interfere with him, and it will rest him a few moments, I will send it to the desk and have it read.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I should be very glad to have it read.

Mr. PAYNE. I wish to say in explanation that a very large delegation from New Mexico appeared before the Committee on Education and Labor. The bill, which they honored me with a request to present and which has been introduced in the Senate, would permit them to make selections of lands for school purposes in that Territory. The delegation consisted of ex-governors and the governor of the Territory, the district attorney of the Territory, Federal judges and ex-judges of the Territory, the commissioner of schools of the Territory—certainly a very intelligent and competent delegation to express their views in reference to the Territory. At the request of that committee they, as a delegation, prepared the statement in regard to that Territory which I now ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The New Mexico delegation asks for the favorable consideration of Senate bill 3833, appropriating lands for educational purposes to said Territory for the following reasons, namely:

First. Because the lands asked to be appropriated were acquired from Old Mexico with a large foreign population.

Second. Because the Territory of New Mexico has been held in a Territorial condition for over forty years.

Third. Because there is no immediate prospect of New Mexico becoming a State.

Fourth. Because the people are poor, and are unable to educate themselves by taxation.

A tax sufficient to sustain the schools properly would be a great hardship, for the reason that Congress has failed to settle the land-grant titles, and there is very little real estate in the Territory subject to taxation. We ask for more than is ordinarily given to States, because 80 per cent. of the land is arid, therefore valueless without irrigation; and because fully 50 per cent. of the most valuable land is included within the land grants; and for the reason that for the last twenty years the most valuable land in the Territory has been selected by homesteaders, pre-emptors, cattle and sheep men, and is not now subject to selection; and also because of the large percentage of illiteracy, and because of the large proportion of inhabitants that do not understand the English language.

If we are not permitted to select these lands now for common schools, university, agricultural college, school of mines, and other purposes the lands left for selection will be comparatively worthless, as more railroads are now approaching the Territory, giving a prospect of an early and large increase of population.

New Mexico has an area of 123,000 square miles; has a population of fully 200,000; has of children of school age fully 70,000. The public records show an enrollment of 43,000 children, which does not include all those in attendance at private and denominational schools, which would add several thousand more. The levy for school purposes at present is three mills on the dollar, which, including the poll-tax, fines, licenses, etc., amounts in all to about $160,000 per annum. There are in the Territory 343 common schools; of these, 143 are exclusively English, 93 English and Spanish, and 106 exclusively taught in Spanish. The exclusively English schools are taught in the cities; the mixed in the cities and large settlements; those exclusively taught in Spanish are in the remote settlements off the railroads, where the people are too poor to engage English-speaking teachers.

The native population is very anxious to acquire an English education, and wherever an opportunity is offered they readily take advantage of it. They have made great progress within the past ten years, even with the poor advantages offered. The people desire and prefer free non-sectarian public schools. There is a good public-school system established by the local law, which, with a few amendments, will compare favorably with the common-school law of any State in the Union.

The United States has failed to protect the citizens against the hostile Indians, and until within the last four years a large proportion of the able-bodied citizens have been virtually under arms to protect their homes and families, and hundreds of thousands of dollars have been destroyed by hostile Indians and late Confederate troops, and not a dollar has been refunded. The Government has erected no public buildings in the Territory except one court-house, while in many other Territories the Government has erected capitol, penitentiary, and other buildings.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to have the Chief Clerk reread the clause which indicates the present population and the school statistics of the Territory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chief Clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

New Mexico has an area of 123,000 square miles; has a population of fully 200,000; has of children of school age fully 70,000. The public records show an enrollment of 43,000 children, which does not include all those in attendance at private and denominational schools, which would add several thousand more.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] asked me a few minutes ago if anybody in New Mexico and Arizona wanted to be admitted into the Union, in effect, and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] stated to the Senate that there was now under consideration a constitution in New Mexico and a proposition to admit the Territory as a State under that constitution. To show the unfairness of that, in the first place, and to show the desire on the part of the Territory, in the second place, to be admitted into the Union, I propose to read briefly from a speech delivered in the House of Representatives by the Delegate from that Territory.

Mr. GEORGE. By Mr. JOSEPH?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Mr. JOSEPH. He said:

The bill introduced by me in the early part of this session providing for the admission of New Mexico was merely an enabling act to permit the people of the Territory to form a State constitution under which they would be admitted to the Union. A constitution for New Mexico adopted by a convention composed almost exclusively of Republican delegates has been presented to this House, and I understand that a proposition has been placed before the Committee on Territories that New Mexico should be admitted under this constitution.

In opposing such a condition to the admission of New Mexico I believe that I represent not only the wishes of all the Democratic voters of the Territory, but of more than three-fourths of its Republican voters. An act was passed by the Territorial Legislature authorizing a constitutional convention, but the apportionment of delegates to this convention was characterized by the most outrageous partisanship. The following extract from a letter by ex-Governor Edwin G. Ross to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MANSUR], of January 5, 1890, shows the partisan nature of the apportionment of delegates and the action of the Democratic voters and Democratic central committee of New Mexico:

This is a quotation from Governor Ross's letter:

Primarily, that refusal was based on the exceeding unfairness of the apportionment fixed in the act of the Legislature authorizing the election of the delegates to the convention. That apportionment made it impossible for the Democrats to elect anything approaching a proportionate representation in that convention. It was so fixed with the avowed purpose, by the reputed author of the convention bill, of preventing such a representation.

Including and since the election of 1892 the popular vote of the Territory for Delegate in Congress has been Democratic by more than 1,500 majority at every election, though by reason of an equally unfair apportionment for the election of members of the Legislature (which was made the basis of the apportionment for the election of the convention), the several Legislatures have uniformly been Republican.

To illustrate that unfairness a few examples will suffice.

The counties of Colfax and Mora are contiguous northern counties. At the last general election they cast, respectively, 1,680 and 2,212 votes, or an aggregate of 3,892—Democratic by majorities of 168 and 700, respectively. They were each allowed four delegates in the convention, making eight. The county of Bernalillo is Republican by 430 majority. It has a voting population of 3,564, 328 less than Colfax and Mora, yet was given ten delegates, two more than were allowed the larger number of voters in Colfax and Mora.

The Democratic county of Doña Ana, with 2,015 voters, was allowed three delegates, while the Republican county of Valencia, with 2,064 voters, was allowed six.

The Democratic county of Grant, with 2,297 voters, had three delegates, while the Republican county of Socorro, with 2,524 voters, had six.

These data were before the convention, and there can be no justification of these inequalities.

These constitute one-half of the counties and more than one-half of the population of the Territory, and fairly illustrate the character of the system of apportionment that has prevailed in the election of our Legislatures and of delegates to this constitutional convention.

To have gone into that election under such conditions would have been folly and suicidal.

The Democrats were practically and intentionally disfranchised, but, unwilling to be placed in the attitude of obstructionists until all efforts for a compromise should have failed, it was determined to seek an arrangement whereby this unjust disparity could be at least partially remedied, and they permitted, without an absolute sacrifice of self-respect, to contest the election of delegates to the convention.

Accordingly a conference between the central committees of the two political parties was asked and had.

The whole number of delegates to the convention was 73. Though in a large majority on the popular vote, and believing themselves entitled to and could elect, with a fair apportionment, a corresponding majority of the delegates, the Democratic committee proposed to concede to the Republicans, as the basis of an arrangement under which they would consent to go into the election, a majority of 3 in the convention.

That more than fair proposition was rejected by the Republican committee, and it was then determined to take no part in the election.

Now, on a constitution framed by a convention called under circumstances like that the Committee on Territories are now considering the propriety of admitting New Mexico and of submitting that constitution to the people when the Democrats were absolutely disfranchised. I agree with the Senator from Connecticut that if he means to admit New Mexico under this constitution adopted with this infamous apportionment, in all human probability New Mexico will be Republican, although it has elected uniformly, without a solitary exception, I believe, a Democratic Delegate to the House of Representatives.

At the last election for Delegate to Congress—

Says Mr. JOSEPH—

a vote of nearly 32,000 was polled. At the election for delegates to the constitutional convention so great was the disapprobation of the people for the methods used in calling this constitutional convention, which should have been as free from partisanship as possible, that the total vote for delegates was but little in excess of 7,000.

Here is a convention elected by a total vote of a little over 7,000 people in this Territory, and that is to be accepted as a fair constitution for that Territory and as adopted by its people. It is a fine parallel with the Territory of Wyoming which is proposed to be admitted by a vote of 6,000. Neither of these can be held by any fair-minded man as being properly adopted by the people of either Territory.

It seems to me but fair and just and reasonable, in view of this manifest unfairness, that we should have an enabling act that will allow a fair, a full, and a free vote upon this question, and then let them come in as they choose. There certainly ought to be no objection to doing this. It seems to me to be absolutely unreasonable that anybody should complain that these inequalities be got rid of before these Territories become States.

The framers of that constitution—

Says Mr. JOSEPH—

knew so well that it could not receive the approbation of a majority of the voters of the Territory that they made no provision in it, nor has the Legislature since made any provision, for its submission to the people.

We understand from the Senator from Connecticut, the chairman of the committee, who has charge of these measures, that they are now considering the propriety of admitting this Territory as a State, submitting first this constitution to a vote of the people, knowing perfectly well that the adoption of any such measure will be a simple and a hollow mockery, and that the people of New Mexico if they had the opportunity to vote upon this question would stamp and spit upon it; that they will repudiate it; that they will have none of it. Thereby, then, it can be said hereafter that New Mexico might have been a State in the Union but for her own obstinacy and willfulness; that she spurned a proposition by Congress to admit her into the Union, offering a constitution that every man in the Senate must know is scorned by the large majority of the people of the Territory. It can not be possible that any such thing can be considered a fair proposition to admit New Mexico into the Union.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator allow me a single interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. With pleasure.

Mr. PLATT. I think the Senator ought to state, when he is making these wholesale charges with relation to the constitution and how it is regarded by the people of New Mexico, that a committee consisting of thirty or forty of the prominent citizens of New Mexico, who came here to urge legislation of other character in favor of land-grant legislation, composed both of Republicans and Democrats, appeared before our committee and asked us to do that very same thing. Here is the hearing before the committee, and, whatever political differences may have existed, they certainly sank them for that occasion and recommended that the Territory should be admitted upon the submission of that constitution.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. That is true, and it is also true that the gentlemen who were present there then said they were acting for themselves, and that they believed they were representing the people of the Territory and that that would be satisfactory to the people of the Territory; but the Democrats present and in the committee, in the presence of the Senator from Connecticut and all the rest of us, that it was because there had been an agreement come to between the Democrats and Republicans that this unfair and monstrous apportionment should be corrected, and it was because they were willing to trust them and believed that they would make that correction.

But there is the proposition; it stands there; and its unfairness can not be successfully questioned. It was not questioned by the Republicans who were present before the committee, and the Democrats who appeared there themselves made the charge that this unfairness existed, but that they were willing to trust them to make a correction and it was agreed to by both sides; but not one solitary word fell from the lips of any human being questioning one word of all these charges of unfairness and gross injustice.

Mr. PLATT. There was not anything said about it, that I remember, in that hearing.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I remember it distinctly, and the record will show it, if the Senator will read it, if the stenographer took it down. If he did not, I can find the man who said it.

Mr. President, the present governor of the Territory of New Mexico is a Republican. He has lived for some years in that Territory. He appreciates the troubles, the hardships, and the unfairness of being kept in this state of tutelage for so many years, and he is anxious that the Territory should be admitted. In reply to the charges that have been made as to the qualifications of the citizens of New Mexico to become citizens, I want to read an extract or two from his report to the Secretary of the Interior for 1889, the last report. He says:

The people of New Mexico were disappointed that, in the final action of Congress last spring relative to the admission of new States, our Territory was not included. The House of Representatives passed the admission bill, but the Senate refused concurrence, and in the conference committee New Mexico was omitted.

In fact we felt more than disappointed, for we had an obvious right to admission far exceeding that of any other Territory except Dakota. New Mexico was a much older Territory than either of those admitted; its population largely exceeded that of Montana or Washington; it had a special right to self-government under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo; it had only failed of admission in 1876 by an accident, after the enabling act had passed both Houses of Congress by large majorities; its resources were both greater and more varied, and its population was better adapted for safe and conservative self-government than that of other sections of the West.

I should like to call right there the attention of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] to the fact that when he attempted to make the point awhile ago that in 1876 the Senate passed a bill admitting New Mexico and a Democratic House refused to admit it, the Republican governor says that both Houses passed an enabling act, but I suppose passed separate acts, and because it was not the same bill it failed to become a law. But both Houses of Congress passed it.

This refusal to admit has forced us to recognize that there is a prejudice in the older States against New Mexico, which, although based solely on ignorance of our condition, yet is none the less powerful and injurious. One idea prevalent in the East is that New Mexico is not prepared for statehood. On the contrary no Territory ever had such thorough preparation. For forty years she has been electing her Legislatures and enacting her laws, the only officers usual in States and now appointed by outside authority being the governor, secretary, and supreme judges. As long ago as 1850 she adopted a State constitution and elected her governor and senators, and was only kept out by the adoption of the celebrated "compromise measures" of that year.

Twenty years afterwards she held a constitutional convention which formulated a constitution really admirable in its provisions. In 1876 the bill to admit her to statehood passed both Houses of Congress, and only by non-concurrence in an amendment failed to become a law.

Another common objection is that the ratio of illiteracy is high. That this is true of the older native population no one will deny. But that condition is being rapidly changed. Official reports show that the ratio was reduced 20 per cent. in five years, and Governor Ross stated in a recent letter to the President: "In no community have more persistent and successful efforts been inaugurated for the promotion of public education than in New Mexico within the last few years."

The clause which I have just read was from Governor Ross. Governor Prince goes on to say:

She has many hundreds of public schools, and a larger share of her general taxation is appropriated to education than in any State. That she has no school fund is simply because she is a Territory, and not a State, and admission will provide fully for that. The people are eager for education, and but few of the new generation will not speak English. Besides the public schools there is an unusual number of colleges, academies, and private schools.

To many the character of the population seems to be a bugbear, but this is because the facts are entirely misunderstood.

Only a few months ago a leading journal of national influence spoke of "four-fifths of the population" as being "peon Aztec Indians," whatever they may be! It is true that we may have about 10,000 Pueblo Indians in the Territory; but, in the first place, they are remarkably far from being "peons," and, secondly, they do not vote in Territorial elections, though, if they did, their character is such that they would be a good element in any body politic.

I wish Senators would bear in mind that this is a statement made by the Republican governor, the present governor of the Territory appointed by this Administration, who occupied the position of chief-justice under administrations there before, who has been a resident of the Territory for a number of years and is familiar with the people. He has studied the condition of things there, and he ought to be, and I believe is, a straightforward, intelligent, honest man.

But to the uninformed—

He goes on to say—

the large number of voters of Spanish descent is looked upon as a grave misfortune. There could not be greater mistake. It is the possession of that conservative element in connection with the energetic and enterprising American from the East which gives New Mexico her special advantages as a self-governing community over most other Territories. Every one familiar with the far West knows that the principal danger in new communities arises from the unsettled and irresponsible character of much of the population. The inhabitants are continually changing. The number of men through all that region with whom two years is a long residence in any one place is astonishing.

The habit of moving is upon them, and they are always looking for some new place to which to migrate. An average change of 10 per cent. each year in the population of the towns is less than the registry lists will show. Of course there are many solid, substantial citizens; but this restless, nomadic population constitutes an element that is always active, aggressive, and noisy. They are eager for office, ready to vote for any amount of bonds and taxation, and to their irresponsible action are principally due the heavy indebtedness and not infrequent bankruptcy of so many Western cities and counties. They do the mischief and are gone before its effects are felt.

The chief danger in a new community comes from this class of men and from the overenthusiasm of others who think that life in the new West is a continual boom; and many a State and Territory has suffered from it. But New Mexico runs no such risk. She has a solid, stable, responsible, and conservative element in her native population which counteracts the danger. They are attached to the soil and have no thought of leaving. They are identified with the country and naturally opposed to rash schemes which involve extravagant expense and debt. By themselves they might be too slow and non-progressive, but mixed with our overzealous Americans, they form an admirable combination. It is this conservative element which makes New Mexico far more ready in many respects for safe self-government than most other Territories can hope to be for years.

Mr. President, I commend this conservative, carefully prepared statement of the governor of the Territory, made over his official signature, to the thoughtful consideration of all American citizens, and especially to that class of men who believe that New Mexico can not safely be admitted on account of her population.

But there are numbers of other things in this connection which I will not have time to allude to. I am already fatigued to such an extent that I shall have to conclude in a few minutes.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] asks to have restated again the statement made by the committee as to their population a short time ago, and in that connection I will call attention to a statement made by the governor:

The only estimate of population made since 1885 is that prepared by the Territorial bureau of immigration in 1889, which reads as follows, San Juan County having been formed in 1887 from territory which in 1889 belonged to Taos County and in 1885 to Rio Arriba.

I will not go through all the counties, but each county is named and the population in each county is given, aggregating 204,090 population, according to this official statement, in the Territory. The governor upon this says:

I am inclined to think that this is somewhat too high an estimate, and that the real population is below rather than above 200,000. The registration of voters just prior to the election of 1888 is probably the best index that we have to the exact number, although the ratio of men over twenty-one to the remaining population varies somewhat in the different counties, those in which there are many miners and ranchmen, who are usually without families, containing of course a larger proportion of voters. The following table gives the number of voters registered in each county in 1888, and an estimate in round numbers of the population based on that registration, which, I believe, is as nearly accurate as we can hope to obtain before the next census.

And here he gives the counties with a registration of 42,871, and he estimates the population at 195,500. Now the estimates are a little below 200,000.

In the Territory of Wyoming, which we are proposing to admit with objectionable features in the constitution, the Senator from Connecticut claims in his extreme limit a population of 125,000. I have shown that, if that is correct, perhaps not one-tenth of the voting population cast their votes to ratify this constitution, and if he is not right, if the estimates made by this committee are correct they have fifty or sixty thousand in that Territory which we propose now to make haste to admit into this galaxy of States, and the Territory of New Mexico with 200,000 is compelled to remain a stepchild and to be kept out for an indefinite time. Is there any justice in that? It seems to me the injustice of it would demand a rebuke at the hands of every fair-minded, right-thinking man.

There are a number of other things which are presented by the governor, but as one of the chief objections made to the admission of this Territory has been on account of its condition as to education, I will only allude to that very briefly and then conclude. This Republican governor said on the subject of education:

There is a constant improvement in educational matters in the Territory, and their condition, while not entirely satisfactory, is very encouraging. The territorial auditor, Hon. Trinidad Alarín, in publishing his annual statement, which is condensed from the school reports of county officers, says:

"The progress made in the public schools is quite encouraging, and by working all together in favor of education I hope to see the public schools in the Territory as prosperous as any in the Union. Our people are taking a sincere interest in the advancement of education."

Our school law is by no means perfect and is specially defective in not providing a Territorial superintendent as a responsible head of the system of public education. This, as well as other defects, will be remedied as soon as the State constitution goes into effect, as it contains excellent provisions on the subject.

The lack of a school fund is a serious drawback to successful work, but without special Congressional action the lands reserved for this purpose are not available while New Mexico continues a Territory. Allusion is made to this under its appropriate head.

I have not been able to obtain as complete statistics as are desirable, but the following figures are substantially correct:

Number of pupils enrolled (three counties estimated).....	16,803
Average daily attendance (two counties estimated).....	12,394
Number of male teachers (four counties estimated).....	303
Number of female teachers (four counties estimated).....	185

These figures refer to public schools only. Our private educational institutions, colleges, seminaries, academies, etc., are numerous, well conducted, and successful. All of these are conducted in English.

In view of a prevalent misconception at the East as to the languages in which our public schools are taught, I have endeavored to procure information on that subject, but have not heard from all the counties. The following figures show the number of schools taught in English, the number taught in Spanish, and the number in which both languages are used in each of the counties named.

The aggregate is 342 schools, of which 143 are taught in English, 106 in Spanish, and 93 in both languages. When the delegates from that Territory were before the Committee on Territories and were asked about the number of schools taught in Spanish they gave this solution, which struck me as being perfectly reasonable: In the remote neighborhoods, in the cañons of the mountains, where settlements are sparse and very few people live, the older residents have been there for a long time. They speak Spanish. They learned it from their fathers. It is the language of their families, it is the language, the only language of that country, and when undertaking to get some little education, not having access to the public schools, not having free access to educational advantages, they must secure teachers in the best way they can get them, and young people are picked up in the neighborhood and employed to teach these little schools, as everybody well understands that knows anything about country schools. It is not because they have any objection to the English language, not because every New Mexican is not anxious to have his children taught English, but because they are peculiarly unable to do it.

The sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections of public lands were given to the new States of the West to aid in the cause of education, and you have given magnificent school funds to these Territories, and you propose now to give large quantities of land to this Territory of Wyoming which you are about to admit; limiting the smallest price to $10 an acre, it will be a magnificent school fund for the people of the Territory; but New Mexico, with all the difficulties and troubles she has had to contend with, is not to be given at the same time the same fair consideration that we give to other localities. How can they improve their condition, how can they educate their children, unless the Government will give them the same sort of assistance that we propose to give to the others?

If we compare the educational condition of New Mexico with that of other Territories, with a population of 200,000 intelligent citizens who are devoted to the flag and have made a record as honorable as that of any State in the Union in the trying hour of the nation's trouble, is it not the proper thing to give them the same rights that you give to other States, and the record they will show will be as entirely satisfactory, not only to the Territory, but it will be an honor to them.

Now, upon the condition of society in the Territory, this community that the Senator from Connecticut is unwilling to have authorized to organize a State, I wish to call attention to a statement made by the governor in this respect and then I will leave the subject:

I can not close this report without a word as to the admirable condition of society which exists.

Mr. GEORGE. Who is that?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The present governor of New Mexico, Governor L. Bradford Prince, a Republican:

I can not close this report without a word as to the admirable condition of society which exists and the quiet and good order which is everywhere prevalent in the Territory. My first experience in New Mexico, as chief-justice in 1879, was at a time when the advancing railroads were bringing an influx of the violent and vicious into New Mexico, from which it suffered for several years. The rough class of men supposed to be characteristic of border life were also represented in our population at that time, and the courts were well occupied by the criminal business alone. The native population, however, was, as a rule, law-abiding and respectful to authority and was chargeable with but few crimes.

The years have wrought a great change. The horde that followed the railroad has passed on to other lands, only leaving a few representatives in our penitentiary. The desperado and the "bold bad man" have disappeared. The days of Billy the Kid, of Rudebaugh, and Hoodoo Brown are long since over, and one can scarcely realize that such characters ever existed among us.

No more peaceful or safe community is to be found in the whole land. Crime is more rare than in staid New England, and one may traverse the whole Territory on horseback alone without danger. A recent fact presents a strong illustration of this peaceful condition.

The county of Lincoln is of great size. It contains over 26,500 square miles and exceeds in area the four New England States of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut, with New Jersey and Delaware added. It borders on Texas, and it is devoted principally to ranching and mining. Its sheriff is an efficient officer, who would let no criminal escape. I visited that county during last July, and examined its jail. It was empty! There was not a single man undergoing imprisonment there, nor one in confinement awaiting trial! I submit that no similar area in the whole country can show such a record as that.

Now, Mr. President, when we have the governor of New Mexico, a man whose character is certainly not to be impeached by any gentleman in sympathy with this Administration, telling us that this is the state of society in New Mexico, how can a friend of the Administration and of that party stand in his place on the other side of this Chamber and say he is an unwilling to admit New Mexico because he is not quite satisfied that the people are fit to govern themselves?

Mr. President, I have about exhausted myself, and I know I have exhausted the patience of the Senate, but some of the other gentlemen who are serving upon the Committee on Territories with me are away and I have endeavored to present as concisely as possible the reasons why this Territory of Wyoming ought not to be admitted under the present proposed constitution, the reasons why it is fair and right and proper that it shall come into the Union as a State, but that it ought to be done in a regular and proper way, and that the other Territories ought to do the same thing.

I have presented this amendment which provides an enabling act for these four Territories, hoping that the calm, deliberate judgment and consideration of this body will justify the passage of such a bill and its enactment into law, and that we may soon see these four Territories take their places as States.

I have not time just now to go over the resources of Arizona. It is next to New Mexico in point of area. It was next to her in 1880 in population and wealth, and while we have no definite and specified data by which we can compare her with the others now, it is a reasonable supposition that she has held her own with the others. There is this circumstance about it: It is stated that there has not been one solitary acre of public land surveyed in Arizona in twelve years. What the purpose is, what the reason is, why it should be so, I do not know. It would seem that the public lands ought to be surveyed, so that if people desire to go there to live they should have the privilege of doing so. Just why this is so I can not say, but it will be taken into consideration in connection with the other fact that while the older Territories are more populous, and while they are larger and wealthier than those north of them, there is an unwillingness on the part of Congress to pass any law that will allow them to become States, while they are making haste to admit the others which have not the same claims to consideration for admission into the Union.

Mr. GEORGE. What is the proportion of the public lands not surveyed in Arizona to those in the other Territories?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I can not say about that. It is a very large proportion. But a very small part of them has been surveyed.

Mr. President, New Mexico has been a Territory for forty years. As I said awhile ago, there have been twenty-seven Legislatures in that Territory. More than half of them have memorialized Congress to be admitted into the Union. Once, in 1874, the Legislature called a constitutional convention; a constitution was adopted and submitted to the people, and there were 40,000 votes cast for a Delegate, and yet only 4,000 voted at all on the question of the ratification of the constitution, not because they did not want to be admitted into the Union; but because the call in their opinion had not been regular.

So conservative are these people, so observant are they of the proper way of doing things, so observant of legal rights and obligations, that they absolutely refused to vote upon the constitution which had been submitted to them by their own Legislature, because they had no enabling act. What a striking contrast with the action of the people of Wyoming and Idaho, who, notwithstanding Congress had given them no enabling act, nor had the Legislature of the Territory authorized it, but the governor, upon his own motion in each case, called a convention and submitted the constitution, which was voted for by a mere handful. I think that that circumstance alone speaks volumes in favor of the conservatism and patriotic loyalty of people of the Territory of New Mexico.

In the Forty-third Congress both Houses passed an enabling act for New Mexico, but, as I said awhile ago, on account of an amendment, it fell through and did not become a law. In the Forty-fourth Congress the Senate passed another enabling act for New Mexico. And yet with all this she is still kept out, and it seems that now she is as far from being admitted as ever before. I submit if we are to admit

New Mexico, if we are to allow these Southern Territories a fair and equal chance with the others, the proper thing to do is to pass an enabling act and to allow all four of these Territories to come into the Union.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I am glad that the Senator from Arkansas has come to the same conclusion that most of us have with regard to the propriety of admitting Wyoming as a State. There appears to be no difference of opinion that she ought to be admitted. The only question is whether we ought to admit some other Territories which are not applying, or whether to do it in some other way. It seems to me that we have got a very simple thing before us now to act upon, and there will be time enough to act upon New Mexico and Arizona when they are before us in the regular way.

The Territories of Idaho and Wyoming have both formed constitutions, submitted them to their people, and have applied for admission.

Neither New Mexico nor Arizona has done so; their cases are not before Congress on their motion at the present time, and I think it would be very well to act upon the question before us.

As to the criticisms on the constitution of Wyoming made by the Senator from Arkansas, they appear to be of no value, and the same is true of the criticisms made by the Senator from Missouri yesterday with regard to it. Their criticisms are directed to section 29 of the constitution, which reads:

No distinction shall ever be made by law between resident aliens and citizens as to the possession, taxation, enjoyment, and descent of property.

That is not different from any of the forty-two States in the Union. None of them make any such distinction at all. So far as the possession, taxation, enjoyment, and descent of property are concerned, all the States of the Union, so far as I am informed, treat alien residents the same as they do citizens.

Then if the constitution of Wyoming is in conformity with the practice of all the States in the Union, it seems to me there can be no objection to the admission of the Territory as a State because Congress did pass an act prohibiting the acquisition of public lands by aliens. That act was passed in order to meet the difficulties which were alleged, that they were buying up public lands so as to monopolize them. As to the necessity of that act, there is a difference of opinion. Certainly it has worked badly as to the development of the mines, and the Senate passed a bill in the last Congress, which failed in the other House, to change that, so far as the mines are concerned, on complete investigation and after full discussion of the whole subject. But it certainly can not be objected to this State that it proposes to do what the others do.

As to the question of woman suffrage, we refused in the case of Washington to interfere with that question at all, although we were pressed very hard to do so. We left it to the people of the State.

Surely we should not undertake to dictate on the question of suffrage in a State. If it was postponed any given length of time, if this proposed enabling act should pass, we should have a constitution presented in the same form. So far as the constitution is concerned, it is republican in form and a good constitution, and it can not be successfully criticised.

Then Wyoming being, as conceded by the Senator, qualified to be admitted as a State, having the requisite resources and the capacity to support a State government, it seems to me it is unfriendly to load the bill down with other amendments involving other questions after this has been considered and passed by the other House. Let us admit Wyoming and Idaho, and we shall then go on to treat the others fairly. I have no idea that there is any disposition on the part of any member of the Senate to treat any one of these Territories unfairly. They will all be treated fairly and be admitted as soon as their condition will warrant it. It is the disposition, I believe, on all sides to admit these Territories as soon as practicable and get them out of the Territorial condition, which is a very embarrassing and a very bad kind of government for people to live under and deny to them the right of self-government which the people of the State enjoy.

This bill having passed the other House, having been favorably reported at an early stage of the session in this body, and having been fully discussed and the State being entitled, according to the argument of the Senator who has just taken his seat, to admission, it seems to me the mode devised is as good as any that can be adopted.

I think we ought to act upon this bill for the admission of Wyoming and then upon the bill for the admission of Idaho, and then I will join the Senator from Arkansas in letting in the other Territories as States as fast as practicable, as fast as their condition and circumstances will warrant. I want to get the people in these distant parts of the country out of a Territorial condition, and that is the disposition of every member of the committee. We have got one case before us now. It is not a good practice to let several Territories in at a time, although we did have an omnibus bill at the last Congress, but a good many Senators thought it would have been better to act upon each of them separately.

We make no mistake in letting in Wyoming, for it is a Territory of vast resources. I will not stop to enumerate, although I might, for I have given it some special attention. Its coal mines are probably equal to those of any State in the Union. Its valleys and its mountains furnish a greater grazing field than can be found in almost any State in the Union. The natural grasses are of the most nutritious kind, and it has a vast amount of the finest agricultural country, and particularly the northern portion of it, on the headwaters of the Yellowstone and other streams, and there is an abundance of fruit and vegetables of all kinds. It has great agricultural resources and great mineral resources. Besides coal, it has iron and the precious metals, gold and silver, and it is a prosperous, growing community, wealthy and capable of coming into the Union. I do not see why this bill should be loaded down to keep this Territory out and wait for something else to turn up when we have got a Territory that is ready and fit to come in as a State with a constitution that can not be criticised successfully.

I do not see why we should delay. I do not see any issue we have got at all except to admit this Territory as a State.

Mr. REAGAN. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], I understood, desires to address the Senate, but seems not to be present, and I will say a few words on the subject of the admission of this Territory. I think it is unfortunate for the people of Wyoming and for the cause of good government throughout the Union that we can not consider this question upon the merits of the constitution and the circumstances which attend its formation and submission.

That condition is connected with another, which undoubtedly has its influence, that by the admission of this Territory as a State, whether its application for admission has been regular and proper or not and whether the provisions of its constitution are such as ought to be adopted or not, two Republican Senators will be added to the majority already here and one Republican member to the other House and three Republican members to the electoral college for President and Vice-President.

It seems to me that this suggestion is warranted by the fact that here comes before us a constitution which has been formed by a convention called by the governor of the Territory without any enabling act or authority of the Congress of the United States, and an election held upon a notice confessedly insufficient to give the people of that Territory time to consider and act upon the question, and under no authority which made a violation of the law in relation to the election an offense, but simply comes to us as the work of a sort of voluntary meeting of the people.

This, together with the other facts that come to our view, showing that so small a proportion of the people of the Territory voted on a question of so great moment, and connected with the further fact that plainly the constitution shows that political gerrymandering prevailed to such an extent as to disfranchise a very large portion of the people, are all questions that might well give us pause and thought before we admit this new State under this constitution.

I agree with the Senators who have criticised the provision of this constitution allowing aliens to become the owners of land in the proposed State, and I agree with the criticisms that have been made upon the provision allowing women to vote, and I say on that subject, if there had been proper authority for the calling of a convention, if time had been given in the calling of that convention for the people to consider the question before them, if a reasonably fair number of the people of that Territory had voted upon the ratification or rejection of the constitution, whether I agreed with them or not upon these two provisions, I would recognize their right to control their own policy and to adopt such institutions as suited them, they being republican in form. I do not propose to go over the discussion on these subjects, but I do propose to call attention very briefly to that provision authorizing female suffrage.

The chivalric sentiments of men naturally incline them to the sentimental in considering this question, but it is a great and grave question, in my judgment, which requires something more than sentiment for its solution.

Mr. President, this Government was organized and our State governments have been organized upon the idea that the people of this country are capable of self-government. They have been organized upon the idea that our governments, Federal and State, are governments of consent, governments of agreement amongst the people, as contradistinguished from the forms of government which prevail in other parts of the world. The old idea of government was, and the monarchical idea is, that governments must be so organized as to have repressive and coercive force sufficient to preserve order in society and to give security to life and person and property. That is the idea of the monarchies of the Old World.

One of the most distinguishing features of our Republican system of government is that it was exactly the reverse of this, that the Government should not have that power of repressing and coercing the people against their will, but that it was the people's Government, made by them, and for them, and administered for their benefit, and that they were capable by their intelligence and their virtue of organizing a government, enacting laws, and administering and enforcing laws so as to give repose to society and security to life, to person, and to property.

This was originally our theory of government. I submit, Mr. President, that we have made some dangerous progress upon the subject of suffrage already. If this Republic and the State governments are to be preserved, or rather if liberty and peace and security to life and person and property are to be preserved in them, it must be by the intelligence of the men who make and carry on the governments, the voters of this country.

Our Revolutionary fathers, in the organization of the early State governments, were so jealous of this as to be careful in nearly all the States to make provision, according to the doctrine laid down by Aristotle and sustained by many of the wisest men from his time, that both persons and property should be represented. Dr. Franklin's anecdote as to whether the mule or the man was entitled to vote did a good deal to dispel this conservatism, but it is too grave a subject to be controlled by anecdotes or sentiment.

We have ceased in all the States to regard it as necessary that property should at all be represented in our governments. We have adopted the idea in nearly all the States that persons alone are to be represented in the formation and organization of our governments. But we have gone beyond this. Instead of requiring qualifications showing the intelligence and capacity of the voter to organize, maintain, and support government in its true spirit, the appeals of demagogism to classes, in the hope of securing their votes, have made us do away with all our restriction upon the right of suffrage, and further they have caused us in this country to enfranchise everybody with the right of suffrage in most of the States.

It is so in the State which I have the honor in part to represent, and people who are not citizens, who have come to this country and merely declared their intentions to become citizens and been here six or twelve months, more or less, have been given the right of suffrage, so that men who come here familiarized with the monarchies of the Old World and looking to the Government as a great central power to control the conduct of the people by its paternal care, and having no conception of our dual system of government carried on by the people, come here with their ideas of a like kind about monarchies and the habits of monarchies, and we clothe them with the power to vote before many of them have been able to read the Constitution, and some of them are never able to read it. Before they know anything of our system of government and without reference to their character and intelligence, people of this sort are admitted to the franchise to make and carry on governments before they become citizens of the United States.

I know, Mr. President, that if I consulted the feelings of demagogues instead of those of the citizen looking to the welfare of the country and of good government, I should feel that this was dangerous ground to tread upon. While I have the honor of a place in the Senate or any other place where the question of good government shall arise, I trust that neither now nor at any other time shall I be found weak enough to seek popularity at the expense of good government.

That has been the trouble with us, and political parties have been running after power and hold out inducements and temptations to classes that they shall be enfranchised, so as to secure votes without reference to intelligence and virtue. I do not blame one party more than another. I blame them all alike. They are all reprehensible for the dangers which we encounter by forgetting that this is a Government to be carried on and perpetuated by the intelligence and the virtue of the people and omitting in the organizations of government to make any provision that intelligence and virtue shall rule in their formation and in the making of laws and the administrations of the governments.

Here we are now confronted with another view, that the women of the Territory of Wyoming are to become voters. That subject has been agitated for a great many years. It has obtained some foothold, to a greater or more limited extent, in several of the States, and we are told repeatedly by newspapers and by politicians of the demagogue order that it is a growing power and must be respected, that the party which stands in the way of it must go down before its numbers and its power.

Mr. President, I will not admit that any living man has greater respect for the women of the country than I have. I will not admit that any living man would go further to protect them in the enjoyment of all their rights than I would go. I will not agree that any living man should be willing to confer upon them privileges and advantages consonant with their nature, their sex, beyond what I would do.

But what are we going to do, what are the people of this Territory going to do by the adoption of this constitution? They are going to make men of women, and when they do that the correlative must take place that men must become women. So, I suppose we are to have women for public officers, and women to do military duty, women to work the roads, women to fight the battles of the country, and men to wash the dishes, men to nurse the children, men to stay at home while the ladies go out and make stump speeches in canvasses.

Now, Mr. President—

Mr. PADDOCK. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. REAGAN. Does the Senator wish to make an inquiry?

Mr. PADDOCK. The Senator is par excellence the best State-rights man here, or among the best. I should like to know of the Senator if the people of Texas were disposed to have female suffrage whether he would think it a proper subject for the Congress of the United States to consider and determine. I ask whether for that State and for the people of that State, under such circumstances, Congress should make expression as to what its rule of franchise should be or if he thinks it should intervene in respect of the same. Why, then, for an inchoate State, for a State just organizing its own government, on the popular sovereignty idea, in accordance with the views, and the wishes, and the policies thought to be the best by the people of such young State, or such Territory about to become a State, ought he to ask us to interfere? I ask the Senator if he does not think that a people thus organizing a State have not the same inherent right as his people would have without intervention on the part of Congress to fix their own rule of franchise, to frame their own institutions.

Mr. REAGAN. If the Senator from Nebraska had heard my opening remarks I do not think he would have felt called upon to ask me that question.

Mr. PADDOCK. I was unfortunate in that respect, I admit.

Mr. REAGAN. I stated then and I repeat now that if the people of that Territory had proper authority for calling that convention, if they had had time to consider the question of the adoption of the constitution, and if they had voted in sufficient numbers to indicate that it was the real opinion of the people of that Territory, I would not discuss that question.

Mr. PADDOCK. What is the difference as to the form of authority given to the people to express themselves primarily as to such a matter as this, if they do finally and absolutely express themselves? If they do record their wishes and their judgment in respect to the proposition before the proceeding is concluded? and if their legislative authority afterwards did formally subscribe to it by unanimous vote, as happened in this case? and if all the political parties, where the question should be raised, as it was in this case, and all public expression should be in concurrence therewith, as it was in this case?

Mr. REAGAN. If the Senator from Nebraska had heard my opening remarks I think he would not have thought it necessary to propound his question. I hope the Senator will allow me to go on. He has his views about that subject and I have my views upon the facts which I have presented already, and I do not feel like going over them again. I ask to have the privilege of completing the statement I wish to make upon the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). The Senator will not be interrupted without his consent.

Mr. PADDOCK. I certainly should not have interrupted the Senator if he had not accorded to me the privilege of making an observation.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, when the Almighty created men and women he made them for different purposes, and six thousand years of experience have recognized the wisdom and justice of the Almighty in this arrangement. It is only latterly that people have got wiser than their Creator and wiser than all the generations which have preceded them. How is it possible that women can be clothed with the duties and responsibilities of men and at the same time perform the natural and necessary duties of women? The one or the other must be abandoned. The constitution of society, the necessity for the existence of society, the necessity of home government, which is the most important of all the parts of government, can only be preserved and perpetuated by keeping men in their sphere and women in their sphere.

Men must do the outdoor work, men must cultivate the fields, men must build the public works, men must build the residences, men must work the roads, must do military duty, men must fight the battles of the country when that becomes necessary. They are by nature qualified for these duties. They are by their constitution enabled to meet the rugged responsibility and serious labor involved in these. While in the active performance of these duties, however, it is a pleasant, it is a wholesome thing to reflect that after a hard day's struggle and of rough contacts which men must have with each other, they can go to a home presided over by one there who soothes the passions of the day by the sweetness of her temper, the gentleness of her disposition, and the happiness which she brings around the family circle. But if the wife and the husband are both out in the bitter contests of the day, making speeches, electioneering with voters, pushing their way to the polls, they will both be apt to go home in a bad humor, and there will not be much happiness in the family during the remainder of the day that follows such a scene. And while they are both out, what will become of the children? Are they to take care of themselves?

Mr. President, sentimentalism may do for some things, but in the practical affairs of this world as the Almighty has made it and as mankind has respected it until the wisdom of these latter years, it has been found that the happiness of all, the welfare of all, was best consulted and best promoted by the women working in their sphere and the men working in their sphere.

Mr. BLAIR. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. REAGAN. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. How long is it since men began to vote in this world generally, and how long have they been voting in this country—the English-speaking race or the human race—and how much voting have the most of men done, notwithstanding what God intended them for, according to the Senator?

Mr. REAGAN. I have read some ancient history, Mr. President, perhaps not as much as the Senator from New Hampshire, and I have read how men voted in a sort of way away back in the time of Greece and Rome, and men have been voting all through the years of modern Europe. There are some places in the world where, perhaps, they do not vote yet, or vote but little, as in monarchies, but I do not understand that because men vote therefore women must vote, for if that sort of view is correct, that they must vote also because they are human beings, then children must vote also because they are human beings, and many of them very intelligent ones before they get to be twenty-one years of age.

But that, I submit to the Senator from New Hampshire, does not meet the question which I am presenting, that the good of society, the happiness of the family, the welfare of the country depend upon the preservation of the family organization, depend upon women remaining in the place that God made for them and men performing the duties and accepting the responsibilities that their nature and condition impose upon them.

Mr. BLAIR. Does the Senator hold that the privilege of voting or the exercise of that privilege by men or by women has much to do with the family organization? Does he think that if men vote and women also vote it will destroy the family organization? If so, I would ask the Senator how it happens that the family is an institution coeval with the commencement of society and that probably, taking the human race together from the beginning down, not one man in five hundred has ever exercised the right of suffrage, and not one in five thousand for that matter.

Mr. REAGAN. I am well aware, and I say it with no disrespect to the Senator from New Hampshire, that he has great respect for short-haired women and long-haired men. I can not say that I have that character of respect for them at all. I am trying to argue the question upon philosophical grounds, upon grounds which, it seems to me, should appeal to the reason of every one interested in good government.

Why, sir, family government has, so far as I know, through all the history of the world, been a most interesting and necessary part of government; and I believe more in the doctrine of the common law of family government than I do in the doctrine of the civil-law system of family government; though I think it is well that the common-law system should have ingrafted upon it so much of the civil-law system as secures the rights of property to married women and protects them against any harsh or improper conduct by the husband or the father.

It has been urged by those who favor female suffrage that it is necessary that women should enjoy the suffrage in order that they may be protected in their rights. I have not read the codes of all the States, but I have read some of them and have a general idea of them enough to appeal to the code of laws of every State in the American Union and to appeal to the action of the courts and the juries in every State of the Union to show that every possible right which women can desire for the protection of their persons and the protection of their personal rights, and in most of them the full protection of their separate property, is secured to them, and if anybody needs protection in the courts of the country with which I am familiar, it is the men who need protection against the mere question of sentiment.

I know in the State in which I live—and I think it is so in all the States with which I am familiar—if a case comes before a court in which there is a woman on one side, or minor children on one side, and a man of full age on the other side, the law first, and then the judge, and then the jury are on the side of the woman or of the children, and the man has to fight his way through as best he can. I do not complain of this. I rather feel proud that it is so, that that spirit of chivalry and manhood which must protect them asserts itself in this way, as it asserts itself in every way in human society with which we are familiar.

What rights can women expect to have that they do not have now? They are clothed with the protection of law. If they are abused by their husbands, they have an appeal to the law; and the right to vote would not make their situation better or worse in this respect. If their individual property is interfered with by their husbands, they have an appeal to the law; and the right to vote or not to vote would not change their condition in this respect.

It certainly is not to be assumed that they wish to pass laws which would be unjust and unequal, and I have yet to see the first law in any one of the States pointed to which unjustly discriminates against women or minor children. Men inspired by the feelings of men feel that their own welfare, the welfare of society, the rights and happiness of their mothers, their wives, and their daughters depend upon the passage of laws and the cultivation and enforcement of public sentiment which gives the women and children security and protection.

In my judgment, Mr. President, the day that the flood-gate of female suffrage is opened upon this country, the social organism will have reached the point at which decay and ruin begin.

I know it is assumed that women are purer than men, and I believe that to be true; but it can hardly be assumed that their intellects are stronger, though many of them have evinced great strength and power of intellect. But when we talk of the purity of women and of the intellect of women, we talk of that class who have had the higher and the better advantages of education and moral training. But we must remember that some women, like some men, have enjoyed such advantages, while many of them have not been blessed with those advantages, but have been left in ignorance and with insufficient moral training; and when we open the franchise to them all, these will be let in. All the dangers to the family organization, to society, and to government to which I have referred will then arise.

Mr. President, two of the ablest articles that I have ever seen written or printed against female suffrage were by women, urging reasons with more power and force than I am able to urge at this time, one of them taking hold of the very core of this question and inquiring what was woman made for and why was she made as she is, and what was man made for and why was he made as he is, and reasoning that each in their several spheres, if they perform their several duties, will promote the happiness of both and promote the welfare of society and the good of government.

Mr. President, in view of the amount of demagoguery that controls the politics of our generation and the seeming incapacity of the people to reason when sentiment can be invoked or to look to the safety of the Government when political advantage can be obtained, it seems almost like a waste of breath to talk upon the subject. If we could only remember that here in the greatest Republic that has been seen in the world, with the most thoroughly informed, energetic, and active race of men that perhaps the world has ever seen, here with the ark of the covenant of liberty in our keeping, this recklessly going forward and seeking political advantages at the expense of morality, at the expense of justice, at the expense of good government, is something to discourage those who love their country and who love to see its blessings perpetuated, we should be induced to pause.

To me it seems, with such a people holding domination over such a country, having such responsibilities in their hands, that not only grave Senators but every citizen hoping for the welfare of his country should be willing to consider carefully all the measures which tend to secure good government or to endanger good government. What matters it that one party may get into power one day and another another, by means fair or unfair. Whoever goes into power the great masses of the people are not interested, except in the welfare of the Government.

The great masses of the people have none of the aspirations and expectations of those who hold the offices and administer the Government. There is not a question of patronage and power. Their question is a question of good government, of cheap government, of just government, on principles which should perpetuate that good government and promote and preserve and perpetuate the well-being of society.

Mr. SANDERS. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas a question. My respect for his sincerity and ability is such that possibly I can obtain an answer to this interrogatory which has addressed itself to me: Ought not the law to be the expression of the intellectual and moral sense of the people? Question number one.

Question number two: Is the statement that "governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed" true or false?

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, if I were to answer the abstract questions presented by the Senator from Montana as abstractly as they are asked, the Senate would not be much wiser or much better satisfied than it is now. I suppose the object of asking those questions is to inquire whether all men and all women are not the source of power.

I am trying to answer that question the best I can do by endeavoring to show that God in His providence created women for the domestic circle, to make them the mothers of the world, to make them the mistresses of the homes of the world, to make there a place of repose to which men, after the trials of the day, can go and have peace and repose and a home of comfort and happiness; and that political duties, the right to vote, the right to hold office, the right to perform the duties which nature and the world's experience of six thousand years have assigned to man, are inconsistent with the duties of home, of mother, and of wife, and that the one can not be performed without ignoring the other. When the two are joined, the effect must be in a large measure to uproot the very foundations of society and to destroy the happiness of the people and endanger or destroy government itself in the vortex of anarchy. Such is my opinion of attempting to violate the laws of nature for political purposes.

Why, sir, what is the advantage? If the head of the family votes he is apt to reflect the views of the family. It is more convenient than to have all the family going out to vote. Sometimes there may be differences of opinion on political questions between husband and wife, but that does not very often occur, not sufficiently often to justify the endangering of social order and the good of the Government on that sentiment. My own view is clear as to what should be done if it were possible, though I see no way of retracing our steps upon the subject, for if once we confer the elective franchise I fear it is never to be gotten back until it goes through its dreadful course and ends in anarchy. If it were possible to retrace our steps, I should hope that it might be that none but citizens of the United States, and male citizens, should vote and that no one should vote who did not have some conception of the character of his Government and of the necessity for preserving good government.

Mr. President, the danger of republics consists in the excesses of republics. If we could hold to the conservatism which prevailed at the close of the Revolution and the half century after it, there would be no danger to the liberties of the people of this country; but if we continue to go step by step broadening the elective franchise, opening a wider field for reckless demagoguery, we shall certainly endanger popular liberty, and if we go on in that way the end is anarchy. Nothing can prevent it but conservatism and wisdom such as will ascertain what will constitute good government and how it is to be constituted and preserved. It can not be constituted, it can not be preserved simply by numbers, nor can it be constituted or preserved by ignorance and by vice, or by either. Good government must be preserved by good sense and the virtue of the people and their capacity to understand what government means, and what it means to make laws, to enforce laws, and to administer a government.

Mr. President, I regret to discuss a question of this kind with so little of previous thought with a view to such a discussion, for I do regard this as one of the gravest questions that can be submitted to any part of the American people, and I discuss it now because of the reasons which I stated some time back, that I did not think the people of Wyoming had sufficient opportunity to express their will. There was no call by anybody having authority upon the people to express themselves as to whether they would have a convention. The call for a convention was one voluntarily made, and an election was held without the obligation of law. If that election had brought out a full vote, it might have obviated much of the objection which I make; but when it is seen that not 40 per cent. of the voters voted at that election and that the time was so short that it was absolutely impossible for the people of that large Territory to be advised of the fact that a constitution was submitted to them and to have an opportunity to consider it, and when we look at the fact that it is shown plainly that for political purposes a very large part of the people of that Territory were disfranchised, I should be glad to see this constitution go back to the people of that Territory.

Let them have time to consider the character of government they wish to form. In forming constitutions it is true in late years we have got to changing pretty rapidly, but they ought to be formed on such general principles as would not need such frequent reforms. They ought to be formed upon full deliberation. I know, sir, that in this constitution there are many good and wise provisions, many that I am glad to see in it, but it seems to me that, all the facts considered, it is right that it should go back to the people for their more careful and deliberate consideration.

While I express this as my conviction, Mr. President, so long as there are two Senators and one Representative and three members of the Electoral College for another party depending upon this action, I shall not very much hope for wisdom and justice to prevail in the decision of this question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PADDOCK in the chair). The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. REAGAN. I ask for a call of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Berry,	Farwell,	Moody,	Ransom,
Blair,	Faulkner,	Morgan,	Reagan,
Cass,	Frye,	Paddock,	Sanders,
Coke,	Gorman,	Payne,	Sawyer,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Pettigrew,	Stewart,
Davis,	Higgins,	Pierce,	Teller,
Sawes,	Jones of Arkansas,	Platt,	Washburn,
Dixon,	Jones of Nevada,	Plumb,
Dolph,	Manderson,	Power,
Edmonds,	Mitchell,	Pugh,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present.

Mr. PLATT. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut moves that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant-at-Arms will execute the order of the Senate and request the presence of absent Senators.

Mr. DAWES. Is it in order to ask that the members of the Committee on Appropriations may be excused from attendance?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Nothing is in order until the order of the Senate to secure the presence of absent Senators has been executed.

Mr. SHERMAN and Mr. SPOONER appeared.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest that under the order of the Senate, as soon as Senators whose names were not responded to come in they should announce their presence to the Chair, and that they be entered.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the name of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

Mr. SPOONER. I was absent from the Chamber on business of the Senate and was in the building.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The name of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] will be called.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to say that I was engaged in my official capacity, and did not hear the signal for a call of the Senate.

Mr. HISCOCK appeared and responded to his name.

Mr. CARLISLE. Mr. President, I was absent in the barber-shop when the roll was called.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I move that the Senate adjourn. There is evidently not a quorum present, and at this hour of the afternoon it is difficult to get a quorum here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas moves that the Senate do now adjourn. [Putting the question.] The yeas seem to have it.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I call for a division.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the yeas and nays. They will show who is here and who is not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the motion to adjourn the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay," and I shall vote hereafter if it becomes necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS].

Mr. PETTIGREW (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. SAWYER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT], but I transfer my pair to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE], who is home sick. I vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it right to say that my colleague [Mr. MORRILL] is absent from the city to obtain three or four days of necessary rest, and I think everybody will understand that he is not derelict in his duty in doing so.

Mr. FAULKNER. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. KENNA] is detained from the Senate and is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. DIXON. I announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. ALDRICH], who is absent, with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON].

Mr. HAWLEY. I had something to do with arranging a pair between the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. It ought to be announced, perhaps, that they are both absent from the Senate on account of afflictions in their families.

Mr. BLAIR (after having voted in the negative). I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. I will state that my colleague [Mr. CHANDLER] is absent by reason of his state of health and is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BLODGETT].

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. EVARTS] is away on account of ill health and is paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. MANDERSON (after having voted in the negative). I have voted on this question notwithstanding the fact that I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], not looking upon it as a party question and being desirous of making a quorum of the Senate.

Mr. PADDOCK (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. I did not know when I voted that he was absent. As my vote is necessary to make a quorum, I will allow it to stand, under the circumstances.

Mr. HIGGINS. As it is necessary to make a quorum, I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS. As it is necessary to make a quorum, I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. I vote "yea," to make a quorum. The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—12.
Berry,	Gorman,	Pasco,	Ransom,
Carlisle,	Gray,	Payne,	Walthall,
Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Pugh,	Wilson of Md.
NAYS—30.
Cass,	Frye,	Moody,	Sawyer,
Cullom,	Hale,	Paddock,	Sherman,
Davis,	Hawley,	Pierce,	Spooner,
Dawes,	Higgins,	Platt,	Stewart,
Dixon,	Hiscock,	Plumb,	Teller,
Dolph,	Jones of Nevada,	Power,	Washburn,
Edmonds,	Manderson,	Reagan,
Farwell,	Mitchell,	Sanders,
ABSENT—42.
Aldrich,	Cameron,	Harris,	Squire,
Allen,	Chandler,	Hearst,	Stanford,
Allison,	Cockrell,	Hoar,	Stockbridge,
Barbour,	Colquitt,	Ingalls,	Turpie,
Bate,	Daniel,	Kenna,	Vance,
Blackburn,	Eustis,	McMillan,	Vest,
Blair,	Evarts,	McPherson,	Voorhees,
Blodgett,	Faulkner,	Morgan,	Wilson of Iowa,
Brown,	George,	Morrill,	Wolcott,
Butler,	Gibson,	Pettigrew,
Call,	Hampton,	Quay,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No quorum has voted. The Sergeant-at-Arms is still engaged in executing the order of the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. When the motion was made to adjourn the Sergeant-at-Arms was executing the order of the Senate to request the attendance of absent Senators. I should like to inquire how many Senators have answered to their names on the call of the Senate which was had to determine whether a quorum was present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Forty-one Senators answered to their names.

Mr. PLATT. How many answered on the motion to adjourn?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Forty-two.

Mr. PLATT. Some Senators announced that they were paired on that vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Senators announced that they were paired and voted.

Mr. PLATT. I ask unanimous consent that the roll may be again called for the purpose of determining whether we have a quorum present.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Without interfering with the execution of the order?

Mr. PLATT. Without interfering with the execution of the order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. GORMAN and others. No objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears none, and the roll will be again called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Edmunds,	Mitchell,	Pugh,
Berry,	Farwell,	Moody,	Reagan,
Blair,	Faulkner,	Morgan,	Sanders,
Carlisle,	Prye,	Paddock,	Sawyer,
Casey,	Gorman,	Paeco,	Sherman,
Coke,	Hale,	Payne,	Spooner,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Pettigrew,	Stewart,
Dayis,	Higgins,	Pierce,	Teller,
Dawes,	Hiecock,	Platt,	Walthall,
Dixon,	Jones of Nevada,	Plumb,	Washburn,
Dolph,	Manderson,	Power,	Wilson of Md.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Forty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. PLATT. It has been suggested to me by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] that it was not supposed a vote would be reached to-day upon this bill, and that several Senators have gone away expecting to be present at a vote which would be taken or reached to-morrow, and that there would be no objection to a unanimous consent that debate shall cease upon the bill and the vote be taken on the amendments and the bill at a certain hour to-morrow, say 3 o'clock.

Mr. CULLOM. I did not hear the first part of the Senator's statement. Does that include both the Wyoming and Idaho bills?

Mr. FAULKNER. Make it 4 o'clock.

Mr. CULLOM. The agreement ought to include both bills. The same discussion ought to answer for both practically.

Mr. PLATT. Would the Senate be willing to extend the agreement to taking the vote on both bills to-morrow?

Mr. CULLOM. At say 4 or 5 o'clock.

Mr. PLATT. At 4 o'clock?

Mr. MORGAN. The amendment of the Senator from Arkansas has so broadened out this question that a Senator can not speak on it very well under perhaps thirty or forty or sixty minutes. I understand there are three Senators who desire to speak on the bill.

Mr. PLATT. I understand there would be no objection to a vote upon the amendments and upon the bill to-morrow, say at 3 o'clock.

Mr. MORGAN and Mr. GORMAN. Four o'clock.

Mr. PLATT. At 4 o'clock. Then I ask unanimous consent that the debate upon this bill and the amendments cease and the vote be taken upon the bill and amendments at 4 o'clock to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Connecticut? The Chair hears none. It is so ordered.

Mr. STEWART. I suggest that the bill be temporarily laid aside and that the other bill be read this evening.

Mr. PLATT. I want to say something on the pending bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I wish to have it understood, so far as I am concerned, that this is not an order of the Senate, but is only an understanding that everybody agrees, as an understanding, that it is to be done; and if any gentleman feels it to be his duty to violate the understanding the Chair does not enforce it. I wish to preserve that distinction.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so understood.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine will state his parliamentary question.

Mr. HALE. What is the difference between an order of the Senate and a unanimous agreement of the Senate with any Senator who expects to follow out the unanimous agreement of the Senate? I have never been able to see the difference. An agreement of the Senate entered into by proposition and counter-proposition and understood by both sides, and solemnly fixed. If there is any solemnity about a full Senate agreeing to a thing, ought to have the full effect, and every Senator ought to understand that it has the full effect, of an order of the Senate. Why it is that it is continually brought to the attention of the Senate that an agreement of this kind may be violated, and that nobody is doing the wrong thing if he does violate it, passes my understanding. I for one am willing that it shall be entered as an order of the Senate and be equivalent to any order that has been made; and I shall propose in any matter that I have charge of, where a unanimous agreement of the Senate is made, that it shall have the force of an order; and I would be willing to stand by it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator suspend for one moment? The Chair would like the decision of the Senate with reference to continued action by the Sergeant-at-Arms. He is still executing the order of the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut moves that further proceedings by the Sergeant-at-Arms under the order of the Senate be suspended.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say, in response to my friend from Maine, that the difference is entirely immaterial, so far as it regards the personal honor and obligation of Senators, and I have never known it except in some extreme emergency to be departed from, and I hope it never will be. But an order of the Senate changes its standing rules in respect of the liberty of debate, and I believe in the liberty of debate in this body. If any Senator wishes to debate in order to procrastinate affairs, his brother Senators who do not like it can stay as well as he can and have it out. There ought to be one body in this country where freedom of debate may continue, as it has always in this body. It has always been understood that these unanimous understandings, while they bound the honor of gentlemen fully and fairly, were not a rule of the Senate, but I assume that every gentleman present and every one not present is just as much bound as if it were an order of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I suppose that the freedom of debate, which I believe in for this body as much as the Senator from Vermont, does not prevent all the Senators present at any time from agreeing not to talk. It ought not to.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, if these agreements are not binding and not so regarded by members of the Senate, it will lead to very unpleasant results. There is much talk about having the previous question. The unanimous agreement takes the place of it and enables us to terminate debate. When I was in the Senate previously I never knew such an agreement to be violated. If it can be kept sacredly by all Senators, it answers every purpose and gives us the freedom of debate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And it always is.

Mr. FAULKNER. I should like to ask for information of the Senator from Nevada whether he has ever known those agreements to be violated at all.

Mr. STEWART. There was a case the other day where it was not observed, as I understand.

Mr. FAULKNER. I have not heard of any such case myself.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is very rare.

Mr. STEWART. It is very rare. All I wish to do is to call attention to the importance of observing these agreements as binding. Otherwise other results will happen that would prevent the Senate from being that deliberative body which it always has been. They are very important agreements. We can terminate debate in that way; when the nature of it is perfectly understood I presume that no Senator will violate the agreement, and it is not necessary to have it an order further than binding upon the honor of the Senate, because every one sees the importance of it.

Mr. PLATT. I do not understand that the suggestion which was made by the Senator from Vermont was intended in any way to militate against the unanimous consent which had been reached upon the pending bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not at all.

Mr. PLATT. And there is no suggestion that that agreement shall not be kept in good faith?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Of course not.

Mr. GORMAN rose.

Mr. PLATT. Does the Senator from Maryland wish to address the Senate?

Mr. GORMAN. I was going to move an adjournment.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to reply for a few moments to one point made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] in his remarks. If I have the floor I will address myself to one point that was made in the argument of the Senator from Arkansas upon the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. PLATT. I am sorry not to see the Senator from Arkansas in his seat, but I can not waste the time of the Senate because he happens to be absent.

Mr. GORMAN. Do I understand that the Senator from Connecticut is going on with the bill this afternoon?

Mr. PLATT. I desire to reply to some observations that were made by the Senator from Arkansas. I shall be very short.

Mr. GORMAN. There is no earthly objection to that. I only wanted to have an understanding with the Senator, when I made the suggestion of an understanding to the Senator, it was for the purpose of facilitating public business, and we were to have no vote to-night I understand.

Mr. PLATT. Not upon this bill.

Mr. GORMAN. Not on the pending question?

Mr. PLATT. No.

Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas concedes that Wyoming, upon the facts, upon the conditions, upon her resources, upon her population, is entitled to admission; and I thank him for that concession. The only new objection that he makes, so far as I was able to follow his remarks, is that the convention which formed the constitution that has been presented here was irregular; that it was not called in pursuance of any act of the Territorial Legislature. I ought perhaps to say that he criticised the size of the vote upon the adoption of the constitution; but the principal point that he made was that that convention was irregularly held; that it was not called in pursuance of an enabling act of Congress or of an act of the Territorial Legislature. I suppose that stress was laid upon the fact that it was not called in pursuance of an act of the Territorial Legislature, because it is too late in the history of the admission of States to claim that a State is not properly admitted when the Territorial Legislature has taken action for the calling of a constitutional convention, and the constitutional convention has been held in pursuance of that act, and the constitution submitted to the people, and ratified by any vote, large or small, so that a majority was cast in favor of the adoption of the constitution. State after State has been admitted in that manner, and all those objections have been passed upon by the Senate.

But I want to go a little further, Mr. President, and I want to show that an argument that the convention which framed the constitution was irregular has never prevailed when the question of the admission of a State has been before the Senate or before Congress. State after State has been admitted when the convention which formed the constitution was not as regularly called as in this case, where no enabling act had even been reported which authorized the call of the convention to form a constitution.

This convention was called by the governor. It was called upon the petition of a majority of the representatives of the counties of Wyoming. An election was ordered; an apportionment in all items was made, such as obtained for the election of members of the house and senate in the Territorial Legislature. The law relating to the election of members of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory was followed in the voting. The election was called in the manner in which elections for members of the Legislative Assembly are called. All the conditions required to elect a Legislative Assembly were observed in the election of delegates to this constitutional convention.

Mr. President, States have been admitted where that had not been done. The constitutional convention which framed the constitution on which California was admitted to the Union was called by the military governor of California, at the request of no one, at the request of no counties, at no request of the people—called upon his own motion. That convention was held, a constitution was framed by that convention, and it was submitted to Congress, and California was admitted in that manner.

So far as I can read the record with reference to the admission of the Senator's own State of Arkansas, this convention was more regular than the convention which framed the constitution upon which Arkansas was admitted into the Union. If there was ever any convention called in Arkansas by any authority whatever when its constitution was framed it does not appear in any of the public documents of the time. Arkansas came into the Union in this way: In the Twenty-fourth Congress, at the first session, Document No. 133 of the House of Representatives is the memorial of the convention praying for the admission of Arkansas into the Union as a State, and it says this:

The people of Arkansas, animated with a desire for the enjoyment of independence and self-government, have, by an expression of their will, approximating to unanimity, elected representatives, to meet in convention at the city of Little Rock, with full and ample powers to make a constitution and system of State government for Arkansas. The accompanying constitution is the result of their deliberations.

The constitution starts with this declaration:

We, the people of the Territory of Arkansas, by our representatives in convention assembled at Little Rock, on Monday, the 4th of January, A. D. 1836, and of the Independence of the United States the sixtieth year, having the right of admission into the Union as one of the United States of America, consistent with the Federal Constitution and by virtue of the treaty of cession by France to the United States of the Province of Louisiana, in order to secure to ourselves and our posterity the enjoyment of all the rights of life, liberty, and property, and the free pursuit of happiness, do mutually agree with each other, etc.

The message of the President, transmitting the constitution which had been framed, was dated March 10, 1836, and is to be found in Document 164 of the Twenty-fourth Congress, first session, House of Representatives. It was sent by Andrew Jackson, and that Democratic President made no suggestion of irregularity in the proceedings in the holding of the convention in Arkansas and the framing of a constitution. His message is this:

WASHINGTON, March 10, 1836.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State communicating the proceedings of a convention assembled at Little Rock, in the Territory of Arkansas, for the purpose of forming a constitution and system of government for the State of Arkansas. The constitution adopted by this convention and the documents accompanying it, referred to in the report from the Secretary of State, are respectfully submitted to the consideration of Congress.

ANDREW JACKSON.

The letter of the Secretary of State is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, March 9, 1836.

The Secretary of State has the honor to report to the President that he yesterday received a letter dated at Little Rock, in the Territory of Arkansas, on the 1st of February, 1836, signed by John Wilson, as president, and countersigned by C. P. Bertrand, as secretary, of the convention assembled at that place for the purpose of forming a constitution and system of government of the State of Arkansas, accompanied by a duplicate of the constitution and other documents, and requesting the Secretary of State to have the same laid before Congress. The Secretary respectfully submits to the President copies of the above-mentioned letter, together with the duplicate original of the constitution and other documents which accompanied it.

JOHN FORSYTH.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

This is John Wilson's letter, addressed to the Secretary of State:

LITTLE ROCK, A. T., February 1, 1836.

Hon. JOHN FORSYTH, Secretary of State:

SIR: As president of the convention assembled at this place for the purpose of forming a constitution and system of government for the State of Arkansas, I have been directed, etc.

I will not read the whole of it. Then, as president of the convention, he addresses the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

The people of Arkansas, through their representatives in convention assembled, respectfully represent to your honorable body that the Territory of Arkansas, by an accession of population within her limits, has now that number of inhabitants that justifies her to look with confidence to her admission into the Union as one of the free and independent States of the American Confederacy at as early a period as the necessary forms of admission can be complied with.

Nothing was said here about a Territorial Legislature having authorized the convention.

The people of Arkansas, animated with a desire for the enjoyment of independence and self-government, have, by an expression of their will approximating to unanimity, elected representatives to meet in convention at the city of Little Rock, with full and ample powers to make a constitution and system of State government for Arkansas. The accompanying constitution is the result of their deliberations.

Then follows the constitution; and I look through that constitution in vain for any provision requiring it to be submitted to the people, and I look through all these documents in vain to find that that constitution was ever submitted to the people or ever voted upon by the people of Arkansas before its presentation to the Congress of the United States. The question of its irregularity was made in Congress, in the Senate, and Senators replied that that was not the question; that the question was whether the constitution was republican in form, whether Arkansas was entitled under the treaty, according to her population and resources, to admission as a State into the Union; and it prevailed in the Senate with only 6 votes against it. It was, I think I am justified in saying, never voted upon by the people. The argument could have been made then, not that only 8,000 people voted on it, but it could have been made that nobody voted on it; that it was an irregular, unauthorized convention that presented a constitution here; and yet Arkansas was admitted under those circumstances, and Arkansas polled in the next Presidential election only 3,638 votes.

Mr. President, it seems to me that it is altogether too late to stand here and say that this Territory shall be kept out of the Union, that all these proceedings shall be had over again, simply because no act of the Territorial Legislature was passed authorizing the calling of this constitutional convention. It was held. The best men of the Territory were elected to take part in it. No political dissension characterized the deliberations of that convention. There has been no protest sent here from that Territory.

We are treated to arguments of this character, that in some newspaper somewhere it has been stated that at a precinct in the Territory the vote was not proper and legal. That was denied on the floor of the body where the charge was first made, and denied, I believe, by the authorized Representative of the Territory of Wyoming upon that floor. Why should that be brought here? It is not a fair, manly, open way of meeting this question. The proceedings have been as regular here as in any of the States that have been admitted upon a constitution framed without an enabling act, and twelve States at least, I think thirteen States, have now been admitted upon constitutions passed by conventions held, some of them by authority of the Territorial Legislature, some of them without the authority of the Territorial Legislature, and none of them having the authority behind them of an enabling act of Congress.

Mr. PADDUCK. Mr. President, I simply wish to make a statement in respect to what occurred in my own State in connection with our movement for and our admission into the Union. There was no convention whatever held in my State. The Legislature appointed a committee to draught a constitution. That constitution was draughted by the committee so appointed and reported to the Legislature. The Legislature submitted the constitution to the people direct, and the people ratified it at the general election thereafter. The vote upon the ratification was 3,938 for the adoption of the constitution and 3,838 against it. There was a very sharp controversy, a very bitter opposition to the adoption of the constitution. The majority, therefore, was very small.

But it is a significant fact in connection with what the Senator from Arkansas has said respecting the smallness of the vote in Wyoming on the adoption of that constitution that although the vote for the adoption of the constitution of the State of Nebraska occurred at a general election, when all the State officers and members of the Legislature were chosen, so that the incentive for a large vote was very great, nevertheless at that election the vote for the State officers was 9,120; and this was 1,244 more votes than were cast upon the question of the adoption and the ratification of the constitution. About one-eighth of the entire vote of the State or Territory was not polled upon the question of the ratification or adoption of the constitution.

Mr. PLATT. The estimated population of Nebraska at that time was 100,000, and it very much exceeded that, undoubtedly.

Mr. PADDOCK. No, Mr. President; as I stated to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] yesterday when he made the statement as to the population, that estimate was incorrect. The real population at that time did not exceed 45,000. Taking the entire vote upon the election of State officers, 9,120, and allowing a ratio of five persons for each vote, which would be a liberal estimate in a Territory such as Nebraska was at that time, it would come to about 45,000 people. I stated to the Senator from Missouri yesterday that my recollection was that the population as we supposed it to be at that time was about 50,000. It could not have been more than 45,000.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President—

Mr. PADDOCK. Again, Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me a moment, in 1875 a new constitution was framed regularly by a convention appointed by the Legislature duly elected, etc. That constitution also was submitted at a general election at which the State officers, etc., were voted for. The vote for the State officers at that time, at a general election, an important biennial election, was 46,483, whereas the vote upon the adoption of the constitution at that time was only 35,676.

So it would appear from this practical illustration that the point made by my friend from Arkansas in respect to the small vote in Wyoming upon the adoption of the constitution at a special election in an inclement season of the year, where women who were voters could not be expected to get out to vote, is not a very strong one.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to ask the Senator before he takes his seat if he desires to be understood that the Territorial Legislature of Nebraska inaugurated a movement for the adoption of the constitution.

Mr. PADDOCK. That is exactly what I said.

Mr. REAGAN. I find in looking—

Mr. PADDOCK. If the Senator will allow me, I will give him a little more history on this subject.

Mr. REAGAN. I find in looking at part 2 of the Charters and Constitutions of the United States—

Mr. PADDOCK. If the Senator will allow me, I anticipate what he wishes to say.

Mr. REAGAN. On page 1201 of volume 2, there is the enabling act, dated April 19, 1864, authorizing Nebraska to form a constitution—

Mr. PADDOCK. That is very true; there was an enabling act, as my friend states.

Mr. REAGAN. Providing how it shall be done.

Mr. PADDOCK. There was an enabling act passed in 1864, and in pursuance of that act a convention was called in that year for the purpose of framing a constitution and delegates thereto were chosen, but the people were almost universally hostile to the movement, and in response to this overwhelming sentiment the convention met at the appointed time and adjourned upon the same day of its meeting without taking any action whatever. But three years later the Legislature itself, without reference to the enabling act, took action in this informal and irregular way that I have described.

COURT AT DANVILLE, ILL.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask unanimous consent that the bill under consideration be temporarily laid aside that I may call up the bill (H. R. 9289) to provide for a term of court at Danville, Ill. There will be no discussion upon it. It is a bill reported from the Judiciary Committee.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAY OF LETTER-CARRIERS.

Mr. SAWYER. I report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads an original joint resolution, on which I ask immediate action. I think there will be no objection to it. If there is I will explain it.

The joint resolution (S. R. 106) to continue the unexpended balance of appropriation for the free-delivery service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1888, was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the unexpended balance of $99,439.07 of the appropriation for the free-delivery service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1888, be continued and made available to June 30, 1891, for discharging the claims of letter-carriers for compensation for extra time in the months of May and June, 1888, made under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to limit the hours that letter-carriers in cities shall be employed per day," approved May 24, 1888.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution? The Chair hears none, and it is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SAWYER. If any one wishes I have a letter from the Postmaster-General which I can have read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no amendment as in Committee of the Whole, the joint resolution will be reported to the Senate.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. I take it for granted that we shall have to pass this joint resolution. The Department charged with the details of arranging pay for the letter-carriers at the period of eight hours a day, it is understood and stated in the paper which the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads has, has not had sufficient force to enable them to complete the business of determining the amount to be paid to each of the letter-carriers up to this date; and I take it for granted we shall have to pass the joint resolution. I do not want to discuss it, but simply to say that I wish I had the opportunity to vote for a repeal of the law which authorized such a proceeding and such an unnecessary expenditure of money.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask to have the letter of the Postmaster-General in support of the joint resolution printed in the RECORD. It shows why the measure is necessary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The letter will be printed in the RECORD, if there be no objection.

The letter is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., June 25, 1890.

SENATOR: I have the honor to state that the Department is now adjusting the claims of letter-carriers for services performed in excess of eight hours under the act of Congress approved May 24, 1888, entitled "An act to limit the hours that letter-carriers shall be employed per day," and that it has been and will be impossible, on account of insufficient clerical force, to complete the adjustment of any considerable number of these claims which will be chargeable to the appropriation remaining unexpended made for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, in time for their payment prior to said date, and to request the passage of a joint resolution by Congress authorizing the continuance until June 30, 1891, of the balance unexpended on said June 30, 1888, amounting at this date to $99,439.07, which by law will be covered into the Treasury July 1, 1890. A form of resolution is herewith inclosed for your consideration.

Respectfully,

JNO. WANAMAKER,
Postmaster-General.

HON. PHILETUS SAWYER,
Chairman Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, United States Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MARTIN, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9603) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HITT, Mr. DUNKLELL, and Mr. MCCREARY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9856) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. KETCHAM, and Mr. BLOUNT managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4570) to authorize the Leavenworth and Platte County Bridge Company to substitute a pivot draw-bridge over the Missouri River in place of a ponton bridge, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BAKER, Mr. ANDERSON of Kansas, and Mr. DAVIDSON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7263) to increase the pension of Henry L. Potter, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MORELL, Mr. BELKNAP, and Mr. TURNER of New York managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 8047) to construct a wagon bridge across the Mississippi River at Hastings, Minn.;

A bill (H. R. 8155) to grant school district No. 7 of the township of Dearborn, Wayne County, Michigan, certain lots of land for school purposes;

A bill (H. R. 8792) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Winona, Minn.; and

A bill (H. R. 10086) granting leaves of absence to clerks and employees in first and second class post-offices.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the message of the House of Representatives in relation to the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9856) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and requesting a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and accede to the request of the other House for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PLUMB, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. BLACKBURN were appointed.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask that the message of the House of Representatives relating to the consular and diplomatic bill be also laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9603) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and requesting a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and accede to the request for a conference with the other House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. BLACKBURN were appointed.

WASHINGTON IRON WORKS.

Mr. HIGGINS. I am authorized by the Committee on Claims to present a report on the bill (S. 1187) for the relief of the Washington Iron Works, being a substitution for a report heretofore made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be printed.

PROTECTION OF TIMBER ON PUBLIC LAND FROM FIRE.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4156) for the protection of trees and other growth on the public domain from destruction by fire. It is a bill that was sent to the Senate by the President on the request and recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that any person who shall maliciously or negligently and carelessly set on fire or cause to be set on fire any woods, underbrush, or prairie on any of the public lands of the United States, and any person who shall maliciously or negligently permit or suffer any fire, which he may have lighted on other lands, to pass therefrom to the public lands of the United States, to the injury of the trees, undergrowth, or prairie upon such public lands, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction of the same, shall be fined in a sum not more than three times the value of the trees or other growth so destroyed or injured, or imprisoned for a term not more than three years, or both, one half of the fine to go to the informer and the remaining half into the public-school fund of the county in which the trees or other growth so destroyed or injured are situated.

Mr. TELLER. Is that confined to the Territories? Does it not include the States?

Mr. PADDOCK. No, sir; not the States; only public lands, the general public domain under the undisputed jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to be sure whether it does or does not relate to public lands in the States.

Mr. PADDOCK. I did not quite understand the interrogatory of the Senator from Colorado. I am inclined to the opinion that it relates to the public domain wherever it may be. This bill came to the Senate from the Secretary of the Interior through and with the indorsement of the President of the United States. There is immediate urgency for the passage of the bill; and the reports of the Interior Department are of such a character—

Mr. TELLER. I think if the Senator will reflect a moment he must know that the Government of the United States can not create an offense in the State of Nebraska or in Colorado, except on those lands where they have exclusive jurisdiction.

Mr. PADDOCK. Then if the Government of the United States can not do it, it is not provided to be so done by the bill.

Mr. TELLER. It does not look well for us to pass such a law. The bill should be confined to the Territories of the United States. It is like a great many other things that are attempted to be done nowadays; it will amount to nothing.

Mr. PADDOCK. I do not think the point the Senator makes is good. My belief is that the forests upon the public land of the United States may be guarded by proper legislation by Congress; and certainly they ought to be in the light of recent reports as to the denudation of the forests upon the public domain by fires resulting from causes which this legislation aims to remove.

Mr. TELLER. The United States Government has no authority whatever to say what shall be larceny nor what shall be a misdemeanor on the public lands in the State of Colorado. It has no right to make it a criminal offense to burn timber in the State of Colorado. The relation of the Government of the United States to its timber in Colorado and its land is like that of any other proprietor. It can not say that a man who should trespass on it is an offender in that sense, and I object—

Mr. PADDOCK. I do not care to discuss the question raised by the Senator at this time. He may be correct, but I think not. But there is no time now to discuss this phase of the question.

Mr. TELLER. I object to the passage of a law of this kind myself. If the Senator will confine the bill to the Territories, it is all right. Otherwise, I want to enter my protest against this kind of legislation.

Mr. PADDOCK. So far as I am concerned, as one Senator I am willing to consider any amendment in the direction indicated that the Senator desires to propose.

Mr. TELLER. I will say further that in most of the States there are such laws; and in the State in which I live we have had such a law for many years. While I was Secretary of the Interior I protected the public land under the State law—I tried to do so, at least—against fire. The State passed a law against the setting out of fires, practically the same as this is. There is no occasion for it in any of the States, so far as I know. Although it may have come from the Interior Department it may have been drawn carelessly and sent here without the attention of the head of that Department, because I am sure he knows better than to attempt to have Congress pass such a law.

Mr. PADDOCK. The reports to the Department of the Interior from its inspectors have been of such a character as to make it an imperative duty of the National Government to undertake, so far as it can do so, to protect this careless and willful setting of fires in the timber of the United States wherever it may be. If the Senator's position is correct as to Federal jurisdiction, and possibly it may be as to the jurisdiction in respect to the timber lands in the States, this bill will not operate as to them, if his view, as I have said, is correct about it. The report which accompanies the bill, covering the statements made by the Secretary of the Interior, was sent to the Senate by the President himself, because of the very great importance of the legislation recommended; which statements and recommendations I should be very glad to have the Senate hear and consider at this time.

Mr. PAYNE. I raise the question whether we ought to proceed with important legislation with so thin a Senate as we have now. I raise the question that there is not a quorum here.

Mr. TELLER. I think the bill had better go over until it can be looked into.

Mr. PADDOCK. I have no objection to its going over.

Mr. TELLER. I do not care about letting it pass in this way, although it may be a good bill.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask the Senator to look at the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask that the report of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry on the bill may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The report, submitted by Mr. PADDOCK June 25, 1890, is as follows:

Your committee to whom was referred Executive Document No. 132, being a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a draught of a bill for the protection of trees and other growth on the public domain from destruction by fire, having considered the same, hereby report as follows:

Several measures have been pending before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry looking to the objects sought to be subserved in part by the legislation herein suggested. Such measures have been of wider scope and necessarily more voluminous in detail. They have been chiefly directed towards the enactment of a general forestry law which would place all the forests on the public domain under rigid national supervision, prevent depredations and waste, and protect the timber supply.

The present bill is intended to prevent destruction of forests, timber, and other growth by fire, by making the malicious, negligent, or careless kindling of fires on the public domain a misdemeanor punishable under the United States laws. It very properly extends its provisions to fires kindled on the prairies or suffered to pass from private lands to the public domain through negligence.

The necessity of such legislation is clearly shown in the message of the President of the United States transmitting the letter of the Secretary of the Interior with the accompanying communications, portions of which are hereby appended:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, November 11, 1890.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated the 31st ultimo, with duplicate of report, dated September 27, 1889, from Special Agent Thomas J. Matthews, and accompanying affidavits, relative to a certain forest fire, which began August 18, 1889, and continued until about the middle of September, in and about Graham, Boise County, Idaho, and was started by C. C. Havard, sheriff of the said county, and a posse of twenty-seven men, acting under the direction of John Lemp, of Boise City, and F. F. Church, cashier of Boise City Bank, Boise City, all of said Territory.

From the statement of facts set forth in the special agent's report, showing apparently unnecessary conduct on the part of the sheriff and those whom he represented, resulting in the needless destruction of much valuable Government property, I concur in the recommendation of the Commissioner that the United States attorney for Idaho be instructed to institute criminal proceedings against F. F. Church, John Lemp, and the said sheriff of Boise County, and Deputy Sheriff T. E. Orofton, if upon a careful examination of the facts in the case such action is deemed justifiable and for the best interests of the Government.

Very respectfully,

GEO. CHANDLER,
Acting Secretary.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., May 7, 1890.

SIR: Referring to my recommendation of October 31, 1889, in the case of C. C. Havard and others setting fire to Government timber in Idaho, I have the honor to acknowledge receipt, by reference from the Department, of the Attorney-General's letter, dated the 25th ultimo, inclosing copy of a letter from the United States attorney for Idaho, with which he returns all the papers in the case forwarded to the Department of Justice by your letter of November 11, 1889, and stating that there is no way of reaching the case under United States statutes.

In view, not only of the alleged fact that this fire extended over 4 square miles of timbered country, destroying great quantities of fine Government timber, but the further fact that disastrous and wide-spread forest fires raged in Idaho, Montana, and Oregon last year, in which millions of trees were destroyed and many lives lost; and that in response to an appeal from the governor of Idaho there was a large expenditure of Government money authorized by this Department in payment for services rendered in fighting the fires in Idaho, it is very evident that adequate legislation by Congress on the subject is imperatively needed.

I believe the statement to be entirely within bounds, that for every tree destroyed by the woodman's ax, at least ten trees are destroyed by conflagration arising in nearly every instance, from carelessness, if not willful, neglect to take the most ordinary precautions.

The urgency for some law on the subject is so apparent as to require no argument. I therefore most respectfully submit herewith for your consideration, and such action as you may deem necessary, a draught of a proposed law which I believe will fully meet the requirements.

Very respectfully,

LEWIS A. GROFF, Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

The proposed legislation is of a particularly urgent character because the season is at hand when forest fires are most numerous and destructive. It would seem to be of the highest importance that the Government should be empowered to prevent and to punish offenses of this nature, and that a deterrent measure of the simple character suggested should be enacted into a law.

The more extended inquiry which your committee is now making as to what additional legislation can be enacted for the preservation of the Nation's timber land from denudation by the ax of the marauder is not affected by this bill to alleviate the wanton waste by fire.

Your committee therefore recommend favorable action on the bill.

SHIPPING COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. FRYE. There is a little bill which it is rather important should be sent over to the other House, to which I think there will be no objection, which I should like to have passed. It is the bill (S. 3787) to amend the laws relative to shipping commissioners. The shipping commissioners are shipping crews for coastwise vessels, and the sailors are not bound at all by the agreements of the shipping commissioners unless this bill is passed.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

It provides that when a crew is shipped by a shipping commissioner for any American vessel in the coastwise trade, or the trade between the United States and the Dominion of Canada, or Newfoundland, or the West Indies, or Mexico, as authorized by section 2 of chapter 421 of the public laws passed by the Forty-ninth Congress, an agreement shall be made with each seaman engaged as one of such crew, in the same manner and form as is provided by sections 4511 and 4512 of the Revised Statutes for the shipment of the crews of other vessels; and the provisions of sections 4522, 4524, 4525, 4526, 4527, 4528, 4554, 4596, 4597, 4598, 4599, 4601, 4602, 4603, 4604, 4605, 4610, and 4612 of the Revised Statutes shall extend to and embrace such vessels in the coastwise trade and the trade between the United States and the Dominion of Canada, or Newfoundland, or the West Indies, or Mexico, where their crews have been shipped by a shipping commissioner, to the same extent and with the same force and effect as if these vessels had been mentioned and embraced in the language and terms of the sections specified.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BALTIMORE COURT-HOUSE BUILDING.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8342) for the removal of the United States court-house building at Baltimore, Md.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

NORTHERN PACIFIC AND YAKIMA IRRIGATION COMPANY.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 3745) granting to the Northern Pacific and Yakima Irrigation Company a right of way through the Yakima Indian reservation, in Washington. It is a very short bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, which was, in section 3, line 3, after the word "way," to insert "and for whatever property of said Indians may be taken in the construction of said canal," so as to make the section read:

That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to fix the amount of compensation to be paid the Indians for such right of way, and for whatever property of said Indians may be taken in the construction of said canal, and provide the time and manner for the payment thereof, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. In section 1, line 8, I move to strike out the words "at section 33" and in lieu thereof to insert the words "in either section 4, 8, 9, or 10;" in line 9 of the same section to strike out the word "thirteen" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve;" and at the end of line 12 to strike out the word "seven" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seventeen."

Mr. FRYE. Is that an amendment agreed upon by the committee?

Mr. ALLEN. This amendment was not agreed upon by the committee. I will explain that it was found that this right of way was not upon the Indian reservation at all as it was described in the bill, but the amendment which I propose places it upon the corner of the reservation at the point it was supposed to have crossed.

Mr. SPOONER. It merely corrects the description, then, in the location?

Mr. ALLEN. That is all.

Mr. FRYE. It is entirely satisfactory to me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 8, after the word "reservation," it is proposed to strike out the words "at section 33" and insert "in either sections 4, 8, 9, or 10;" in line 9, after the word "township," to strike out "thirteen" and insert the word "twelve;" and in line 12, to strike out the word "seven" and insert the word "seventeen;" so to make the section read:

That the right of way is hereby granted, as hereinafter set forth, to the Northern Pacific and Yakima Irrigation Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Washington, for the construction of an irrigating canal through the Yakima Indian reservation from a point on the boundary of said reservation in either sections 4, 8, 9, or 10, township 12 north, range 18 east of the Willamette meridian, in Yakima County, in the State of Washington; thence extending in a southeasterly direction to a point on the boundary of said reservation at section 17, township 12 north, range 19 east of the said meridian.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNION RAILWAY COMPANY, OF CHATTANOOGA, TENN.

Mr. BATE. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 4635) granting certain privileges to the Union Railway Company, of Chattanooga, Tenn.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill. It proposes to grant to the Chattanooga Union Railway Company, a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of Tennessee, and its successors and assigns, a right of way 35 feet wide, running on a 15-degree curve across the southwesterly corner, and in a 12-degree curve across the southeasterly corner of the United States reservation at Chattanooga, Tenn., as indicated on plat annexed; also the privilege of occupying for depot purposes a suitable portion of land on the reservation, including the location of the present depot. It is expressly understood that no part of this land or right of way shall be used for storage of cars, and that a depot shall be maintained by the company at the road leading from the railway to the gate of the national cemetery, at or about the location of the present depot.

Mr. BATE. This is the bill that objection was offered to by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] on Saturday a week ago, because I could not then find the report of the Secretary of War. However, I found that report subsequently and handed it to the Senator from Vermont, and he offers no objection now to the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PARIS, TEX.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 833) providing for the erection of a public building at Paris, Tex.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute.

Mr. SPOONER. As I shall ask the Senate to reject the committee amendment and concur in the bill as it passed the House of Representatives, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment, which is quite long, be omitted, and that the bill as passed by the House be read.

The bill was read.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that the substitute reported by the committee be rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARMY OFFICERS ON RETIRED-LIST.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1636) for the relief of certain officers on the retired-list of the Army.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 10, after the word "authorized," to strike out "and directed to rectify the injustice thus done" and to insert "to nominate;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That whereas since the 1st day of January, 1886, certain officers of the Army, being at the time the senior officers in rank in their respective grades, and under the provisions of section 1357, Revised Statutes, entitled to be promoted to vacancies then existing in the next higher grades, were nevertheless placed upon the retired-list of the Army without such promotion, the President is hereby authorized to nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to appoint, all such officers to the respective grades to which they were severally entitled, to take rank and date from the several times when their respective rights to promotion to vacancies became established, and to place them on the retired-list of the Army in the grades to which they are promoted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT CHURCH PROPERTY.

Mr. VANCE. I move to take up the bill (S. 3460) to release certain church property in the District of Columbia from arrears of taxation. It is a bill to relieve certain churches in this city from special taxes and assessments that have been made against them. A number have been relieved by special bills, and this is a general relief for all churches in the same situation.

Mr. FRYE. From arrears alone?

Mr. VANCE. Yes, sir; from arrears alone.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SCHOOL OF MINES IN SOUTH DAKOTA.

Mr. MOODY. I ask consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3139) to aid the State of South Dakota to support a school of mines.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, to add at the end of section 1, "nor shall it exceed the amount annually expended by the State of South Dakota for said school of mines out of its treasury;" so as to make the section read:

That the State of South Dakota shall annually receive 50 per cent. of all moneys paid to the United States for mineral lands within the State of South Dakota, for the maintenance of the school of mines established at Rapid City, in the county of Pennington, in said State: Provided, That said sum so to be paid shall not exceed the sum of $12,000 per annum, nor shall it exceed the amount annually expended by the State of South Dakota for said school of mines out of its treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BROOKLYN NAVY-YARD AND NAVAL-HOSPITAL LANDS.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6946) providing for the sale of navy-yard and United States naval-hospital lands in the city of Brooklyn, N. Y.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EIGHT-HOUR LAW IN THE DISTRICT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 15th ultimo, certain information in regard to the application of the eight-hour law to laborers employed by the District government on public works in the District of Columbia; which, with the accompanying papers, on motion of Mr. BLAIR, was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed.

REFERENCE OF EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I ask that the letter of the Secretary of War, which came in during my absence and was laid on the table, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SAWYER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 7 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, June 27, 1890, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate the 26th day of June, 1890.

REGISTERS OF THE LAND OFFICE.

Ben Wade Ritter, of Durango, Colo., to be register of the land office at Durango, Colo., vice Richard McCloud, whose term of office will expire July 2, 1890.

Adolph Dobrowsky, of Shasta, Cal., to be register of the land office at Redding (formerly Shasta), Cal., vice Sylvester Hull, term expired.

INDIAN AGENT.

John Tully, of Miles City, Mont., to be agent for the Indians of the Tongue River agency in Montana, vice Robert L. Upshaw, whose term of office will expire July 25, 1890.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Rockey P. Earhart, of Oregon, to be collector of customs for the district of Willamette, in the State of Oregon, in place of Hyman Abraham, to be removed.

POSTMASTERS.

W. White Jones, to be postmaster at Greensborough, in the county of Hale and State of Alabama, in the place of James W. Locke, whose commission expired May 25, 1890.

Charles L. Reed, to be postmaster at Longmont, in the county of Boulder and State of Colorado, in the place of Joseph J. Topliff, whose commission expires July 3, 1890.

Jabez T. Denning, to be postmaster at Augusta, in the county of Richmond and State of Georgia, in the place of Key Boyce, whose commission expired April 16, 1890.

John J. Hays, to be postmaster at Osborne, in the county of Osborne and State of Kansas, in the place of Millard E. Smith, whose commission expires July 26, 1890.

James Ord, to be postmaster at Medfield, in the county of Norfolk and State of Massachusetts, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after January 1, 1889; the nomination of Frank K. Bonney, sent to the Senate January 30, 1889, not having been confirmed.

Harvey Barker, to be postmaster at Portsmouth, in the county of Bay and State of Michigan, in the place of John King, removed.

Silas N. Harrington, to be postmaster at Marshall, in the county of Lyon and State of Minnesota, in the place of Michael Sullivan, resigned.

Lew Coleman, to be postmaster at Deer Lodge City, in the county of Deer Lodge and State of Montana, in the place of George W. Carlton, removed.

Chauncey P. Smith, to be postmaster at Jamestown, in the county of Stutsman and State of North Dakota, in the place of Anton Klaus, whose commission expired May 23, 1890.

John I. Lanphere, to be postmaster at Silver Creek, in the county of Chautauqua and State of New York, in the place of Franklin Smith, removed.

Mrs. Minnie B. Taylor, to be postmaster at Hicksville, in the county of Defiance and State of Ohio, in the place of Jacob Wisner, whose commission expires July 3, 1890.

George Griffith, to be postmaster at Kane, in the county of McKean and State of Pennsylvania, in the place of Otis G. Keltz, resigned.

Benjamin F. Wagneller, to be postmaster at Selin's Grove, in the county of Snyder and State of Pennsylvania, in the place of H. Harvey Schoch, who was appointed and commissioned by the President May 7, 1889, but whose nomination sent to the Senate December 19, 1889, has been rejected.

John A. Stroube, to be postmaster at Chamberlain, in the county of Brulé and State of South Dakota, in the place of William Gilman, whose commission expires July 3, 1890.

Robert B. Wood, to be postmaster at Hampton, in the county of Elizabeth City and State of Virginia, in place of Mattie K. Chisman, whose commission expired March 31, 1890.

PROMOTION IN THE ARMY.

Quartermaster's Department.

Lieut. Col. Richard N. Batchelder, Deputy Quartermaster-General, to be Quartermaster-General with the rank of brigadier-general, June 26, 1890, vice Holabird, retired from active service.

CONFIRMATION.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate May 22, 1890.

POSTMASTER.

John H. Johnston, to be postmaster at Danville, in the county of Pittsylvania and State of Virginia.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 26, 1890.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI AT WINONA, MINN.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 8792) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Winona, Minn., may be considered at this time. I will state that this bill has heretofore been read except the two closing sections, when the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] objected. I understand that he will not now make objection.

Mr. DOCKERY. What is the bill?

Mr. DUNNELL. It is a bill for the construction of a bridge at the city of Winona, Minn. The bill was written at the War Department.

Mr. McCREARY. I desire to inquire whether the bill contains simply the usual provisions.

Mr. DUNNELL. The bill is in the usual form. It was prepared at the War Department.

Mr. SPINOLA. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Unless the reading of the whole bill be called for, the Clerk will read the two sections not heretofore read.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The substitute recommended by the Committee on Commerce was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DUNNELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE TO POST-OFFICE EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. KETCHAM. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10086) granting leaves of absence to clerks and employes in first and second class post-offices, and that the House now proceed to consider the bill. I will simply state that this bill has been recommended by the Post-Office Department, has been unanimously approved by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and will involve no additional expense to the Government.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after July 1, 1890, the clerks and employes attached to first and second class post-offices be allowed leaves of absence, with full pay, for not exceeding fifteen days in any one fiscal year: Provided, That no clerk nor employe be granted a leave until he has performed service for one year.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. FLOWER. I hope there will be no objection. The bill does not involve one dollar of expense to the Government. I can say from personal observation, founded on an experience of six years in connection with the postal service, that no class of people employed by the Government more fully earn their salaries than this class of post-office employes, and they are certainly entitled to this little relief that the present bill affords them. I hope the bill will pass, and I trust also that we shall as soon as the opportunity arises give our post-office clerks the benefit of the eight-hour system.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will inquire of the gentleman from New York [Mr. KETCHAM] whether this bill carries an appropriation?

Mr. KETCHAM. It does not.

Mr. BLAND. Has the bill been reported from any committee?

Mr. KETCHAM. It has received the unanimous approval of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. BLAND. Understanding that the bill has been reported favorably by a committee of this House, I shall not object to its consideration; otherwise I should do so.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KETCHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DONATION OF LAND FOR SCHOOL PURPOSES.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8155) to grant school district No. 7 of the township of Dearborn, Wayne County, Michigan, certain lots of land for school purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following described lands, situate in the township of Dearborn, county of Wayne and State of Michigan, to wit, lots 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 95, 96, 98, 99, are hereby granted to school district No. 7 of said township, to be used for school purposes, the said lands being bounded by Center street, Mason street, Morley avenue, and Garrison street, according to the plat of the United States military reservation in said township.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on the Public Lands was read, as follows:

Add the following as new sections:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the unsold portion of the grounds, and the building thereon known as the Dearborn arsenal, in the State of Michigan, except the lots named in section 1 of this act, to be reappraised and sold for cash, at not less than the appraised value, to the highest bidder, after giving not less than ninety days' notice of such sale in three of the most prominent newspapers published in said State: Provided, That each subdivision, together with any buildings, building materials, or other property, thereon, shall be appraised and offered separately, at public outcry, to the highest bidder, after which any unsold subdivision or subdivisions, together with any buildings, building materials, or other property thereon, shall be subject to sale at private entry for the appraised value, at the proper land office.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $500, to be immediately available, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry into effect the provisions of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. TAYLOR, of Illinois. Is there a report in this case? If so, I should like to hear it read.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Let the report be read; it is very short.

The report (by Mr. PAYSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8155) to grant school district No. 7 of the township of Dearborn, Wayne County, Michigan, certain lots of land for school purposes, having fully considered the same, respectfully report:

By act of Congress of March 3, 1875, volume 18, Statutes at Large, page 510, certain lands of the United States adjoining Detroit, Mich., and called the Detroit arsenal, were ordered to be platted, appraised, and sold at not less than the appraised value.

Under this, one hundred and fifty-three lots were laid off and seventy-four sold. The remainder, seventy-nine, are still the property of the United States. Only ten lots have been sold in the past six years; the value has largely depreciated, and the Secretary of the Interior has recommended a new appraisement and sale of the remainder of the lots.

The authorities of the school district in which the lots lie ask for a donation of one block, nine lots, as a school site, and, as the community is poor, the lots not valuable, probably not exceeding $600 to $800, we recommend the passage of the bill, amended by adding two appropriate sections for the sale of the remaining lots.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendment reported by the Committee on the Public Lands was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHIPMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WAGON-BRIDGE AT HASTINGS, MINN.

Mr. HALL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8047) to construct a wagon-bridge across the Mississippi River at Hastings, Minn.

Mr. HEMPHILL. After this I will call for the regular order. I had agreed with some gentlemen here that inasmuch as there had been two recognitions on the other side for requests for unanimous consent I would not object to two on this side.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands, the regular order is demanded.

Mr. FLOWER. I hope the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] will withdraw his objection. When this is disposed of my colleague [Mr. SPINOLA] desires consent for the consideration of a small bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I would like to say in explanation that I did agree with some gentlemen here that inasmuch as two gentlemen on the other side had been recognized to call up bills by unanimous consent I would not object to two on this side. But if our friends over there come in and our friends over here want to do the same thing constantly, we shall never get through.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks an examination will show that the recognitions have been equally divided between the two sides; that there has not been enough difference to account for the difference in numbers of the two sides.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I am not making any criticisms of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is very glad to have an opportunity to make this statement, because he has noticed that some criticism has been made on this point.

Mr. GEISSENHAINER. I understand the objection is withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. Is the objection withdrawn by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL]?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir.

The bill was read.

Mr. BLAND. Has this bill been favorably reported by a House committee?

Mr. HALL. Yes, sir; it is reported favorably by the Committee on Commerce; the report accompanies the bill.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Commerce were read, as follows:

After the word "structure," in line 37 of section 4, insert:
"And for the safety of vessels passing at night there shall be displayed on said bridge, from the hour of sunset to sunrise, such lights or other signals as may be prescribed by the Light-House Board."

Add a section, to be known as section 7, as follows:
"SEC. 7. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date of the passage of this act."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which concurrence was requested, a joint resolution (H. Res. 166) authorizing Ensign J. B. Bernardon, United States Navy, to accept two vases presented to him by the Government of Japan.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments a joint resolution (H. Res. 104) to permit the Secretary of War to grant a revocable license to use a pier, as petitioned by vessel-owners of Chicago, Ill., asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. CULLOM, Mr. DOLPH, and Mr. RANSOM conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 3917) to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea; and

A bill (S. 3918) in regard to collision at sea.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE, PER DIEM CUSTOMS EMPLOYEES.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider Senate bill No. 276, providing for leave of absence to the officers and employees of the customs service of the Government who receive per diem compensation.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to suggest to my friend from New York that this measure should be broadened, I think. We have been legislating in this direction for several years past, making exception of a case here and there, but enacting no legislation broad enough to cover the various departments of the Government.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that this bill does not take one penny out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. I so understand, and I am not referring to that as a provision of the bill. I am not objecting on that ground.

Mr. SPINOLA. You can bring in a general bill at any time hereafter. Let this bill go through now.

Mr. FLOWER. Yes, we can get them all in hereafter in some general measure.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not objecting, Mr. Speaker, but I do not think this is the right kind of legislation. There are, for instance, our navy-yards and certain people about the Capitol here employed, for whom no provision is made.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. Speaker, I retained the right to object, as this seemed likely to lead to discussion and consumption of time.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. BUCKALEW. Yes, I do object, and demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have not objected to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania objects and demands the regular order.

FEDERAL ELECTION LAW.

The SPEAKER. The House under the special order proceeds to consider the bill (H. R. 11045) to amend and supplement the election laws of the United States, etc. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is recognized.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask first that this bill and the report accompanying it may be reprinted for the use of the House. The supply, I am informed at the document-room, is entirely exhausted. I ask that both the majority report and the views of the minority be ordered reprinted, together with the bill.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. The first thing in order is the reading of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BUCKALEW. Before the gentleman from Massachusetts proceeds I want to understand, as a member of the minority of the committee which reported the bill, how members will have the time assigned to them in debate upon the floor; whether the chairman of the Committee on Election of President and Vice-President has anything to propose in regard to the matter? If so, I hope he will suggest some such arrangement before proceeding with his argument.

Mr. LODGE. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the time is to be equally divided, whatever it may be, between the two sides of the question; and that the recognitions, of course, will be in the usual manner. I know of no other arrangement that can be made, or has been suggested. I know there are a great many more requests for time on this side of the House than the time allotted to debate will allow; and I suppose we will have to do the best we can in regard to that matter. Of course any arrangement as to the division of time on the other side the gentleman chooses to make, or that will be satisfactory to that side, will be entirely satisfactory to me. I shall not object to any such arrangement on their part.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I would ask if the gentleman from Massachusetts proposes to control the recognitions on the majority side.

Mr. LODGE. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that outside of the members of the committee themselves, who are entitled to their time, the recognitions must proceed from the Chair, the time having been fixed by a general rule or order of the House. I do not suppose it lies with the chairman of the committee to control it.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Unless by common consent.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, unless by common consent. I have no wish personally on the subject. I have not the slightest objection to your controlling absolutely your time on that side.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I make this suggestion: That we go on for an hour or so, and I have no doubt that in the mean time some arrangement can be made which will be satisfactory to all parties.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I wish merely to say in behalf of the minority of the committee, that a large number of gentlemen, some twenty-five or thirty of the minority, have applied to the members of the committee who made the minority report for time; and their names have all been taken down, with the understanding that the minority of the committee would control the time on this side of the House. But if that arrangement is not made by consent of the House, if assignments are to be made by the Speaker, of course—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be very glad to listen to any suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania as to the control of the time on that side of the question, if he desires to control it, and no objection is made by other members of the House.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I wish to continue, Mr. Speaker, the suggestion that a number of gentlemen have also submitted their names to the Speaker for recognition and there is liability of confusion unless some understanding can be reached in the House as to the division of the time on the subject. In that event, I shall abdicate any concern about it and these gentlemen can make their own arrangements. I merely wish to add that individually I do not care a straw as to what arrangement may be made, provided it is satisfactory to the gentlemen themselves.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] control the time on that side of the House, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW] be considered as controlling the time on this side of the House.

Mr. KEER, of Iowa, and Mr. SPINOLA objected.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I have no objection to the gentleman from Pennsylvania controlling the time on that side of the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I call for the regular order, with the hope, Mr. Speaker, that after debate has proceeded for some time, some arrangement may be made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is no doubt that some satisfactory arrangement can be made, if gentlemen on the committee will endeavor to do so.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that any graver or more important subject could come before this House than the one presented by the pending bill. The subject is one which demands the most serious and deliberate treatment on the part of the House. So far as I am concerned, I desire to say that I have absolutely no personalities to indulge in; that I have no bitter reflections to make upon any one anywhere, and that it will be my endeavor to treat the question as dispassionately and as temperately as I can.

Such argument as I have to make, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make, complete and connectedly, as a whole, without being broken in upon or diverted to side issues; and I therefore would take the liberty of asking that I may be allowed to proceed without interruption, and I trust that I shall not be considered discourteous if I decline to yield to questions.

The bill before us proposes to extend and perfect existing laws in regard to the supervision of the elections of members of this body, so that they will be effective throughout the United States, wherever the application of the law is demanded. It is needless for me to say to the House that the power of the United States in regard to elections extends only to those at which members of this body are chosen. This bill proposes to exercise this power, when demanded, in such a way as to secure, so far as possible, fair and honest elections for Representatives in Congress, without disturbing or overthrowing in any way the State machinery employed for the same purpose.

The bill provides that a chief supervisor shall be appointed by the circuit courts in each judicial circuit of the United States, that on petition of 100 citizens in an entire Congressional district, or in a city of over 20,000 inhabitants, or on the petition of 50 citizens in a county, such city, Congressional district, or county shall be put under the operation of this law. Unless citizens desire the application of this law it will not be applied. If citizens do desire it to the numbers that I have mentioned, it will be applied. The duties of the officers appointed by the chief supervisor upon petition to carry out the instructions and duties imposed upon them by the bill are to act simply as officers of supervision and observation, and they stand side by side with the local officers who register and receive the votes, who count and who return them. No local machinery is disturbed, no local officer is displaced, no man, if this law is applied to a district, will cast his vote in any manner different from that in which he now casts it. No State which has adopted a system of a secret and official ballot is interfered with. On the contrary, a special provision is made for the existence of such systems, and, in a word, the operation of this law leaves the local systems entirely untouched.

The first duty of the officers appointed under this bill is that of observation and report, first on registration where registration exists, in order that such registration may be pure; that no man's name may be upon it which does not belong there, and that no man's name may be taken from it which has a right to be there. Their next duty is to stand at the polls and watch the reception of the vote. Their next duty is to take part in the count of the votes and make a return to the chief supervisor. If the law applies simply to a city or a county, their duty ends there. If, however, it applies to an entire Congressional district, the law provides for the establishment of a United States board of canvassers, also to be appointed by the circuit courts, who shall canvass and return the votes as returned to them by the supervisors, and make certificate of the same to the Clerk of this House. If that certificate agrees with the certificate of the State officers, of course the man holding both certificates is seated. If, however, they differ—and this is the only point where the law gives absolute control to the United States—the certificate of the United States board of canvassers is to be prima facie evidence, and is to place the name of the holder upon the roll of the Representatives of this body.

The penal sections now existing in regard to violations of election laws have been revised so as to make the punishment commensurate with what the committee believes to be the most serious crimes in their way that can be committed, crimes against the suffrage.

The general purposes and methods of the bill can be easily understood from the outline of its objects which I have given. Now one word as to the principles on which it rests.

The great safeguard to the public welfare of this country is publicity. Public opinion always governs in the last resort, and that it should govern rightly it needs only to be correctly informed. Everything which concerns government, from the selection of the pettiest town officer to the conduct of the vast affairs of the nation, should be done so that it may be seen and known of all men. Darkness is noxious to free institutions, but in the brightest light that can shine upon them they flourish and grow strong.

The business of the people must not be transacted in dim corners or in locked rooms, but openly, before the people's eyes, and this applies with tenfold force to the foundations upon which the whole vast system rests. The greatest assurance of honest elections lies in making absolutely public every step and every act by which the Representatives of the people are chosen to their high offices. To secure complete publicity at every stage of an election, therefore, is the leading principle of this bill. From the earliest process by which citizens are made to the very last by which Representatives are certified, every step under this bill is to be watched over and reported by officers of the United States; every transaction, no matter how trivial, if it has relation to elections and to voting, is to be brought out into light so that the people of the United States may behold and understand it. If all is well and rightly done, it will be known. If aught is wrong, it too will be known, and wrong withers away when it is dragged out into the bright light of day.

To secure absolutely this great safeguard of publicity by an accurate report of every fact, this bill provides that the officers charged with this duty shall represent the two leading parties at every registration office and every polling place where they are posted. If an officer has a political interest which leads him to misrepresent the facts, he has by his side an associate of the opposite interest to disclose the truth. These officers derive their authority from the source which is farthest removed from party politics, the courts of the United States, and their chief is so far as possible placed above temptation by holding his office by a tenure which depends solely on his fidelity to his trust and not on the chances of politics. Such is the security for an honest and entire publicity given in the bill. But a still further security is found in the fact that the local officers stand side by side with the officers of the United States. They conduct the registration and the elections, and they report them also. Thus we have two reports from two different sources of all the facts connected with the election; concealment becomes impossible without a resort to violence, and violence is in itself publicity.

The first principle in the bill, therefore, is to secure this absolute publicity in regard to everything connected with the election of a member of Congress. The second is to make sure that every man who is entitled to vote has an opportunity to cast his vote freely and have it counted, and that no man who is not entitled to vote shall be allowed to vote. To the qualified voter this bill aims to give full opportunity. If he is threatened it seeks to protect him; if he is ignorant it seeks to inform him. On the other hand, in order to prevent the man who is trying to vote in violation of the law or the officer who is fraudulent and corrupt from carrying out his wrongdoing, this bill offers the means of speedy punishment and of collecting the evidence necessary to conviction.

Such, in brief, are the provisions and the principles on which this bill rests. To the honest voter it offers no interference, but only protection in his rights; to the honest party, seeking success only by honest means, it has no terrors. But to the man or the party who seeks to do wrong and to profit by fraud, corruption, or violence, it brings publicity and punishment.

Such being the principles and purposes of the bill, two questions arise in regard to it: First, is it within the power of Congress to enact such a law; and, second, if Congress has the power, is it necessary and expedient to exercise it? As to the first point, the constitutional power to enact such legislation, there is not, I think, much room for discussion. The language of the Constitution is so plain that it admits of but one interpretation, and if doubt ever could have existed, the decisions of the Supreme Court make doubt no longer possible.

This necessary power is found in section 4, Article I, of the Constitution of the United States, which is as follows:

The times, places and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

The language employed in this section is so plain that it would seem almost superfluous to enter into argument or discussion as to its meaning. If words mean anything those just quoted mean that the power of Congress over the conduct of elections of members of this body is absolute and complete. The Constitution says that Congress may make all regulations in regard to the election of Representatives, and the power to "make regulations" thus conferred is in terms exclusive and paramount.

But out of abundance of caution the framers of the Constitution went further and added to the word "make" the words "to alter;" that is, under the Constitution, Congress has power to assume complete control of elections of its members and conduct them at such times and places and through such officers and under such rules as it may see fit. On the other hand, Congress may under this clause leave the entire regulation of the election of Representatives to the States, or it may take a partial control of a part of the necessary procedure and leave what remains to the State, or it may alter and amend the State regulations and supervise and enforce their execution.

On a matter of such importance, however, it will not be amiss to cite a few controlling authorities and to show that the power of Congress in regard to the election of Representatives is not only paramount, but that it can be exercised to any degree, from total control downward, which Congress may deem wise. In the convention of 1787, on the 9th of August, Mr. Pinckney and Mr. Rutledge moved to strike out the words which in the draught then before the convention conferred this power upon Congress. The motion was lost, apparently without a division, and, if we may judge from Mr. Madison's notes, had no serious support in the convention. The remarks made, however, in opposition to the motion of Mr. Pinckney show clearly the view taken of this clause by the framers of the Constitution and the paramount character of the power conveyed by it, although in the draught then under consideration the clause was much less sweeping than it afterwards became in the instrument as adopted.

Mr. MADISON. The necessity of a general government supposes that the State Legislatures will sometimes fail or refuse to consult the common interest at the expense of their local conveniences or prejudices. The policy of referring the appointment of the House of Representatives to the people and not to the Legislatures of the States supposes that the result will be somewhat influenced by the mode. This view of the question seems to decide that the Legislatures of the States ought not to have the uncontrolled right of regulating the times, places, and manner of holding elections. These were words of great latitude. It was impossible to foresee all the abuses that might be made of the discretionary power. Whether the electors should vote by ballot or viva voce; should assemble at this place or that place; should be divided into districts or all meet at one place; should all vote for all the Representatives or all in a district vote for a number allotted to the district—these and many other points would depend on the Legislatures, and might materially affect the appointments.

Whenever the State Legislatures had a favorite measure to carry they would take care so to mold their regulations as to favor the candidates they wished to succeed. Besides, the inequality of the representation in the Legislatures of particular States would produce a like inequality in their representation in the National Legislature, as it was presumable that the counties having the power in the former case would secure it to themselves in the latter. What danger could there be in giving a controlling power to the National Legislature? Of whom was it to consist? First, of a Senate to be chosen by the State Legislatures. If the latter, therefore, could be trusted, their representatives could not be dangerous.

Secondly, of Representatives elected by the same people who elect the State Legislatures. Surely, then, if confidence is due to the latter it must be due to the former. It seemed as improper in principle, though it might be less inconvenient in practice, to give to the State Legislatures this great authority over the election of the Representatives of the people in the General Legislature as it would be to give to the latter a like power over the election of their representatives in the State Legislature.

Mr. KING. If this power be not given to the National Legislature, their right of judging of the returns of their members may be frustrated. No probability has been suggested of its being abused by them. Although this scheme of erecting the General Government on the authority of the State Legislatures has been fatal to the Federal establishment, it would seem as if many gentlemen still foster the dangerous idea.

Mr. Gouverneur Morris observed that the States might make false returns, and then make no provisions for new elections.—The Madison Papers, volume 3, pages 1280, 1281.

The interpretation then given to this clause of the Constitution has never been shaken. Mr. George Ticknor Curtis, in the latest edition of his Constitutional History of the United States, which is, as everybody is aware, a work of very high authority and great research, says in regard to this clause:

This provision originated with the committee of detail; but as it was reported by them, there was no other authority reserved to Congress itself than that of altering the regulations of the States, and this authority extended as well to the place of choosing the Senators as to all the other circumstances of the election. In the convention, however, the authority of Congress was extended beyond the alteration of State regulations so as to embrace a power to make rules, as well as to alter those made by the States. But the place of choosing the Senators was excepted altogether from this restraining authority and left to the States. Mr. Madison, in his minutes, adds the explanation that the power of Congress to make regulations was supplied, in order to enable them to regulate the elections if the States should fail or refuse to do so. But the text of the Constitution, as finally settled, gives authority to Congress "at any time" to "make or alter such regulations;" and this would seem to confer a power which, when exercised, must be paramount, whether a State regulation exists at the time or not.—Constitutional History of the United States, volume I, pages 479, 480.

We are not left, however, merely to the views of the convention or of the commentators upon the Constitution to learn the meaning of this clause, conferring the power to regulate elections. Its correct interpretation has been twice given in the fullest manner by the supreme judicial tribunal upon which the Constitution confers the authority to determine finally upon the meaning of its own provisions. In the case of Siebold (Ex parte Siebold, 100 United States, 371), Mr. Justice Bradley delivering the opinion of the court, Justices Clifford and Field dissenting, the following passages give the views of the court upon this important power of Congress:

It seems to us that the natural sense of these words is the contrary of that assumed by the counsel of the petitioners.

After first authorizing the States to prescribe the regulations, it is added, the Congress may at any time, by law, make or alter such regulations. "Make or alter!" What is the plain meaning of these words? If not under the prepossession of some abstract theory of the relations between the State and National Governments, we should not have any difficulty in understanding them. There is no declaration that the regulations shall be made either wholly by the State Legislatures or wholly by Congress. If Congress does not interfere, of course they may be made wholly by the State; but if it chooses to interfere, there is nothing in the words to prevent its doing so, either wholly or partially.

On the contrary, their necessary implication is that it may do either. It may either make the regulations or it may alter them. If it only alters, leaving, as manifest convenience requires, the general organization of the polls to the State, there results a necessary co-operation of the two governments in regulating the subject. But no repugnance in the system of regulations can arise thence, for the power of Congress over the subject is paramount. It may be exercised as and when Congress sees fit to exercise it. When exercised, the action of Congress, so far as it extends and conflicts with the regulations of the State, necessarily supersedes them. This is implied in the power to "make or alter." (Pages 383, 384.)

So in the case of laws for regulating the elections of Representatives to Congress. The State may make regulations on the subject; Congress may make regulations on the same subject, or may alter or add to those already made. The paramount character of those made by Congress has the effect to supersede those made by the State, so far as the two are inconsistent, and no further.

There is no such conflict between them as to prevent their forming a harmonious system perfectly capable of being administered and carried out as such. (Page 386.)

The objection that the laws and regulations, the violation of which is made punishable by the acts of Congress, are State laws and have not been adopted by Congress is no sufficient answer to the power of Congress to impose punishment. It is true that Congress has not deemed it necessary to interfere with the duties of the ordinary officers of election, but has been content to leave them as prescribed by State laws. It has only created additional sanctions for their performance, and provided means of supervision in order more effectually to secure such performance. The imposition of punishment implies a prohibition of the act punished. The State laws which Congress sees no occasion to alter, but which it allows to stand, are in effect adopted by Congress. It simply demands their fulfillment. Content to leave the laws as they are, it is not content with the means provided for their enforcement. It provides additional means for that purpose, and we think it is entirely within its constitutional power to do so. It is simply the exercise of the power to make additional regulation. (Pages 385, 386.)

On the contrary, as already said, we think it clear that the clause of the Constitution relating to the regulation of such elections contemplates such co-operation whenever Congress deems it expedient to interfere merely to alter or add to existing regulations of the State. If the two governments had an entire equality of jurisdiction there might be an intrinsic difficulty in such co-operation. Then the adoption by the State government of a system of regulations might exclude the action of Congress. By first taking jurisdiction of the subject the State would acquire exclusive jurisdiction in virtue of a well-known principle applicable to courts having co-ordinate jurisdiction over the same matter. But no such equality exists in the present case. The power of Congress, as we have seen, is paramount, and may be exercised at any time, and to any extent which it deems expedient; and so far as it is exercised, and no further, the regulations effected supersede those of the State which are inconsistent therewith.

The Supreme Court also discussed this clause of the Constitution still more fully in Ex parte Yarborough (110 U. S., 651) when Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court and no dissent was noted:

That a Government whose essential character is republican, whose executive head and legislative body are both elective, whose most numerous and powerful branch of the Legislature is elected by the people directly, has no power by appropriate laws to secure this election from the influence of violence, of corruption, and of fraud in a proposition so startling as to arrest attention and demand the gravest consideration.

If this Government is anything more than a mere aggregation of delegated agents of other States and governments, each of which is superior to the General Government, it must have the power to protect the elections on which its existence depends from violence and corruption.

If it has not this power it is left helpless before the two great natural and historical enemies of all republics, open violence and insidious corruption. (Pages 657, 658.)

Will it be denied that it is in the power of that body to provide laws for the proper conduct of those elections? To provide, if necessary, the officers who shall conduct them and make return of the result? And, especially, to provide in an election held under its own authority for security of life and limb to the voter while in the exercise of this function. Can it be doubted that Congress can by law protect the act of voting, the place where it is done, and the man who votes from personal violence or intimidation and the election itself from corruption and fraud?

If this be so, and it is not doubted, are such powers annulled because an election for State officers is held at the same time and place? Is any less important that the election of members of Congress should be the free choice of all the electors because State officers are to be elected at the same time? (Ex parte Siebold, 100 U. S., 371.)

These questions answer themselves; and it is only because the Congress of the United States, through long habit and long years of forbearance, has, in deference and respect to the States, refrained from the exercise of these powers that they are now doubted.

But when, in the pursuance of a new demand for action, that body, as it did in the cases just enumerated, finds it necessary to make additional laws for the free, the pure, and the safe exercise of this right of voting they stand upon the same ground and are to be upheld for the same reasons. (Pages 661, 662.)

If this were conceded, the importance to the General Government of having the actual election—the voting for those members—free from force and fraud is not diminished by the circumstance that the qualification of the voter is determined by the law of the State where he votes. It equally affects the Government; it is as indispensable to the proper discharge of the great function of legislation for that Government that those who are to control this legislation shall not owe their election to bribery or violence, whether the class of persons who shall vote is determined by the law of the State or by the law of the United States, or by their united result. (Page 663.)

If the Government of the United States has within its constitutional domain no authority to provide against these evils, if the very sources of power may be poisoned by corruption or controlled by violence and outrage without legal restraint, then, indeed, is the country in danger, and its best powers, its highest purposes, the hopes which it inspires, and the love which enshrines it, are at the mercy of the combinations of those who respect no right but brute force, on the one hand, and unprincipled corruptionists on the other. (Page 667.)

The court in Ex parte Siebold also ruled very plainly in regard to the power of Congress under this clause of the Constitution to treat State officers conducting elections as officers of the United States:

It is objected that Congress has no power to enforce State laws or to punish State officers, and especially has no power to punish them for violating the laws of their own State. As a general proposition this is undoubtedly true, but when in the performance of their functions State officers are called to fulfill duties which they owe to the United States as well as to the State, has the former no means of compelling such fulfillment?

In view of the fact that Congress has plenary and paramount jurisdiction over the whole subject, it seems almost absurd to say that an officer who receives or has custody of the ballots given for a Representative owes no duty to the National Government which Congress can enforce, or that an officer who stuffs the ballot-box can not be made amenable to the United States. If Congress has not, prior to the passage of the present laws, imposed any penalties to prevent and punish frauds and violations of duty committed by officers of election it has been because the exigency has not been deemed sufficient to require it, and not because Congress has not the requisite power. (Pages 397, 398.)

They also decided that it conferred upon Congress the power to appoint officers of its own to act as police at the polls, where a member of Congress is being chosen, for the preservation of order and for the protection of the electors in their right to freely and peaceably cast their ballots:

The counsel for the petitioners concede that Congress may, if it sees fit, assume the entire control and regulation of the election of Representatives. This would necessarily involve the appointment of the places for holding the polls, the times for voting, and the officers for holding the election; it would require the regulation of the duties to be performed, the custody of the ballots, the mode of ascertaining the result, and every other matter relating to the subject. Is it possible that Congress could not, in that case, provide for keeping the peace at such elections and for arresting and punishing those guilty of breaking it?

If it could not, its power would be but a shadow and a name. But if Congress can do this, where is the difference in principle in its making provision for securing the preservation of the peace, so as to give to every citizen his free right to vote without molestation or injury, when it assumes only to supervise the regulations made by the State, and not to supersede them entirely? In our judgment there is no difference; and if the power exists in the one case it exists in the other. (Ex parte Siebold, page 396.)

In view of the language of the Constitution, of its intention as explained by its framers, and of the full and elaborate decisions of the Supreme Court on every point which could be involved therein, there can be no need for your committee to offer further argument as to the constitutional powers of Congress to pass such a bill as that which they report herewith. This bill is only a partial exercise of the plenary power of Congress in regard to the election of Representatives. It provides merely that the United States shall watch over every stage of an election which concerns the choice of a member of this body, shall give to all those proceedings the utmost publicity, which in this country is the surest safeguard of the rights of the people, and shall by a single act of control, if necessary, prevent the false certification of a member by any State officer or officers who may be ready to violate the laws.

Mr. Speaker, I will not enter further into the constitutional question, for it seems to me to be wholly needless. It is safe to say that no clause of the Constitution is more plainly expressed than that which relates to the control by Congress of Congressional elections, and that none has ever been more decisively construed by the great tribunal upon whom the high duty of finally interpreting the Constitution devolves. Congress has the absolute power to deal with the election of members of this House as it pleases; and the fact that it has never used this or any other power sparingly makes no difference in the argument. Power implies responsibility, and where responsibility exists it can not be shirked by leaving in abeyance the exercise of the power designed to meet it. If citizens of the United States entitled to vote for Representatives in Congress are deprived of their rights, it is the duty of Congress to see that they are protected. If Congressional elections anywhere are tainted with fraud or corruption, or are perverted by violence, it is the duty of Congress to interfere, and that duty is imperative, because the power of interference exists. If the people, or any considerable body of people, believe that Congressional elections anywhere are fraudulent or corrupt, it is the duty of Congress to interfere in order to restore public confidence.

It is not enough that elections should be fair; they must be known to be fair. They must be known to be fair beyond the reach of doubt or questioning. It is as important to have public confidence in the verdict of the ballot-box as it is to have the verdict itself honest. If people come to believe that the result of the elections is not in reality the will of the majority, the day is not far distant when that result will be set aside by force and the very foundations of the Government will be shaken. If popular distrust is not well founded Congress must demonstrate that elections are fair. If fraud and violence really exist they must really be rooted out. Congress therefore has the power, and with the power the duty, to legislate; and the method in which it proposes to deal with the question, under this bill, is before the House. The only point that now remains to be considered, and it is the most important of all, is that which relates to the expediency and necessity of such legislation—a question to be determined by an appeal to facts.

This bill is a national bill, intended to guard Congressional elections in every part of the country when it may be demanded. I have heard it freely charged that it is not national but sectional, yet when I observe the heat of the persons and of the newspapers who make the assertion, their vehemence leads one to remember "that suspicion always haunts the guilty mind." It was said many years ago by a distinguished statesman of my own State that freedom was national and slavery sectional. So it may be said with equal truth that honest elections are national and dishonest elections are sectional. If an impure ballot-box was a universal condition the frame of the National Government could not long endure. Anything that makes for purity of elections must be national in its scope, and fraud, although not confined to any section of the country, is, fortunately for us, always local and sporadic, and therefore never national. The facts in the case, however, demonstrate the national character of this measure more thoroughly than anything else.

The legislation of which this is an extension and improvement was made necessary by the gigantic frauds in the city of New York prior to the enactment of the legislation of 1870 and 1871. That certainly is not a sectional origin, in the sense in which the word is used against this or any other measure which aims to secure honest elections. It is now proposed to bring within the provisions of an effective law of similar character all parts of the country where fraud, violence, or corruption at the ballot-box is known or suspected, and I propose to show, first, the need of such legislation in certain Northern districts, and to prove it by our experience under the existing law.

In May, 1870, there was a special election held in New York for the office of chief-justice, a special election for a legal office, not calling forth, probably, any great display of party feeling. In the first eight wards of New York there were polled at that special election 37,780 votes—that was the total of the votes of all sides. Before the November election the first part, and a very limited part, of the existing supervisors law was enacted, and at the November election, at a general election for a member of Congress, those same eight wards cast 22,839 votes; a decline of 14,941 votes in six months. Starting with that vote of 37,780 in May, 1870, for chief-justice, I have here a statement of the votes of those wards in each Presidential election except 1884, which are accidentally omitted in the table subjoined (see appendix, Table I, A and B), up to the Presidential election of 1888. From the election of November, 1870, when these wards polled 22,000 votes, there has been a steady but normal increase in the vote, just as the population has increased, until in 1888 those wards polled 32,004 votes. That is, there was a total loss in all the wards but one of 9,454 votes, a gain over 1870 in one ward of 3,678 votes, and in the total Presidential vote of 1888, compared with the vote of the special election for chief-justice in 1870, there was a net loss of 5,776 votes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to look at that same body of votes in another way. (See appendix, Table I, C.) I have here thirteen election precincts selected from those wards in order to show the proportion of the vote to the total population of the district. In the sixth election district of the First ward, for every three of the total population there was one vote. In the twelfth election district of the Eighth ward there was one vote for every two of the population. In the thirteenth election district of the Eighth ward there was one vote for every 1.67 of population; and when we come to the tenth election district of the Sixth ward, we find there that for every ninety-three of the population, men, women, and children, there were cast 100 votes! [Laughter.] In the tenth election district of the Sixth ward, in 1870, the Democratic vote alone, throwing out the vote of other parties, was 884, or 14 more than the whole number of persons resident in the ward, men, women, and children, native, naturalized, and aliens. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, in those earlier and "better days," before modern realism had come in to put its fetters upon fiction, persons of fertile imagination who desired to make up election returns made them up in the method of the romantic school of writers. They were not troubled by the desire of plausibility or reality. They made their returns big and handsome, just as the old novelists made all their heroes brave and all their heroines beautiful. [Laughter.]

There was another feature of New York elections at that time, known as the naturalization frauds of 1868. Under the supervisors law, which came in 1870 and 1871, many of the men who participated in those frauds were brought to justice and most of them gave up naturalization papers which they had obtained illegally in 1868. I have examined those files a little, and I have looked at the affidavits of the men who themselves gave up their papers fraudulently obtained and made affidavits as to how they had obtained them.

I will not weary the House by going into details, but I will mention a few merely to show the methods by which the work was done. For instance, there is the case of a Spaniard who, after he had been a few days in the country, had a certificate of naturalization left for him at his house. This was the usual procedure, the certificate of naturalization was generally left at the man's house as a free gift to the person whose fraudulent vote it was desired to secure. Here is another: John Lawrence, who was under age and had been only a few days in the country, was handed his certificate of naturalization in a liquor store. One man, although two years had not elapsed since his declaration of intention, received a certificate on presenting a card from the City Hall to the clerk of the court. Joseph Carey received his in a liquor store; but in order to make it seem more real and natural, he paid the proprietor of the store a fee of $2. Another had his certificate handed to him in the City Hall corridor; another received his on the horse-car; and so it went.

Now, Mr. Speaker, naturalization is the foundation of citizenship—the way in which citizens are made in this country.

Mr. FLOWER. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. LODGE. I should be obliged if the gentleman would allow me to proceed without interruption. These frauds there were largely carried on and were checked if not extirpated by the supervisors' law. Where they still exist they are the product of the great Northern cities and Northern States where foreign immigration chiefly comes. Mr. Speaker, I do not think we can put too high a value on the gift of American citizenship. I believe that this should be more sacredly guarded than anything else that we have to give, and any law which checks naturalization can not be too rigid or too widely extended and enforced.

Now, in case it should occur to any one to say that this is merely the substitution of one set of officers in the interests of one party for another set of officers in the interests of another party, and that the results are no more reliable in one case than in the other, I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that it has never been shown that any legal voter has ever been interfered with in his right to vote in the city of New York since that time by the law appointing United States supervisors. No such case at least has ever been presented so far as I have been able to find out. But in further proof of the fact that this law has done no harm, but has done great good, I will invoke here the testimony of a distinguished public man who was never listened to in this House with aught but respect, who was a Representative of the city of New York, and who as the head of a special committee made a careful examination into this subject in 1877. Hon. S. S. Cox, in his report as the chairman of the Committee on Alleged Fraudulent Registration and Fraudulent Voting in the cities of New York, Philadelphia, Brooklyn, and Jersey City, took occasion to say:

Whatever may be said about the United States law as to elections or their supervision by United States authority, whatever may be said as to the right of a State to regulate in all ways such elections, this must be said, that the administration of the law by Commissioners Davenport, Muirhead, and Allen, the United States functionaries and their subordinates, was eminently just and wise and conducive to a fair public expression in a Presidential year of unusual excitement and great temptation.

The testimony of Mr. Davenport, the United States commissioner for the southern district of New York, is a remarkable statement, which the committee would adopt as the basis of their report as to the three cities.

I think no one who will look at these figures, showing the enormous frauds committed in the city of New York, before the United States stood guard over the elections, can refuse to say that such legislation was of enormous value in the interest of honest voting and of the good Government which honest voting can alone produce, and that it has helped forward the cause of ballot reform and of improved election methods, in respect to which New York stands to-day in the very front rank.

New York, however, Mr. Speaker, is not the only large city in the United States, nor is it the only city where at times the elections have been tainted with fraud and corruption. There has been an investigation running on all winter into the frauds of a city close by New York. I need not go over that testimony. Everybody has seen the evidence as to the Hudson County frauds, but when at the close of an election there are found, as I understand, in a patent-locked ballot-box the shirt-cuffs and shirt-buttons of the inspector of elections, it indicates that somewhere or other there is a break in the law or in the box.

Mr. Speaker, there are other such districts elsewhere of similar character. They are plague spots which should be promptly cured. I need not go over the questions of the poll-list and tally-list forgeries and other election frauds with which we are all familiar. They have become notorious, and there is no need to do more than allude to them.

But, now, let us take a more general state of facts. In some States there is what is called a permanent registration. That is the case in my own State. No matter how honestly the registration is carried out, it is my belief that any permanent registration in a large city must accumulate names which represent nobody, and which, therefore, throw open the door for an ever-increasing fraud. Those names stand there a constant temptation, to be kept on the list by unscrupulous men of both parties and of all shades of opinion, so that they may vote upon them other men whom they can control, and thus be enabled to repeat in voting. Nothing can be more wholesome than to have those permanent lists thoroughly overhauled from time to time by men who stand outside with no local interests to subserve. It brings them out into the light; it gives them publicity. As a resident in a State where that system of registration prevails, I have no hesitation in saying that I believe it would be well, very well, to have those permanent registration lists in large cities overhauled in this way. If there is nothing wrong, then it will dispose of such accusations as are now made from time to time that the lists are not right. If they are wrong, it will remedy the wrong, and I do not believe that anything or anybody or any party that is honest in its intentions, purposes, and aims was ever hurt by having the truth and the whole truth known about elections, from beginning to end.

Mr. Speaker, the elections in the great Northern cities are not the only ones which have come under suspicion. It is believed by a very large portion of the American people that there are districts in the South where fraud in some form controls despotically the verdict of the ballot-box. I have always observed, sir, among the gentlemen who represent those States a noble zeal against the varied forms of wrongdoing which have at times disfigured Northern elections. Nothing can be finer than the honest and manly rage with which they denounce bribery, the great factor, they say, in Northern elections, and the foundation of Republican success. Whoever benefits by bribery, it is an evil thing and a grave peril to-day in the commonwealth. I, for one, do not underestimate it or blink it in the least. I say frankly that I will join hands with any of our zealous friends on the other side in promoting legislation which will put a stop to it.

If I could have my way, Mr. Speaker, I would put the secret and official ballot into every district of this country, because that is the only thing I have ever seen which actually and practically stops the use of money at elections. It must not be forgotten, however, that legislation against bribery or any other crime against free suffrage must be national in its character. I am more than ready to make it so, and we have gone as far in this bill against it as we can go in a bill which does not provide for a secret and official ballot. In return I ask my friends who are so warm on the subject of corruption to unite with me in legislation which shall be applicable not only to bribery and corruption but to the other evils which beset elections. Since they are so eager to remove the mote from their brother's eye they might agree that it is but fair to take the beam from their own.

In regard to Southern elections, Mr. Speaker, one of two things must be true—the elections are either fair, free, and honest, or they are not. There can be, unfortunately, no question of the widespread belief among a large body of the American people that many of these elections are the very reverse of fair, free, and honest. Whichever state of facts is the correct one, it is the paramount duty of the National Government to restore to the people confidence in these as in all other elections. If, as I have heard it stated on this floor, Southern elections are perfectly fair, and the black man goes carolling to the voting place by the side of his employer, seeking only to cast his vote for those whose interests are identical with his own, then, sir, it is the duty of the United States Government to uncover this pleasing picture and display it to the country so that confidence may be restored, and no man may suspect longer that Southern elections are open to criticism.

If all is right and well in elections in the South this law can hurt no one, but will be, on the contrary, of unprecedented value to those communities now accused of wrongdoing. No people will be so much benefited by it as the people of the South, for it will demonstrate at once that the generally accepted Northern view is groundless and unjust. If, on the other hand, the belief of large masses of the people, that in certain regions of the South such a thing as a fair election is unknown, is well founded, then it is high time that the United States should put a stop to that evil, if they have to exercise to the very last point every power that the Constitution has put into their hands.

If, Mr. Speaker, as I have said all is well with Southern elections, as we hear declared on this floor by Representatives from that region with all the solemnity of Roman augurs, there can be no possible objection to this legislation. On the contrary, they of all people ought to desire it. But if, when the Roman augurs retire from the public gaze they hold a different language in the recesses of the temple, if they fight with the utmost fury against every attempt to regulate or improve elections, then we are forced to believe that these accusations are not groundless, and it is easy to show why we should deal with the existing facts as here proposed.

It would not be fair to cite here anything in the nature of a private conversation, but now and then some of these lovers of honest elections grow careless, and their utterances on the subject creep out into light of day to be much admired and pondered by all men.

The newspapers of the South also always discuss this matter with great vigor and with a frankness which is as charming as the language they use is polished and civilized.

But again we can spare ourselves anything which seems to savor of personality by a consideration of certain figures to which I now ask the attention of the House. The total vote returned for ten Representatives from Georgia in 1886 was 27,520; in 1888 it was 130,134. In Mississippi the total vote returned for seven Representatives in 1886 was 46,748, and in 1888 it was 115,216. In South Carolina the total vote returned for seven Representatives was 39,077, while in 1888 it was 76,369. I have the figures here from one hundred and sixty-four other districts, which I will print as an appendix, and from which I wish merely at this time to draw a few comparisons. (See appendix, Table II, A.)

An analysis of this table shows that there were one hundred and fifty-one Congressional districts in each of which the total vote returned for Representative in 1886 exceeded the aggregate vote returned from the ten Congressional districts of the State of Georgia; that there were thirteen districts in each of which the total vote returned in 1886 exceeded the aggregate vote from the seven districts of South Carolina, and that there were six districts in which the total vote returned exceeded the aggregate from the seven Congressional districts of Mississippi. Moreover, an inspection and comparison of the election returns of 1888 show that of four Representatives, one from Colorado [Mr. TOWNSEND], one from Kansas [Mr. PETERS], one from Minnesota [Mr. SNIDER], and one from Nebraska [Mr. DORSEY], each is backed by more votes than are the seven Representatives from South Carolina—from Colorado, 92,000; from the Seventh district of Kansas, 82,000; from the Fourth district of Minnesota, 82,000; and from the Third district of Nebraska, 77,000. Here are the figures: Total vote of South Carolina for Representatives in the Fifty-first Congress as returned, 76,369; total vote for one Representative from Colorado, 92,309; total vote Seventh Congress district of Kansas, 82,244; total vote Fourth Congress district of Minnesota, 82,373; total vote Third Congress district of Nebraska, 77,892.

The one hundred and fifty-one districts above enumerated each cast more than 27,520 votes for Congress candidates in 1886. It may be of interest to note the districts in each of which 15,000 votes or less were returned. I have them here in a table. (See appendix, Table II, B.) There are forty-five of them, each of which returned less than 15,000 votes for a Representative in the Fifty-first Congress, and forty-one of those districts are in the South. Only fifteen of those districts returned as many as 10,000 votes each in 1886; the average for the remaining thirty districts—I desire to call the attention of the House particularly to this part of the comparison—the average for the remaining thirty districts being 4,167 votes each, or 26,673 votes less per district than the average per district of two hundred and four districts in the twenty-two States of the North and West.

To express it in another form, the thirty districts with thirty votes in the House of Representatives cast and returned a total of 125,015 votes, which was 11,000 votes less than the returned vote of the three districts of Nebraska; 3,000 votes less than the returned vote of the four districts of Maine; nearly 70,000 votes less than the returned vote of the six districts of California; only 2,000 more than the returned vote of the four districts of Connecticut; less than one-half of the returned vote of the seven districts of Kansas; 120,000 less than the returned vote of the twelve districts of Massachusetts; less than one-third of the returned vote of the eleven districts of Michigan; 79,000 votes less than the returned vote of the five districts of Minnesota; 104,000 votes less than the returned vote of the seven districts of New Jersey; considerably less than one-seventh of the returned vote of the thirty-four districts of the State of New York; a little more than one-sixth of the returned vote of the twenty-one districts of Ohio, and considerably less than one-half of the returned vote of the nine districts of Wisconsin.

Moreover it was 99,000 votes less than the returned vote of the ten districts of Virginia; 107,000 votes less than the returned vote of the ten districts of Tennessee, and 69,000 votes less than the returned vote of the nine districts of North Carolina; 25,000 less than the returned vote of the six districts of Maryland; 5,000 less than the returned vote of the four districts of West Virginia, and 293,000 votes less than the returned vote of the fourteen districts of Missouri.

These figures, Mr. Speaker, seem to possess some significance. They do not appear to me to be mere curiosities of arithmetic.

Now I have here another table (see appendix, Table III) which shows the ratio of the voting population to the total population, and it is interesting to notice that where States had a census in 1885, and where we can make comparisons, we find that the ratio of increase in the vote corresponds very accurately with the ratio of increase in the total population. That is, allowing for the differences of off years and Presidential years, there is a steady increase in the vote, which bears an exact relation to the increase of population. On these ratios I am grieved to say that there are three States which show an apparent decrease of population in the last ten years.

If the ratio of voting population to total population means anything, and it is usually perfectly accurate, then the population of Georgia has decreased 145,530 since 1880; the population of Mississippi, 123,154, and that of South Carolina, 533,027.

In Mississippi there was an enormous decrease of the vote between 1876 and 1880. In 1876 the total vote was 164,773, in 1880 only 117,078, a decrease of 47,700 votes in the short space of four years. In 1888 the total number of votes returned was only 115,567, showing a steady but slower decrease during the eight preceding years, and an aggregate decrease in twelve years of no less than 49,211 votes, or about 30 per cent.

Now, let us compare Mississippi and New Jersey. They both are Democratic States. They both have the same number of Representatives in Congress. The population, curiously enough, in 1880 was almost exactly identical. In 1880 the population of Mississippi was 1,131,597, and the population of New Jersey was 1,131,116. In 1880 Mississippi returned a total vote of 117,078, and New Jersey a total vote of 245,928.

In 1888 the total vote of Mississippi had shrunk to 115,567, and the total vote of New Jersey had swelled to 303,741. Each of the seven Representatives from Mississippi in the Fifty-first Congress represents an average of 16,459 votes cast and counted, and each of the seven Representatives from the State of New Jersey is backed by an average of 43,335 votes. (See appendix, Table IV.)

Now compare South Carolina and Kansas, one a Democratic and the other a Republican State. These States, in 1880, started in a race which was almost even as to population. South Carolina had 995,577 inhabitants; Kansas had 996,090. The representation of South Carolina was increased from 5 to 7 and of Kansas from 3 to 7. In 1880 the total vote of South Carolina was 170,956, and the total vote of Kansas was 201,236. In 1888 the total vote of South Carolina had dwindled to 79,750, a decrease of 91,206, or more than 53 per cent. in eight years. In 1888 the total vote of Kansas was 334,035, an increase of 132,799, or nearly 40 per cent. in eight years. Each Representative in the Fifty-first Congress from South Carolina is backed by an average of 10,909 returned votes, and each Representative from Kansas is backed by an average of 47,040 votes. (See appendix, Table V.)

In 1886 the total Congressional vote of South Carolina was 39,077, or 23,688 less than that of the district represented by Mr. PITERS, of Kansas. In 1888 the total vote returned for Congress in the seven South Carolina districts was 76,369, 5,875 votes less than the total vote cast and returned in the district now represented by Mr. PITERS.

Under the present apportionment the ratio of representation is 151,912. According to that ratio, supposing that the vote indicates correctly a decrease of the population, South Carolina is entitled to three instead of seven Representatives in Congress, on a population of 462,- 550; and Georgia, on the same basis, is entitled to nine Representatives instead of ten, if the Presidential vote of 1888 be taken as the multiplier, and she would be entitled to eight Representatives instead of ten if the Congressional vote of 1888 should be taken as the multiplier, the latter total being 12,705 less than the former and indicating a population of only 1,268,805.

Of course the foregoing comparisons are based upon the theory to which I have alluded, that elections are as free and fair and election returns as honest in Mississippi and South Carolina as in New Jersey and Kansas.

It may, perhaps, be urged that it is unfair to compare Northern States with Southern States. The three States of Georgia, Tennessee, and Virginia have an equal representation in Congress. The population and number of men of voting age in each State in 1880 were as follows:

State.	Population in 1880.	Men 21 years old and upward, 1880.
Georgia.....	1,542,180	321,488
Tennessee.....	1,542,359	330,306
Virginia.....	1,612,565	334,505

Georgia and Virginia were among the "original Thirteen" which fixed the basis of representation, and they with Tennessee have shared equally in the remarkable prosperity which has overspread many of the Southern States within the past twenty years. Georgia in 1880 contained about 15,000 more colored men twenty-one years old and upward than did Virginia—the totals being, respectively, 143,471 and 128,257. Georgia contained about 63,000 more colored men twenty-one years old and upward than did Tennessee, the totals being 143,471 and 80,250, respectively. The latter State was admitted into the Union only seven years after the adoption of the Constitution; both States have a large proportion of population engaged in agriculture; mining and manufacturing have gained a firm foothold in both States; they touch each other geographically. It is evident, therefore, that the normal political conditions of these States can not differ widely, and that a comparison of results can not be unfair. It is found in the table given in the appendix, numbered VI.

It will be noted that more votes were cast for Representative in the Third Tennessee district in 1886 than were cast in the ten Georgia districts in the same year, while in the First Tennessee district the number was only 174 less than the total for the ten Georgia districts.

Now, as to the weight in legislation and in conducting the National Government that is implied in these figures. In the Fiftyth Congress Georgia furnished the chairmen of the following House committees: Elections; Post-Office and Post-Roads; Education; Reform in the Civil Service; and one member each for the Committees on Ways and Means; Appropriations; Judiciary; Coinage, Weights, and Measures; Commerce; Foreign Affairs; Territories; Railways and Canals; Manufactures; Mines and Mining; Pacific Railroads; Labor; Patents; Pensions; Revision of the Laws; Expenditures in the State Department; Accounts; Enrolled Bills, and Census—four chairmen and nineteen other members of committees.

In the same Congress South Carolina furnished the chairmen of the Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds, District of Columbia, and Labor Troubles in Pennsylvania; and one member each of the following committees: Banking and Currency; Coinage, Weights, and Measures; Foreign Affairs; Military Affairs; Naval Affairs; Indian Affairs; Territories; Patents; Private Land Claims; Revision of the Laws; Reform in the Civil Service; Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives, and Census—three chairmen and thirteen other members of committees.

Mississippi furnished the chairman of the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River, and one member each for the following committees: Elections (Mr. Barry, whose district had returned 3,086 votes); Rivers and Harbors; Agriculture; Foreign Affairs; Military Affairs; Post-Office and Post-Roads; Public Lands; Indian Affairs; Pensions; War Claims; Expenditures in Navy Department; Expenditures in Post-Office Department; Expenditures on Public Buildings, and Indian Depredation Claims—one chairman and fourteen other members of committees.

New Jersey furnished the chairman of Militia and one member each of the following committees: Coinage, Weights, and Measures; Agriculture; Foreign Affairs; Railways and Canals; Manufactures; Public Buildings and Grounds; Labor; Militia; Invalid Pensions; Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives, and Indian Depredation Claims—one chairman and eleven other members of committees.

The twenty-four Representatives from the three States of Georgia, Mississippi, and South Carolina, who represented an aggregate returned vote of 113,345, filled eight chairmanships and forty-six other places on House committees in the Fiftyth Congress. In the same Congress the State of New York, with thirty-four Representatives backed by a total returned vote of 930,837, filled five chairmanships—the only one of importance being that of Census—and sixty-two other members of committees.

This was an average of 2½ committee places for each Representative from the three States first named, the average vote of each district being 4,723, and an average of 1½ committee places for each Representative in the State of New York, where the average total vote per district was 34,481, or more than seven times as great. The first three States had two members of the Elections Committee; New York had none. They had one representative on Ways and Means; New York had none. They had three members of Foreign Affairs; New York had one member.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to the increase of the vote from one election to another. The picturesquely small votes of 1886 did not continue. They were increased. In the following year these votes rose. The vote of Alabama increased 100 per cent.; the vote of Arkansas increased 182 per cent.; the vote of Mississippi increased 146 per cent.; the vote of South Carolina increased 95 per cent., and the vote of Georgia in two years increased 370 per cent. These percentages of increase, Mr. Speaker, are beyond nature. They can only be considered as works of art, and I leave them for the consideration of the House without comment on my part, only adding—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's hour has expired.

Mr. LODGE. The gentleman from Vermont, a member of the committee, will yield me further time.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I yield whatever portion of my time the gentleman may require.

Mr. LODGE. I only add that the average increase of the votes in the other States of the Union is between 30 and 40 per cent. from an off year to a Presidential year. (See Appendix, Table VII.)

Mr. Speaker, these statistics speak loudly enough as to the voting in the various States. I have no intention of going further and of entering upon an elaborate discussion of the overwhelming testimony to be found in countless election cases and in the unstudied utterances of Southern newspapers and of Southern representatives as to the actual manner in which Southern elections are sometimes conducted.

No intelligent and fair-minded man is going to deny that there have been frauds in Northern elections. I have no doubt that they have existed and that they still exist, and the greatest proof of it is the earnest effort now being made in every Northern State to-day by both parties to root out those evils and to destroy the suspicion of them if they do really exist, by the most elaborate devices that the wit of man can devise. This shows not only that these evils have existed, but that the people of those States are prepared to deal with them and are dealing with them. There is no occasion for getting into a condition of sensitiveness because we say these same evils in other forms may exist elsewhere. It ought not to be necessary to argue that there are districts in the South where the elections for Representatives in Congress are not universally fair and free; but in the problem there presented there is something far graver than a dispute as to the details of voting and counting.

The wrong where wrongdoing occurs in most districts in the North is simply an effort of one party to get ahead of another by illicit means, usually by fraud or bribery of a pretty vulgar kind. No doubt in Southern elections the desire of unscrupulous persons to defeat their opponents by any method plays its part; but the question which complicates and controls the issue there is the question of race. No one can afford to speak lightly of or indulge in recriminations about the race question in the South. I have no desire, for one, to cast stones at any man or any men who are dealing with a problem at their own doors because they do not appear to me to deal with it as I should when I am a thousand miles away from it. That problem and the future of the negro in America present one of the gravest questions before the American people. It is one in which we are all concerned and for the right solution of which we shall all be held responsible, whether we live in the North or in the South.

The wrong of slavery was expiated by the North, which condoned it, as much as by the South, which upheld it. One thing is certain: We shall never deal with it successfully by raging over it and calling each other hard names; still less shall we be able to deal with it if we attempt to evade the issue or blink the facts. The negroes in the United States did not come here by any will or action of their own. They did not seek to force themselves upon us as the Chinese, whom we have excluded, tried to do; they were brought here by force under circumstances of hideous cruelty. They were held in bondage and ignorance. They were sold on the block and they quivered under the lash. It is idle to say that they are better off than they would have been if they had staid in their native wilderness. Better an eternity of savage freedom than the civilization which came to them with the hammer of the auctioneer in one hand and the slave-driver's whip in the other.

No material comfort is worth having which is purchased by such suffering as theirs and by more than two hundred years of slavery. At last a time came when there was war between the States to decide whether this Government should survive or whether the country should be torn into two conflicting parts, and on the outcome of that war the fate of the race turned. What did this race do in that mighty struggle? When it began the negroes were not citizens; they were only slaves, although in the catalogue of the Constitution perhaps they passed for men. To the Government, on the one side, they owed no allegiance, for its power had been used, so far as they knew, only to rivet their bonds, to seize them by the throat, and to thrust them back into bondage.

On the other side were their owners, and how much a slave owes to the owner who buys and sells him let each man answer for himself.

Pay ransom to the owner.
And fill the bag to the brim.
Who is the owner? The slave is owner,
And ever was. Pay him.

What, then, did they do, this race that owed nothing to either combatant but the single debt of a great revenge? On one side, they took their muskets in their hands and went to the front by regiments. They died in the trenches and on the battle-field by hundreds for the Government which up to that time had only fastened their chains more securely upon them. On the other side, they remained on the plantations. They cared for the defenseless families and for the property of the men who had gone away with an army whose victory meant the continuance of slavery. Yet the annals of the war tell no story of a San Domingo massacre or of the slaughter of the helpless beings who staid at home while nearly every able-bodied white man was bearing arms on the field. They gave loyalty to the Government which had spurned them and fidelity to the men who had held them in fetters.

Such loyalty and fidelity as this demand some better reward from the people of this country both North and South than the negro has ever received. What he needs is neither brutality on the one hand nor sentimentality on the other. He should not be petted and coddled because he is a negro-American, nor should he be intimidated and cast out for the same reason. We are altogether too fond of prefixing qualifying adjectives to the word American. If a man is not satisfied to be an American pure and simple and to abandon the prefixes which denote race distinctions, then he is better outside this country than in it, and this truth, which is susceptible of a wide application, I would now apply to the men of the colored race. We have clothed them with the attributes of American citizenship. We have put in their hands the emblem of American sovereignty. Whether wisely or unwisely done is of no consequence now; it has been done and it is irrevocable.

We owe them no more and no less than we owe to all American citizens, but we owe them all that the Government gives to any American citizen, be he rich or poor, white or black. The Government which made the black man a citizen of the United States is bound to protect him in his rights as a citizen of the United States, and it is a cowardly Government if it does not do it! No people can afford to write anything into their Constitution and not sustain it. A failure to do what is right brings its own punishment to nations as to men. There is no escape from the inexorable law of compensation. As Lincoln said in his second inaugural:

Fondly do we hope, fervently do we pray, that the mighty scourge of war may speedily pass away. Yet, if God wills that it continue until all the wealth piled by the bondman's two hundred and fifty years of unrequited toil shall be sunk, and until every drop of blood drawn with the lash shall be paid by another drawn with the sword, as was said three thousand years ago, so still it must be said, "The judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether."

If we fail as a people to deal with this question rightly we shall pay for it just as we paid the debt of slavery of which all this is part. What, then, ought we to do? After the war, when this great body of slaves was cast helplessly into freedom with all the responsibility of citizenship suddenly forced upon them, I believe that it was wholly within the power of the white race to so conciliate and divide them that the negro as a sectional political question should never more have been heard of. Perhaps it was asking too much of human nature to expect this to be done. At all events it was not done, and it was declared that the problem could be solved by methods other than those known to the law. Those methods have been tried and they are a failure. For fifteen years they have prevailed completely, and yet the South comes to this Congress with the demand that measures should be taken to deport the negro population. That the proposition is impracticable does not deprive it of its significance.

It is a confession of failure and a cry of despair. Whatever the correct policy is by which to deal with these problems which the South thus presents of its own accord this is neither the time nor the place to discuss. One thing is certain. No intelligent remedy can be applied so long as the negro question is made a matter of party politics, dividing sections and keeping alive sectional animosities and agitation. With the governments of the States and of the municipalities we here have nothing to do. Each State and each community must work out its own salvation in its own way. If they do right they will profit by it. If they do wrong they will pay for it, and pay for it to the last jot and tittle, for Though the mills of God grind slowly, yet they grind exceeding small.

But the election of men to sit in this Hall is a different question. It is a mere pretense to talk about the "rule of an inferior race," of "organized barbarism," when dealing with this part of the problem. If negroes or men nominated by negroes had always been elected from a dozen or twenty districts in the South it would have been but a trifling element in the great movement of the National Government.

But if such elections had been permitted the political agitation in the North about the negro and the negro question would have died out long ago. But here party supremacy came in and the race question was falsely used as an excuse for seizing a certain number of seats in this body.

There is another and more important point to be considered here. When Congressional elections are interfered with anywhere, they touch the like elections everywhere. Call this bill "revolutionary!" Mr. Speaker, the "revolution" lies in those figures that I have read which show that while the Constitution guarantees an equal representation on this floor that equal representation has ceased to exist. There, Mr. Speaker, is where the "revolution" has been wrought. Whether we can turn it back, whether we can check it, whether we can succeed in undoing its work by legislation here, I do not know; I know that it is our duty to attempt it by every fair and proper means.

The election of a governor in one State does not concern the people of another politically, but the fraudulent election of a member of Congress in one State is a direct wrong to the political rights of the people in every other. Leave our rights alone and then you can take up your burden in your own way and we will help you to our utmost power, for your prosperity and your troubles are ours also. To every man who is an American citizen the United States owe protection. But with few restrictions the determination as to the qualifications of a voter is left to the States. If any State thinks that any class of citizens is unfit to vote through ignorance it can disqualify them from voting for State officers or for members of this House. It has but to put an educational qualification into its constitution. But the disqualification like the qualification can not recognize color, and that is the reason that legal methods have never been tried. The negro is not thrust out from his rights merely because he is ignorant and unfit to use them, as is constantly charged, but because his skin is black. It is this distinction which gives the lie to every principle of American liberty that is at the bottom of the difficulty and of the problem which we all deplore.

The first step, then, toward the settlement of the negro problem and toward the elevation and protection of the race is to take it out of national party politics. This can be done in but one way. The United States must extend to every citizen equal rights. It is a duty which they can not avoid. If they do not perform it now they will perform it later, and the longer it is postponed the worse the consequences will be. Moreover, this cry about the danger of negro rule, this bitter appeal to race supremacy, which is always ringing in our ears, is made a convenient stalking horse to defraud white men as well as black men of their rights. It is an evil which must be dealt with, and if we fail to deal with it we shall suffer for our failure. If all is fair and honest and free in Southern elections this law will interfere with no one, but will demonstrate the fact to the people of the United States. If all is not fair and free this law will begin even if it does not complete the cure.

An honest vote lies at the bottom of our system of government. It is the only way we have to discover and assert the will of the majority, and the will of the majority governs in this country. If we do not ascertain that will honestly it will be determined by force. You may call these truisms, if you like, but truisms are more apt to be forgotten than anything else, and yet to disregard them is the road to ruin. Free elections are the safety of this Government. We here can interfere with none but those which concern the Congress itself, but it is our plain duty to see to it that those at least are preserved in their purity and integrity. So far as a party question enters into this it can be easily dealt with. If one party benefits by free elections it is because that party is cheated now. If neither party is cheated by fraud, then free and honest elections will affect neither. If both cheat, both will suffer. It is our duty, so far as lies in our power, to make elections so honest that no man will dare to question them. Let us do our whole duty to every American citizen, made such by the Constitution, no matter what his creed or color, no matter whether he be weak or strong, rich or poor, and we can safely abide by the result. Let us secure to all men the freedom which is the corner-stone of our Government.

I wish men to be free
As much from mobs as kings; from you as me.

[Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. The galleries will cease applause.

APPENDIX.

TABLE I.—Showing the changes in the vote of the first eight wards of New York following the enactment of the supervisors' law, May 31, 1870.

A.
Wards.	May, 1870, chief-justice.	Nov., 1870, for Congress.	Loss in six months.
First.....	3,051	2,174	877
Second.....	470	289	181
Third.....	1,332	659	673
Fourth.....	5,804	3,313	2,491
Fifth.....	4,374	2,694	1,680
Sixth.....	6,350	2,865	3,485
Seventh.....	6,867	5,778	1,109
Eighth.....	9,512	5,067	4,445
Totals.....	37,780	22,839	14,941

TABLE I.—Showing the changes in the vote of the first eight wards, etc.—Continued.

Wards.	May, 1870, chief-justice.	Nov., 1870, for Congress.	President.				Loss, 1868 from May, 1870.	Gain, 1868 over May, 1870.
			1872.	1876.	1880.	1884.
First.....	3,051	2,174	2,259	2,388	2,500	2,761	390
Second.....	470	289	346	372	464	425	45
Third.....	1,332	659	717	822	936	1,050	282
Fourth.....	5,804	3,313	2,974	3,258	3,396	4,059	1,745
Fifth.....	4,374	2,694	2,630	2,953	3,254	2,935	1,439
Sixth.....	6,350	2,865	2,485	2,681	2,855	3,498	2,632
Seventh.....	6,867	5,778	6,494	7,526	8,645	10,555	3,673
Eighth.....	9,512	5,067	6,316	5,942	6,452	6,711	2,801
Total.....	37,780	22,839	23,311	25,042	28,546	32,004	2,454	3,678

Net loss, 5,776.

C.

Specimen election districts—Vote of May, 1870, for chief judge of the court of appeals.

Wards.	Election district.	Total vote.	Population, June, 1870.	No. of residents to one vote.
First.....	Sixth.....	310	963	3.10
Eighth.....	Twelfth.....	734	1,958	2.71
Sixth.....	Second.....	195	1,828	2.70
Eighth.....	First.....	535	1,425	2.59
Third.....	Third.....	338	885	2.58
Sixth.....	Eleventh.....	1,110	2,795	2.52
Second.....	Eleventh.....	167	395	2.19
Second.....	Second.....	303	640	2.11
Eighth.....	Thirteenth.....	1,022	1,710	1.67
Sixth.....	Ninth.....	1,045	1,643	1.57
Eighth.....	Second.....	957	1,140	1.20
Eighth.....	Third.....	865	1,094	1.19
Sixth.....	Tenth.....	934	870	.93
In thirteen election districts.....		8,535	15,966	1.87

* In the tenth election district of the Sixth ward the Democratic vote alone was 884, or 14 more than the whole number of persons, men, women, and children—natives, naturalized, and aliens included—resident in the district.

TABLE II.—Returns from one hundred and sixty-four districts in 1886.

A.
State.	District.	Representative.	Vote.
California.....	First.....	Mr. Thompson.....	32,982
Do.....	Second.....	Mr. Biggs.....	35,456
Do.....	Sixth.....	Mr. Vandever.....	38,648
Colorado.....	Mr. Symes.....	58,258
Illinois.....	Eighth.....	Mr. Hitt.....	32,277
Do.....	Tenth.....	Mr. Post.....	31,212
Do.....	Eleventh.....	Mr. Geet.....	34,262
Do.....	Twelfth.....	Mr. Anderson.....	32,592
Do.....	Thirteenth.....	Mr. Springer.....	35,242
Do.....	Fourteenth.....	Mr. Howell.....	30,022
Do.....	Fifteenth.....	Mr. Cannon.....	32,863
Do.....	Sixteenth.....	Mr. Landes.....	32,708
Do.....	Seventeenth.....	Mr. Lane.....	27,725
Do.....	Eighteenth.....	Mr. Baker.....	30,339
Do.....	Nineteenth.....	Mr. Townshend.....	29,046
Do.....	Twentieth.....	Mr. Smith.....	31,904
Indiana.....	First.....	Mr. Hovey.....	29,740
Do.....	Second.....	Mr. O'Neill.....	30,941
Do.....	Fourth.....	Mr. Holman.....	30,766
Do.....	Fifth.....	Mr. Matson.....	32,886
Do.....	Sixth.....	Mr. Browne.....	33,650
Do.....	Seventh.....	Mr. Bynum.....	43,890
Do.....	Eighth.....	Mr. Johnston.....	40,734
Do.....	Ninth.....	Mr. Chesdale.....	41,458
Do.....	Tenth.....	Mr. Owen.....	34,185
Do.....	Eleventh.....	Mr. Steele.....	38,890
Do.....	Twelfth.....	Mr. White.....	34,478
Do.....	Thirteenth.....	Mr. Shively.....	37,192
Iowa.....	First.....	Mr. Gear.....	32,250
Do.....	Third.....	Mr. Henderson.....	34,565
Do.....	Fourth.....	Mr. Fuller.....	32,195
Do.....	Fifth.....	Mr. Kerr.....	32,894
Do.....	Sixth.....	Mr. Weaver.....	32,630
Do.....	Seventh.....	Mr. Conger.....	33,726
Do.....	Eighth.....	Mr. Anderson.....	31,414
Do.....	Ninth.....	Mr. Lyman.....	29,635
Do.....	Tenth.....	Mr. Holmes.....	31,287
Kansas.....	First.....	Mr. Morrill.....	34,792
Do.....	Second.....	Mr. Funston.....	35,716
Do.....	Third.....	Mr. Perkins.....	38,084
Do.....	Fourth.....	Mr. Ryan.....	35,996
Do.....	Fifth.....	Mr. Anderson.....	33,025
Do.....	Sixth.....	Mr. Turner.....	61,465
Do.....	Seventh.....	Mr. Peters.....	31,044
Maine.....	First.....	Mr. Reed.....	31,444
Do.....	Second.....	Mr. Dingley.....	31,980
Do.....	Third.....	Mr. Milliken.....	31,752
Do.....	Fourth.....	Mr. Boutelle.....	31,591
Maryland.....	Sixth.....	Mr. McComas.....	33,929
Michigan.....	First.....	Mr. Chipman.....	34,044
Do.....	Second.....	Mr. Allen.....	34,452

TABLE II.—Returns from one hundred and sixty-four districts in 1890—Continued.

State.	District.	Representative.	Vote.
Michigan.....	Third.....	Mr. O'Donnell.....	39,308
Do.....	Fourth.....	Mr. Burrows.....	36,000
Do.....	Fifth.....	Mr. Ford.....	39,773
Do.....	Sixth.....	Mr. Brewer.....	39,600
Do.....	Seventh.....	Mr. Whiting.....	28,333
Do.....	Eighth.....	Mr. Tarney.....	37,846
Do.....	Ninth.....	Mr. Cutcheon.....	33,817
Do.....	Tenth.....	Mr. Fisher.....	29,293
Minnesota.....	First.....	Mr. Wilson.....	33,612
Do.....	Second.....	Mr. Lind.....	38,292
Do.....	Third.....	Mr. MacDonald.....	33,359
Do.....	Fourth.....	Mr. Rice.....	64,983
Do.....	Fifth.....	Mr. Nelson.....	43,957
Missouri.....	First.....	Mr. Hatch.....	31,778
Do.....	Second.....	Mr. Mansur.....	34,928
Do.....	Third.....	Mr. Dockery.....	37,156
Do.....	Fourth.....	Mr. Warner.....	32,171
Do.....	Fifth.....	Mr. Heard.....	40,636
Do.....	Sixth.....	Mr. Hutton.....	28,347
Do.....	Seventh.....	Mr. Clardy.....	29,289
Do.....	Eighth.....	Mr. Bland.....	30,598
Do.....	Ninth.....	Mr. Stone.....	39,414
Do.....	Tenth.....	Mr. Wade.....	28,232
Do.....	Eleventh.....	Mr. Walker.....	28,933
Do.....	Twelfth.....	Mr. McShane.....	42,679
Do.....	Thirteenth.....	Mr. Laird.....	41,665
Do.....	Fourteenth.....	Mr. Dorsey.....	52,153
Do.....	Fifteenth.....	Mr. McKinney.....	37,534
Do.....	Sixteenth.....	Mr. Gallinger.....	59,659
Do.....	Seventeenth.....	Mr. Hires.....	35,433
Do.....	Eighteenth.....	Mr. Buchanan.....	35,380
Do.....	Nineteenth.....	Mr. Kenn.....	33,479
Do.....	Twentieth.....	Mr. Phelps.....	29,538
Do.....	Twenty-first.....	Mr. Lehlbach.....	37,971
Do.....	Twenty-second.....	Mr. McAdoo.....	31,551
Do.....	Twenty-third.....	Mr. Belmont.....	32,994
Do.....	Twenty-fourth.....	Mr. Fitch.....	31,828
Do.....	Twenty-fifth.....	Mr. Stahlnecker.....	30,245
Do.....	Twenty-sixth.....	Mr. Bacon.....	27,707
Do.....	Twenty-seventh.....	Mr. Ketcham.....	28,249
Do.....	Twenty-eighth.....	Mr. Hopkins.....	34,044
Do.....	Twenty-ninth.....	Mr. Greenman.....	34,286
Do.....	Thirtieth.....	Mr. Tracey.....	34,643
Do.....	Thirty-first.....	Mr. West.....	29,851
Do.....	Thirty-second.....	Mr. Sherman.....	32,353
Do.....	Thirty-third.....	Mr. Wilber.....	32,410
Do.....	Thirty-fourth.....	Mr. Belden.....	27,623
Do.....	Thirty-fifth.....	Mr. De Lano.....	34,630
Do.....	Thirty-sixth.....	Mr. Nutting.....	36,373
Do.....	Thirty-seventh.....	Mr. Farquhar.....	30,432
Do.....	Thirty-eighth.....	Mr. Laidlaw.....	32,151
Do.....	Thirty-ninth.....	Mr. Simmons.....	28,216
Do.....	Fortieth.....	Mr. Nichols.....	30,284
Do.....	Forty-first.....	Mr. Butterworth.....	30,545
Do.....	Forty-second.....	Mr. Brown.....	33,495
Do.....	Forty-third.....	Mr. Williams.....	36,612
Do.....	Forty-fourth.....	Mr. Yoder.....	28,648
Do.....	Forty-fifth.....	Mr. Seney.....	34,038
Do.....	Forty-sixth.....	Mr. Boothman.....	38,925
Do.....	Forty-seventh.....	Mr. Campbell.....	31,594
Do.....	Forty-eighth.....	Mr. Kennedy.....	36,425
Do.....	Forty-ninth.....	Mr. Cooper.....	35,443
Do.....	Fiftieth.....	Mr. Romels.....	33,244
Do.....	Fifty-first.....	Mr. Thompson.....	31,730
Do.....	Fifty-second.....	Mr. Pugsley.....	36,832
Do.....	Fifty-third.....	Mr. Outhwaite.....	39,265
Do.....	Fifty-fourth.....	Mr. Wickham.....	39,175
Do.....	Fifty-fifth.....	Mr. Grosvenor.....	30,943
Do.....	Fifty-sixth.....	Mr. Wilkins.....	38,046
Do.....	Fifty-seventh.....	Mr. Joseph D. Taylor.....	33,605
Do.....	Fifty-eighth.....	Mr. McKinley.....	38,269
Do.....	Fifty-ninth.....	Mr. Ezra B. Taylor.....	28,007
Do.....	Sixtieth.....	Mr. Crouse.....	32,727
Do.....	Sixty-first.....	Mr. Foran.....	29,091
Do.....	Sixty-second.....	Mr. Hermann.....	54,954
Do.....	Sixty-third.....	Mr. Bingham.....	30,415
Do.....	Sixty-fourth.....	Mr. Kelley.....	39,276
Do.....	Sixty-fifth.....	Mr. Harmer.....	36,711
Do.....	Sixty-sixth.....	Mr. Darlington.....	28,006

* Returns from "old districts." The candidates for Congressman-at-large received 817,965 votes, an average of 29,299 for each of the twenty-eight "new districts."

TABLE II.—Returns from one hundred and sixty-four districts in 1890—Continued.

State.	District.	Representative.	Vote.
Pennsylvania.....	Seventh.....	Mr. Yardley.....	32,053
Do.....	Ninth.....	Mr. Hiestand.....	28,458
Do.....	Twelfth.....	Mr. Lynch.....	28,368
Do.....	Fourteenth.....	Mr. Bound.....	32,014
Do.....	Fifteenth.....	Mr. Bunnell.....	28,542
Do.....	Sixteenth.....	Mr. McCormick.....	31,433
Do.....	Seventeenth.....	Mr. Scull.....	33,304
Do.....	Eighteenth.....	Mr. Atkinson.....	31,393
Do.....	Nineteenth.....	Mr. Malah.....	33,509
Do.....	Twentieth.....	Mr. Patton.....	33,536
Do.....	Twenty-first.....	Mr. McCullough.....	34,041
Do.....	Twenty-second.....	Mr. Dalzell.....	30,655
Do.....	Twenty-third.....	Mr. Hall.....	31,456
Do.....	Twenty-fourth.....	Mr. Scott.....	30,545
Do.....	Twenty-fifth.....	Mr. Neal.....	27,853
Do.....	Twenty-sixth.....	Mr. Hare.....	28,154
Do.....	Twenty-seventh.....	Mr. Abbott.....	31,910
Do.....	Twenty-eighth.....	Mr. Mills.....	28,497
Do.....	Twenty-ninth.....	Mr. Sayers.....	34,301
Do.....	Thirtieth.....	Mr. Lanham.....	29,724
Do.....	Thirty-first.....	Mr. Goff.....	34,497
Do.....	Thirty-second.....	Mr. Wilson.....	34,315
Do.....	Thirty-third.....	Mr. Snyder.....	29,464
Do.....	Thirty-fourth.....	Mr. Hogg.....	32,679
Do.....	Thirty-fifth.....	Mr. Caswell.....	29,316
Do.....	Thirty-sixth.....	Mr. Guenther.....	27,600
Do.....	Thirty-seventh.....	Mr. La Follette.....	38,213
Do.....	Thirty-eighth.....	Mr. Smith.....	31,420
Do.....	Thirty-ninth.....	Mr. Clark.....	29,272
Do.....	Fortieth.....	Mr. Thomas.....	30,824
Do.....	Forty-first.....	Mr. Haugen.....	35,744
Do.....	Forty-second.....	Mr. Stephenson.....	40,349

B.

State.	District.	Representative.	Vote.
Alabama.....	First.....	Mr. Jones.....	4,206
Do.....	Second.....	Mr. Herbert.....	5,099
Do.....	Third.....	Mr. Oates.....	4,962
Do.....	Fourth.....	Mr. Cobb.....	4,333
Do.....	Fifth.....	Mr. Bankhead.....	12,309
Do.....	Sixth.....	Mr. Forney.....	12,177
Do.....	Seventh.....	Mr. Dunn.....	6,092
Do.....	Eighth.....	Mr. Rogers.....	13,391
Do.....	Ninth.....	Mr. Peel.....	4,746
Do.....	Tenth.....	Mr. Norwood.....	2,078
Do.....	Eleventh.....	Mr. Turner.....	2,411
Do.....	Twelfth.....	Mr. Crisp.....	1,704
Do.....	Thirteenth.....	Mr. Grimes.....	3,239
Do.....	Fourteenth.....	Mr. Stewart.....	2,990
Do.....	Fifteenth.....	Mr. Blount.....	1,722
Do.....	Sixteenth.....	Mr. Clements.....	6,680
Do.....	Seventeenth.....	Mr. Carlton.....	2,377
Do.....	Eighteenth.....	Mr. Candler.....	2,366
Do.....	Nineteenth.....	Mr. Barnes.....	1,944
Do.....	Twentieth.....	Mr. Carlisle.....	12,146
Do.....	Twenty-first.....	Mr. Breckinridge.....	4,808
Do.....	Twenty-second.....	Mr. Wilkinson.....	12,999
Do.....	Twenty-third.....	Mr. Logan.....	14,775
Do.....	Twenty-fourth.....	Mr. Blanchard.....	5,759
Do.....	Twenty-fifth.....	Mr. Newton.....	14,263
Do.....	Twenty-sixth.....	Mr. Robertson.....	10,132
Do.....	Twenty-seventh.....	Mr. Allen.....	5,167
Do.....	Twenty-eighth.....	Mr. Morgan.....	12,648
Do.....	Twenty-ninth.....	Mr. Catchings.....	6,900
Do.....	Thirtieth.....	Mr. Barry.....	3,088
Do.....	Thirty-first.....	Mr. Anderson.....	4,316
Do.....	Thirty-second.....	Mr. Stockdale.....	13,117
Do.....	Thirty-third.....	Mr. Hooker.....	4,514
Do.....	Thirty-fourth.....	Mr. Woodburn.....	12,370
Do.....	Thirty-fifth.....	Mr. Cummings.....	14,423
Do.....	Thirty-sixth.....	Mr. Henderson.....	13,936
Do.....	Thirty-seventh.....	Mr. Randall.....	12,176
Do.....	Thirty-eighth.....	Mr. Spooner.....	6,636
Do.....	Thirty-ninth.....	Mr. Dibble.....	3,317
Do.....	Fortieth.....	Mr. Tillman.....	5,235
Do.....	Forty-first.....	Mr. Cothran.....	4,409
Do.....	Forty-second.....	Mr. Perry.....	4,470
Do.....	Forty-third.....	Mr. Hemphill.....	4,701
Do.....	Forty-fourth.....	Mr. Dargan.....	4,469
Do.....	Forty-fifth.....	Mr. Elliott.....	12,496

TABLE III.

State.	Population, 1890.	Presidential vote, 1890.	Ratio.	Presidential vote, 1888.	Eight years' increase of vote.	Eight years' decrease of vote.	Population, 1888, according to voting ratio in 1890.	Increase of population 1890 to 1888 on basis of vote returned.	Decrease of population 1890 to 1888 on basis of vote returned.	Population according to State census of 1888.
Alabama.....	1,363,503	152,048	8.30	175,100	23,052		1,453,330	187,825
Arkansas.....	302,523	107,290	7.50	155,944	48,654		1,150,580	357,055		342,617
Florida.....	260,490	81,618	5.20	66,636	15,017		246,502	77,000
Georgia.....	1,542,180	158,040	9.75	142,830		15,201	1,392,650		149,530
Louisiana.....	989,946	108,083	9.10	128,260	20,167		1,167,075	227,129
Mississippi.....	1,131,597	117,078	9.60	115,567		1,511	1,090,448		122,154
North Carolina.....	1,399,780	241,218	5.80	285,512	44,294		1,655,999	256,219
South Carolina.....	903,577	170,986	5.80	79,750		91,306	462,550		593,027
Tennessee.....	1,542,369	241,785	8.30	303,496	61,681		1,911,835	369,476
Virginia.....	1,512,565	217,615	7.00	304,093	86,378		2,128,651	616,286
California.....	804,080	160,736	8.00	351,350	90,544		1,256,085	451,996

* Vote in 1876, 164,778. Population, 1870, 827,922.

TABLE III.—Continued.

State.	Population, 1880.	Presidential vote, 1880.	Ratio.	Presidential vote, 1888.	Eight years' increase of vote.	Eight years' decrease of vote.	Population, 1888, according to voting ratio in 1880.	Increase of population 1880 to 1888 on basis of vote returned.	Decrease of population 1880 to 1888 on basis of vote returned.	Population according to State census of 1888.
Kansas.....	296,090	201,236	4.95	334,035	132,799		1,653,473	357,383		1,296,562
Minnesota.....	790,773	250,771	5.30	263,295	112,514		1,369,092	578,309		1,117,798
Nebraska.....	452,402	87,460	5.10	202,653	115,193		1,033,530	581,128		740,645
Connecticut.....	622,700	132,802	4.68	153,978	21,106		720,616	97,916
New Hampshire.....	346,901	86,454	4.00	90,819	4,365		363,276	10,375
New Jersey.....	1,131,116	245,928	4.60	303,741	57,813		1,397,209	266,093		1,278,033
Oregon.....	174,768	40,816	4.28	60,914	20,098		290,711	86,943		194,150
Wisconsin.....	1,315,497	286,904	5.00	354,594	67,690		1,772,920	457,423		1,563,423
Maryland.....	984,943	172,221	5.40	210,921	38,700		1,138,973	204,030

TABLE IV.

Mississippi.			New Jersey.
District.	Representative.	Total vote, 1888.	District.	Representative.	Total vote, 1888.
First.....	Mr. Allen.....	12,095	First.....	Mr. Bergen.....	46,453
Second.....	Mr. Morgan.....	19,795	Second.....	Mr. Buchanan.....	42,803
Third.....	Mr. Catchings.....	16,238	Third.....	Mr. Geisenhainer.....	44,448
Fourth.....	Mr. Lewis.....	15,251	Fourth.....	Mr. Fowler.....	30,925
Fifth.....	Mr. Anderson.....	20,239	Fifth.....	Mr. Beckwith.....	40,383
Sixth.....	Mr. Stockdale.....	15,044	Sixth.....	Mr. Lehlbach.....	51,133
Seventh.....	Mr. Hooker.....	15,564	Seventh.....	Mr. McAdoo.....	47,205

Mississippi.			New Jersey.
District.	Representative.	Total vote, 1888.	District.	Representative.	Total vote, 1888.
First.....	Mr. Allen.....	3,167	First.....	Mr. Hires.....	35,433
Second.....	Mr. Morgan.....	12,618	Second.....	Mr. Buchanan.....	35,380
Third.....	Mr. Catchings.....	6,950	Third.....	Mr. Kean.....	33,470
Fourth.....	Mr. Barry.....	3,086	Fourth.....	Mr. Pidcock.....	26,021
Fifth.....	Mr. Anderson.....	4,316	Fifth.....	Mr. Phelps.....	29,538
Sixth.....	Mr. Stockdale.....	12,117	Sixth.....	Mr. Lehlbach.....	37,971
Seventh.....	Mr. Hooker.....	4,514	Seventh.....	Mr. McAdoo.....	31,551

TABLE V.

South Carolina.			Kansas.
District.	Representative.	Total vote, 1888.	District.	Representative.	Total vote, 1888.
First.....	Mr. Dibble.....	9,855	First.....	Mr. Morrill.....	37,012
Second.....	Mr. Tillman.....	12,337	Second.....	Mr. Funston.....	45,118
Third.....	Mr. Cochran.....	8,774	Third.....	Mr. Perkins.....	36,227
Fourth.....	Mr. Perry.....	11,410	Fourth.....	Mr. Ryan.....	49,500
Fifth.....	Mr. Hemphill.....	9,585	Fifth.....	Mr. Anderson.....	38,318
Sixth.....	Mr. Dargan.....	8,972	Sixth.....	Mr. Turner.....	40,774
Seventh.....	Mr. Elliott.....	15,435	Seventh.....	Mr. Peters.....	82,244

FIFTIETH CONGRESS—VOTE OF 1886.

First.....			First.....
District.	Representative.	Total vote, 1886.	District.	Representative.	Total vote, 1886.
First.....	Mr. Dibble.....	3,517	First.....	Mr. Morrill.....	31,297
Second.....	Mr. Tillman.....	5,235	Second.....	Mr. Funston.....	34,798
Third.....	Mr. Cochran.....	4,409	Third.....	Mr. Perkins.....	36,716
Fourth.....	Mr. Perry.....	4,470	Fourth.....	Mr. Ryan.....	36,064
Fifth.....	Mr. Hemphill.....	4,701	Fifth.....	Mr. Anderson.....	35,996
Sixth.....	Mr. Dargan.....	4,469	Sixth.....	Mr. Turner.....	33,025
Seventh.....	Mr. Elliott.....	12,476	Seventh.....	Mr. Peters.....	61,465

* Mr. Ryan resigned in 1880.

TABLE VI.

Georgia, 1886.			Virginia, 1886.
District.	Representative.	Vote.	District.	Representative.	Vote.
First.....	Mr. Lester.....	16,896	First.....	Mr. Browne.....	29,049
Second.....	Mr. Turner.....	11,000	Second.....	Mr. Bowden.....	38,775
Third.....	Mr. Crisp.....	12,750	Third.....	Mr. Waddill.....	31,412
Fourth.....	Mr. Grimes.....	13,941	Fourth.....	Mr. Venable.....	38,963
Fifth.....	Mr. Stewart.....	16,008	Fifth.....	Mr. Lester.....	27,451
Sixth.....	Mr. Blount.....	9,050	Sixth.....	Mr. Edmunds.....	34,836
Seventh.....	Mr. Clements.....	12,269	Seventh.....	Mr. O'Ferrall.....	30,266
Eighth.....	Mr. Carlton.....	9,651	Eighth.....	Mr. Lee.....	29,776
Ninth.....	Mr. Candler.....	21,191	Ninth.....	Mr. Buchanan.....	32,988
Tenth.....	Mr. Barnes.....	7,378	Tenth.....	Mr. Tucker.....	36,551

TABLE VI.—Continued.

Georgia, 1886.			Virginia, 1886.
District.	Representative.	Vote.	District.	Representative.	Vote.
First.....	Mr. Norwood.....	2,078	First.....	Mr. Browne.....	23,288
Second.....	Mr. Turner.....	2,411	Second.....	Mr. Bowden.....	25,430
Third.....	Mr. Crisp.....	1,704	Third.....	Mr. Wise.....	26,565
Fourth.....	Mr. Grimes.....	3,239	Fourth.....	Mr. Gaines.....	20,944
Fifth.....	Mr. Stewart.....	2,900	Fifth.....	Mr. Brown.....	22,388
Sixth.....	Mr. Blount.....	1,723	Sixth.....	Mr. Hopkins.....	18,625
Seventh.....	Mr. Clements.....	6,680	Seventh.....	Mr. O'Ferrall.....	22,402
Eighth.....	Mr. Carlton.....	2,377	Eighth.....	Mr. Lee.....	17,111
Ninth.....	Mr. Candler.....	2,360	Ninth.....	Mr. Bowen.....	23,425
Tenth.....	Mr. Barnes.....	1,944	Tenth.....	Mr. Yost.....	24,300

* The total vote as returned by the State canvassers was 30,565; after an investigation of the returns by the House, which resulted in unseating Mr. Wise, the total vote was stated at 31,412.

Georgia, 1888.			Tennessee, 1888.
District.	Representative.	Vote.	District.	Representative.	Vote.
First.....	Mr. Lester.....	16,896	First.....	Mr. Taylor.....	33,293
Second.....	Mr. Turner.....	11,000	Second.....	Mr. Houk.....	33,966
Third.....	Mr. Crisp.....	12,750	Third.....	Mr. Evans.....	37,289
Fourth.....	Mr. Grimes.....	13,941	Fourth.....	Mr. McMillin.....	26,230
Fifth.....	Mr. Stewart.....	16,008	Fifth.....	Mr. Richardson.....	26,150
Sixth.....	Mr. Blount.....	9,050	Sixth.....	Mr. Washington.....	33,188
Seventh.....	Mr. Clements.....	12,269	Seventh.....	Mr. Whitthorne.....	24,869
Eighth.....	Mr. Carlton.....	9,651	Eighth.....	Mr. Enloe.....	26,290
Ninth.....	Mr. Candler.....	21,191	Ninth.....	Mr. Pierce.....	27,344
Tenth.....	Mr. Barnes.....	7,378	Tenth.....	Mr. Phelan.....	31,679

Georgia, 1886.			Tennessee, 1886.
District.	Representative.	Vote.	District.	Representative.	Vote.
First.....	Mr. Norwood.....	2,078	First.....	Mr. Butler.....	27,346
Second.....	Mr. Turner.....	2,411	Second.....	Mr. Houk.....	23,616
Third.....	Mr. Crisp.....	1,704	Third.....	Mr. Neal.....	27,883
Fourth.....	Mr. Grimes.....	3,239	Fourth.....	Mr. McMillin.....	20,233
Fifth.....	Mr. Stewart.....	2,900	Fifth.....	Mr. Richardson.....	19,966
Sixth.....	Mr. Blount.....	1,723	Sixth.....	Mr. Washington.....	24,137
Seventh.....	Mr. Clements.....	6,680	Seventh.....	Mr. Whitthorne.....	30,642
Eighth.....	Mr. Carlton.....	2,377	Eighth.....	Mr. Enloe.....	24,421
Ninth.....	Mr. Candler.....	2,360	Ninth.....	Mr. Glass.....	24,206
Tenth.....	Mr. Barnes.....	1,944	Tenth.....	Mr. Phelan.....	19,962

TABLE VII.

State.	Males of voting age, 1880.			Vote for Representatives.
	White.	Colored.	Total.	1886.	1888.
Alabama.....	141,461	118,423	259,884	86,667	173,214
Arkansas.....	136,180	48,827	185,007	55,488	156,280
Florida.....	34,210	27,489	61,699	56,777	66,320
Georgia.....	177,967	143,471	321,438	27,520	130,134
Louisiana.....	108,810	107,977	216,787	84,763	113,242
Mississippi.....	108,254	130,278	238,533	46,748	115,216
North Carolina.....	189,732	105,018	294,750	194,214	279,681
South Carolina.....	95,900	118,889	214,789	39,077	76,369
Tennessee.....	250,035	80,280	330,315	232,413	290,549
Texas.....	301,737	78,690	380,427	288,440	337,712
Virginia.....	206,248	128,257	334,505	224,478	305,965
Total.....	1,741,525	1,085,513	2,827,038	1,336,585	2,063,832
Delaware.....	31,902	6,396	38,298	22,230	29,695
Kentucky.....	317,679	58,643	376,321	200,249	337,704

TABLE VII—Continued.

State.	Males of voting age, 1890.			Vote for Representatives.
	White.	Colored.	Total.	1890.	1888.
Maryland.....	183,522	48,584	232,106	150,471	207,812
Missouri.....	508,105	33,042	541,207	418,777	517,473
West Virginia.....	132,777	6,384	139,161	130,955	156,966
Total.....	1,173,945	153,048	1,326,993	981,682	1,249,710
California.....			329,392	194,055	247,557
Colorado.....			93,608	58,258	92,009
Connecticut.....			177,591	123,013	153,623
Illinois.....			796,847	567,833	745,593
Indiana.....			498,437	439,225	505,584
Iowa.....			416,098	257,421	402,306
Kansas.....			265,714	271,359	329,283
Maine.....			187,323	128,367	144,882
Massachusetts.....			502,649	345,304	341,028
Michigan.....			467,057	279,495	473,869
Minnesota.....			213,485	214,123	262,312
Nebraska.....			129,042	136,499	200,019
Nevada.....			31,255	12,370	12,603
New Hampshire.....			105,130	77,098	90,707
New Jersey.....			300,635	229,373	300,350
New York.....			1,408,751	980,367	1,272,369
Ohio.....			826,877	704,457	832,950
Oregon.....			59,620	54,954	58,233
Pennsylvania.....			1,094,284	817,885	990,036
Rhode Island.....			76,898	17,891	35,869
Vermont.....			95,621	48,478	68,251
Wisconsin.....			340,492	253,654	350,777
Twenty-two Northern States.....			68,417,403	46,291,534	67,947,340
Five border (formerly slave) States.....			1,326,993	981,682	1,249,710
Eleven Southern (seceding) States.....			42,837,043	31,236,585	42,063,832

State.	Increase 1888 over 1886.		Number of Representatives.	Average vote to each Representative.
	Number.	Per cent.		1890.	1888.
Alabama.....	86,547	109	8	10,823	21,659
Arkansas.....	100,892	182	5	11,097	31,276
Florida.....	9,593	17	2	28,996	33,185
Georgia.....	102,614	370	10	2,752	13,013
Louisiana.....	33,579	45	6	14,127	18,873
Mississippi.....	68,468	146	7	6,678	16,459
North Carolina.....	75,467	99	9	21,578	31,076
South Carolina.....	37,292	95	7	5,382	10,909
Tennessee.....	67,136	29	10	23,241	29,854
Texas.....	49,272	17	11	26,222	30,704
Virginia.....	61,457	35	19	22,447	30,596
Total.....	717,247	54	85	15,724	24,103
Delaware.....	7,465	23	1	22,230	29,695
Kentucky.....	128,515	61	11	19,022	30,706
Maryland.....	57,841	28	6	25,078	34,635
Missouri.....	98,696	24	14	29,913	36,963
West Virginia.....	26,011	20	4	32,735	39,241
Total.....	318,028	34	36	25,880	34,714
California.....	53,472	27	6	32,247	41,259
Colorado.....	33,751	58	1	68,258	92,009
Connecticut.....	30,608	25	4	30,753	38,405
Illinois.....	117,740	51	20	28,392	37,379
Indiana.....	76,359	17	12	35,325	41,191
Iowa.....	65,506	19	11	30,675	36,630
Kansas.....	57,924	21	7	38,765	47,040
Maine.....	16,515	13	4	32,092	36,220
Massachusetts.....	95,724	39	13	20,443	28,419
Michigan.....	94,574	23	11	34,409	43,079
Minnesota.....	48,180	22	5	42,824	52,462
Nebraska.....	67,530	50	3	43,833	67,673
Nevada.....	239	2	1	12,370	12,603
New Hampshire.....	18,614	12	2	38,546	45,353
New Jersey.....	73,977	32	7	32,707	43,335
New York.....	341,962	37	34	27,335	34,481
Ohio.....	128,498	19	21	33,545	39,906
Oregon.....	3,279	6	1	54,954	58,233
Pennsylvania.....	173,171	21	28	30,291	35,328
Rhode Island.....	17,475	98	2	8,947	17,684
Vermont.....	19,778	40	2	21,236	34,125
Wisconsin.....	67,139	24	9	31,617	38,975

a In this State about 65,000 Chinese are included in population (males twenty-one years old and upward), although they can not vote.
 b The remarkable increase in the vote was due to the adoption of the enfranchisement amendment to the constitution in April, 1888.
 c Of this total nearly 32 per cent. foreign born.
 d Nearly 75 per cent. of males of voting age in 1890.
 e More than 94 per cent. of males of voting age in 1890.
 f Of this total about 16 per cent. foreign born.
 g More than 70 per cent. of males of voting age in 1890.
 h More than 94 per cent. of males of voting age in 1890.
 i Of this total about 71 per cent. foreign born, and, excluding totals of Louisiana and Texas (410,547), less than 4 per cent. foreign born.
 j More than 47 per cent. of males of voting age in 1890.
 k Nearly 73 per cent. of males of voting age in 1890.

TABLE VII—Continued.

State.	Increase 1888 over 1886.		Number of Representatives.	Average vote to each Representative.
	Number.	Per cent.		1890.	1888.
Twenty-two Northern States.....	1,655,808	36	204	30,840	38,957
Five border (formerly slave) States.....	318,028	34	36	25,880	34,714
Eleven Southern (seceding) States.....	717,247	54	85	15,724	24,103

Of course the States which contain a large percentage of foreign-born men of voting age are placed at a disadvantage in these comparisons, because a considerable percentage of the foreign-born men twenty-one years old and upward are not naturalized; that is necessarily true in the North and West, which receive annually tens of thousands of foreign immigrants, while the South, with the exception of Texas and Louisiana, receives only hundreds. In 1890 there were only 50,506 foreign-born males of voting age in the nine States of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia, which contained an aggregate white population of 1,330,978 persons of voting age, an average of less than 4 per cent.

In the Northern States the numbers and proportions of foreign-born men of voting age were as follows:

California.....	127,374—nearly.....	50	per cent.
Colorado.....	26,873—nearly.....	30	per cent.
Connecticut.....	65,012—nearly.....	33	per cent.
Illinois.....	277,889—more than.....	33	per cent.
Indiana.....	73,446—about.....	15	per cent.
Iowa.....	126,100—about.....	32	per cent.
Kansas.....	53,595—about.....	30	per cent.
Maine.....	22,486—about.....	12	per cent.
Massachusetts.....	170,600—more than.....	33	per cent.
Michigan.....	176,089—more than.....	38	per cent.
Minnesota.....	123,777—more than.....	58	per cent.
Nebraska.....	41,864—more than.....	35	per cent.
Nevada.....	14,191—more than.....	55	per cent.
New Hampshire.....	16,111—about.....	14	per cent.
New Jersey.....	99,399—more than.....	30	per cent.
New York.....	336,596—about.....	30	per cent.
Ohio.....	191,386—nearly.....	25	per cent.
Oregon.....	13,630—about.....	25	per cent.
Pennsylvania.....	272,800—more than.....	25	per cent.
Rhode Island.....	27,108—about.....	37	per cent.
Vermont.....	17,532—about.....	19	per cent.
Wisconsin.....	199,469—about.....	60	per cent.

Total..... 2,656,392—average nearly 32 per cent.

Despite this disadvantage, however, it will be noted that the number of votes cast in a number of Northern States exceeds the total male population of voting age returned in 1890. Here is the statement:

State.	Males of voting age, 1890.	Total vote.
		1890.	1888.
Indiana.....	498,437	499,225	505,584
Kansas.....	265,714	271,359	329,283
Michigan.....	467,057	479,495	473,869
Minnesota.....	213,485	214,123	262,312
Nebraska.....	129,042	136,499	200,019
New Jersey.....	300,635	229,373	300,350
Ohio.....	826,877	704,457	832,950
Wisconsin.....	340,492	253,654	350,777

The only border State which has passed the same limit is West Virginia—139,161 in 1890; 156,966 votes in 1888.

Of course, however, these States could not compete with the Southern States in the matter of increasing the vote of 1888 over the vote of 1884, as will be seen by the following comparative statement.

Comparative statement.

State.	Males 21 years old and upward, 1890.	Total vote.		Increase, per cent.
		1890.	1888.
Alabama.....	250,584	98,697	173,314	100
Arkansas.....	182,977	55,498	156,280	182
Georgia.....	321,483	27,520	130,134	370
Mississippi.....	238,533	46,748	115,216	156
South Carolina.....	205,799	39,077	76,369	95
Indiana.....	498,437	499,225	505,584	17
Kansas.....	265,714	271,359	329,283	21
Michigan.....	467,057	479,495	473,869	25
Minnesota.....	213,485	214,123	262,312	21
Nebraska.....	129,042	136,499	200,019	59
New Jersey.....	300,635	229,373	300,350	32
Ohio.....	826,877	704,457	832,950	14
West Virginia.....	139,161	130,955	156,966	20
Wisconsin.....	340,492	253,654	350,777	34

It will be observed that even under the impulse of the great Southern revival in voting in 1888 the first five States returned less than 54 per cent. of the total number of men who were twenty-one years old or upward in 1880, while the last nine States returned more than 108 per cent. of the total number of men of voting age reported by the census of 1880. (The totals are: 1,208,621 persons, 651,313 votes, or a trifle less than 54 per cent. in the first five States; and 3,181,220 persons and 3,448,110 votes, or a little more than 108 per cent., in the last nine States.)

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I can not hope to express to this House the views which have influenced the minority of the committee in as elegant terms as have been used by the gentleman, the head of the committee [Mr. LODGE], who has just stated the views of the majority on this bill. But I hope I shall be able to speak as dispassionately and with as broad a view in stating the reasons and the motives which influenced the minority in reaching the conclusion that they have.

The purpose of this bill, as any gentleman knows who has read it closely, is to effectually place the election of members of Congress under the control of the United States Government, and, as we who represent the minority contend, the effect of the bill, whatever its purpose may be, will be to control absolutely the election not only of members of Congress, but of various State and county officers in the several States of the Union, and eventually to control the election of the President of the United States.

The clause under which this claim is made is the first clause of the fourth section of the first article of the Constitution, which provides:

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

It is hardly necessary, Mr. Speaker, to say in this House, to gentlemen who are supposed to know something of the history of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, that this section created more uneasiness in the minds of the members of the conventions that finally passed upon the adoption of the Constitution of the United States than all of its other provisions combined. Seven of the thirteen States were so unwilling to accept the Constitution of the United States with this provision in it, that they expressly provided amendments to it which were to be submitted to the States, which would deprive the Congress of the United States of the right to exercise this power except in certain specified emergencies. And the State of Massachusetts which has sent so many able Representatives to the Congress of the United States, and which so far as ability and learning are concerned has certainly filled an honored place among the sisterhood of States, was so seriously concerned on the subject that that State not only submitted an amendment to the Constitution to deprive Congress of this power, but expressly enjoined upon its Representatives to take care at "all times" to see that nothing was done by the Congress of the United States which should deprive the people of the State of the right to pass upon and settle this question for themselves.

I do not purpose to enter into any long constitutional argument on this question. I hold that the Supreme Court of the United States must eventually adjudicate all problems which arise as to the powers of the several States and of the United States; and they have gone very far, if they have not absolutely decided that the Congress of the United States has almost unlimited powers in this particular.

I would like to call the attention of the Representatives of the people here to the fact, however, that every expression that has ever fallen from the lips of the voters of this country has been in absolute and utter condemnation of the right of Congress to take from them, the right to decide through State agencies, how these elections shall be carried on and who shall conduct them.

As I stated, at the very inception of this Government, when its foundations were being laid, as was then hoped in the broad and everlasting principles of human liberty, seven of the thirteen original States declared against the power of Congress to exercise this authority; and they put their objection on the broad ground that it was a usurpation of the liberties of the people and that it would eventually operate to their destruction.

Congress obeyed that injunction until 1842, when for the first time it undertook to legislate upon the subject, and a Mr. Campbell, a gentleman representing at that time one of the districts of South Carolina, introduced into the apportionment act of that year a provision requiring that the several States should elect their members of Congress from separate districts, "which shall be composed of contiguous territory." That was a Whig Congress, and Mr. Campbell, I think, in fact I am sure, was the only member from South Carolina who voted for the proposition, for the Democrats thought then, as they think now, that it was a usurpation of power by Congress and voted with practical unanimity against it.

Four of the States disobeyed the requirements of the law and elected their members of the House from the State at large, and not from separate districts. The right of the members from these four States was examined into under a resolution of the House and in this way the question arose as to whether or not the passage of the law was a constitutional exercise of power by Congress. The House of Representatives, by a large majority, practically overruled and set at naught this alleged statute of the United States, and seated the members from the four States that had knowingly and willfully disobeyed it. When it came to a question before the people as to whether or not they would sustain the Democratic party in practically wiping from the statute-books such a law, the sentiment in their favor was overwhelming and the Congress that had been Whig in 1840, by the following election of 1842 was converted into a Democratic Congress by a majority of more than two to one.

The States which objected to that law were Missouri, Georgia, and Mississippi, and the good State of New Hampshire. Let me read to you some of the expressions of opinion that were given by the Legislatures of various States at that time.

The State of Ohio in 1843 resolved—

That Congress has no right, under the Constitution of the United States, to prescribe the manner, time, or place of holding elections for members of its own body, except in case where the Legislatures of the States shall refuse or fail to make provision for the same.

Resolved, That the General Assembly, acting in behalf of the people of the State of Ohio, do hereby solemnly protest against the late attempt of the National Legislature to encroach upon the independence of the several States composing this Union; and the second section of the act alluded to is hereby declared to be unconstitutional, arbitrary, and of no binding effect upon the States.

That, gentlemen, was the first instance, so far as I know, in which a Northern State adopted the somewhat famous doctrine of South Carolina as to the right of a State to nullify an act of the United States Congress. But the State of Ohio expressly declared through its assembled representatives that the Congress of the United States had no power to pass such a law, and that it was not binding upon them.

The State of New Hampshire resolved, amongst other things—

Resolved, That the recent act of Congress, directing the States to be districted for the choice of Representatives to Congress, is a direct violation of the provisions of the Federal compact, and we can not regard the same as binding upon the States.

Resolved, That we can not sanction so unauthorized an interference in our domestic relations on the part of Congress, and shall, therefore, decline to district this State for the choice of Representatives to Congress.

I have some resolutions from the State of New York, expressing in even more emphatic terms the disapprobation of the people of that State of this act of Congress which usurps the power which they thought belonged to the several States under the Constitution of the United States.

But if the gentlemen here do not care to heed the voice of the people as it is expressed through their State representatives, and think that it is better to act upon their own judgment in this matter, then I would like to submit to them some views of this bill which I think will prevent any man from voting for it who desires an honest and an efficient national law for the preservation of the rights of the voters and of the members of this House.

This, gentlemen, is not a bill of universal application, and when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], in such soft and kindly words, undertook to state the character and the provisions of this bill, it seems to me that he omitted the chief features of it, and left the House in utter ignorance of what its effect will be.

The bill if it becomes a law is not to be operative, as most laws are when it passes both Houses of Congress and is approved by the President, but is to go into effect upon the petition of fifty or one hundred persons, as the case may be, "claiming to be citizens of the United States, and residents and voters in such county or parish." And the provisions for putting it into operation are very curious and uncertain even when petitioned for. It undertakes to provide for being put into operation by judicial districts under a chief supervisor for each.

There are seventy judicial districts in the United States, the entire area being laid off into judicial districts, so that if there is a supervisor for every district, the whole country is by this means embraced within the limits of the jurisdiction of one of these supervisors. And when you say that the supervisor of the judicial district shall have supervision of Federal elections within his judicial district, you cover the whole territory of the United States.

But having provided for this the bill goes on to say that the supervisor of a judicial district shall also have supervision of a Congressional district, the majority of the counties of which are in his judicial district. If the majority of the counties are in one judicial district, the minority of the counties must necessarily be in another judicial district, so that the minority of counties of one Congressional district will be supervised by the supervisor of that judicial district and by the supervisor of the judicial district in which the majority of the counties of that Congressional district lie.

The bill, not stopping here, provides further for the determining by the majority of the votes in the various counties, as shown by the census, for the supervision of entire Congressional districts where the counties are equally divided between two judicial districts or where they lie in more than two judicial districts.

So that under this bill as it is framed some portions of the United States will be under the supervision of one chief supervisor and other portions, even within the limits of the same Congressional district, will be under the supervision of two chief supervisors, and others again will be under the supervision of three or four or possibly five chief supervisors, according to the situation and limits of the Congressional districts as compared with the judicial districts of the various States.

Each chief supervisor has equal authority and each has power under this bill to appoint three supervisors at each polling precinct, and any number of deputy marshals he shall see fit to select.

If there are no petitions there can be no supervisors; if there are petitions there may be from nine to fifteen supervisors, all with equal authority, conducting the election at one poll, and deputy marshals without number.

I can conceive, gentlemen, of no honest purpose in any such provision as that; and it can have no other effect except to put the people of some districts between the upper and nether mill-stone, by which the voters will be ground out of the last right that is left to them.

These are the astounding provisions of the first section, and the second section is rather more remarkable than the first. The second section undertakes to say when this bill shall be put into operation, and it provides for three cases in which the law may be made applicable. Now, if gentlemen of the majority have any reason on earth why this law upon petition should not be made applicable to every Congressional district in the United States, they have not seen fit to disclose it either in their report or in the speech which the chairman has made to this House.

There are three cases only in which this law can be put into operation even upon the petition of citizens. The first is in cities of 20,000 inhabitants or upwards. Second, in any county or parish which forms a part of a Congressional district. Now, why you should put that qualification to it I can not understand, and the majority have not explained. It is not any county or parish that forms a whole Congressional district, but it is any county or parish that forms a part of a Congressional district. Third, in any entire district, no part of which is within a city of 20,000 inhabitants or upwards. No Congressional district can be supervised as a whole upon a petition sent in by one set of people except in two cases: first, where the entire district is in a city of more than 20,000 inhabitants, or where the district has not within its limits a city of 20,000 inhabitants.

No supervision can be had in a district which is formed of one county only and which has in it a city of 20,000 inhabitants and upward, except in so far as the supervision applies to the city itself. The township and other subdivisions or portions of the county or parish forming part of the Congressional district which embraces a city of 20,000 inhabitants and upward can not be supervised under this bill. One part of the Congressional district, under both the first and second subdivisions of this bill, may be put under supervision and under the operation of the Federal law, while the other part is not under that supervision and is under the State law. Returns from the first-named part will be made to both the United States and the State canvassers; the managers of the second-named part to the State canvassers only. The returns of the United States canvassers will be utterly useless in this case, for no full returns can be made from the whole district. If a Congressional district is composed partly of a city of 20,000 inhabitants and upwards and partly of counties, it can not be embraced under the law as a whole, and one petition, or several petitions, for each county or part of a city will be required. If the county, as distinguished from the city, is divided between two or more Congressional districts, no part of it can be brought under this law, unless it be in a Congressional district no part of which is within a city of 20,000 inhabitants or upwards.

Mr. Speaker, it does seem to me that if we are to have a statute of the United States, the first requisite ought to be that it should be of uniform application. This is not so here, because it depends upon the wish of fifty or one hundred men in a town or county or city; and even this number of petitioners, or in fact any number, have not the power to put this law in operation in every district or part of district in the United States.

While the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has made what appears to be an exceedingly fair and free unfolding of all the merits of this bill, he has failed to state to this House why it is that this very unique and exceedingly complicated and unsatisfactory provision is put in here, unless the purpose of it is to bring this law to bear down upon some portion of the people and allow other portions to escape its burdens. I call upon him, and upon others who succeed him, to explain to this House why these very peculiar provisions are found in this bill, as developed by this analysis of the first and second sections of it.

Mr. Speaker, there are other portions of this bill which seem to me to strike at the very central point of the liberties of the people of this country. There are four different kinds of officers who are to be appointed to carry out the requirements of this measure. First, there is a chief supervisor, who is to be appointed to supervise, through his subordinates, the Congressional election in his judicial district and in other districts in certain contingencies, as I have above specified.

2. The supervisors—three at each polls—who are practically to conduct the election and who receive their appointment from the chief supervisor.

3. The canvassers—three in number—who are to canvass and certify the result of the voting.

4. Deputy marshals—without limit as to number—to attend upon the registration, and voting, etc.

The chief supervisor is made a permanent officer of the Government and is appointed by the circuit judge of the United States who has a life tenure. So that, so far as it is possible to remove the election of members of Congress from the control and influence of the people, and from the exercise of any voice whatever in the management and results of this most important matter, this bill easily surpasses anything that has been proposed to the representatives of the people.

This House has been called the very "breath of the people" of the United States, and it is so spoken of because the members are directly elected by them, and the purpose of the creation and the existence of this House was and is that the people through its members might have the most direct and powerful influence upon this Government; and yet this bill provides that the man who is to supervise and practically control the elections of the members of this body shall be one who in no way owes his appointment to the people, but who is appointed by an officer who holds a life tenure and who himself does not receive his commission from the people, but from the President of the United States.

If only one-half is true as to the corruption of the voters of the United States that has been depicted by the gentleman from Massachusetts, then I am sure we may well expect that at least one-half of the supervisors who shall be appointed by the circuit judges will be unworthy to exercise the great powers that are given to such officers in this bill.

If the people of the United States have become so debauched that they can not be trusted to have any voice whatever in choosing the managers of their elections, and are to be "guarded, scrutinized, and supervised," as if they were criminals absent from the penitentiary upon ticket-of-leave only, then I say it is but fair to presume that when we must select these officers from the body of the people we will not be able to get every one of them honest. Suppose a mistake is made in the appointment of these officials and some of them act corruptly and dishonestly. The judge who appoints the supervisor has a life tenure, and the supervisor himself has a life tenure. Neither owes his appointment to the people, and neither can be removed or directly affected in any way by the popular vote. How can they turn the supervisor out if he is dishonest and illegally returns the wrong man to Congress?

The point does not seem to have occurred to the gentleman from Massachusetts that when this machinery is put in motion the power of the people to change directly the supervisors of election and the chief supervisor and the judge who appoints is absolutely gone forever. Not only the chief supervisor is a permanent officer, but he appoints the supervisors of election. Those supervisors, under the present law, as appointed, are taken one from each political party. This bill provides that two of them, the majority, shall be taken from one political party and one from the minority or other political party; but it also provides that the majority shall be able to do everything that the whole board can do, and it provides further that the judges, eight out of ten of whom are Republicans, shall appoint the chief supervisor, and that he shall select a majority of his own party for the control of the elections. Not only does the one party have the chief supervisor and the supervisors, two at least at each poll, but it has the majority of the board of canvassers who are also appointed, not by the people, not by anybody who has been elected by the people, but by a judge who has been appointed by the President, and that board of canvassers make up their returns and determine who shall be members of this House without any reference whatever to the returns made by the officers appointed by the State to conduct the election.

Another very strange provision of this bill is that the supervisors shall hold their office for two months after the election is closed and after their duties are entirely performed. That, I say, is a very peculiar provision, that a man shall be appointed to an office, to perform a certain duty, upon a certain day, at the end of which day all his efficiency as an officer shall cease; that he shall have no further duties laid upon him, and yet that he shall continue to be an officer of the United States for two months after his work is thus entirely completed. Now, the purpose of that is so manifest to every man who knows the law of the United States that it drives right through the whole of the "non-partisan" covering which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has put about this bill.

What is the object of this provision? If a supervisor of election makes a false return as to a State office, or does anything else in violation of State law (and I will soon show you that he has great power there also) he can not be arrested and tried before the State courts; for, under this bill, he has two months after he has manipulated the ballot-box and robbed the people of their rights to run away from the State and to snap his fingers in the face of the people whose rights he has ruthlessly trampled upon. We all know that a State court is not permitted to try a United States official for any offense which he commits in violation of law while acting as such official, and the plain effect of this provision, not expressed upon its face, but perfectly manifest when you understand the decisions of the courts, is to give these officers the opportunity to rob the people of their honest votes, with two months within which to escape the punishment that would be due to them. I say, Mr. Speaker, that that one provision of this measure stamps this bill as a scheme to rob the people of the States of the dearest right of American citizenship.

And not only this, but has any gentleman who has read this bill or any statute that it refers to been able to discover any limit whatever to the number of deputy marshals that may be appointed to execute this law? Have the people of New York or Kansas or Illinois or any of the Northern States become so utterly corrupt and devoid of honor that there is to be no limit whatever to the number of men who may be appointed to guard and scrutinize and supervise them when they go to cast their ballots as American freemen? This bill says that the chief supervisor shall provide for the filling of all election districts, and I think that is a very appropriate term. He is going to "fill" the election districts with his supervisors and deputy marshals, and, if necessary, I presume the people of the country are to be crowded out entirely. This chief supervisor names all the other supervisors, and he and the marshal together determine the number of United States deputy marshals. In 1876, in one city in this country, there were 11,615 deputy marshals appointed to guard and scrutinize and supervise the voters; of those 155 were at one poll, and in addition to the 11,000 deputy marshals there were 6,000 supervisors.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Where was that?

Mr. HEMPHILL. That was in New York City, in 1876. Now, I ask, gentlemen, can there be any honest reason for putting one hundred and fifty-five of these officials at one polling place when there are many polling places in the United States that do not have half that number of voters? And if the supervisor can put 155 officers at one polling place, why may he not put two hundred and fifty-five or one thousand at one polling place? Why, sir, I remember an election in South Carolina, in 1876, when there were a thousand United States soldiers sent to watch the polls in one county. We are not afraid of this bill personally, for many of us have marched in front of the glittering bayonets of the soldiers of the United States to cast our votes as freemen. The Government sent a thousand soldiers into one county and the result was that every one of them is said to have voted the Democratic ticket, and we had a bigger majority than we ever had before in our lives. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOATNER. I suppose you "bulldozed" them. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEMPHILL. In 1876 there were nearly five thousand deputy marshals and over four thousand supervisors appointed in one place. I have some figures here taken from a speech of Mr. CARLISLE delivered in this House on April 17, 1879, showing that in May, 1878, the chief supervisor of elections in New York City had one of his assistants to swear to a single complaint against ninety-three hundred persons of foreign birth whose naturalization papers had been issued to them in 1868, and on which they had voted ever since that time. On this complaint the same supervisor, as clerk of the court, issued five thousand and four warrants returnable before himself as commissioner of the court. Every one of these warrants was illegal, because the complaint contained more than one name. When the warrants were set aside the supervisor had twenty-eight hundred more complaints made out, and issued warrants upon them. Thirty-four hundred naturalized citizens surrendered their papers to escape this partisan persecution. A few days before the election in November, thirty-two hundred more complaints were sworn out.

Among the instructions given by the chief supervisor to his subordinates was the following:

In the case of persons who present themselves to vote, where a warrant has been previously issued, you will see that such persons are arrested upon the warrant upon so presenting themselves, and before voting.

The gentleman from Massachusetts has alluded to the number of persons who voted at one election in some portion of New York City and who did not vote at the succeeding election. Within six months, if I recollect aright, he says the number of votes in certain wards in that city fell off several thousand. Possibly the above stated action on the part of this chief supervisor furnishes the explanation for this decrease in the votes cast.

If this is intended for an honest and fair scheme, if we want to get at what our friend from Massachusetts seems so earnestly to desire—a proper representation on this floor of the full vote of the people—then let us limit the number of appointees, so that there will be no danger of having more officers to watch the voters than there will be voters to be watched. Surely no gentleman on the other side of the House will object to this reasonable proposition.

Mr. Speaker, we all know that there has been an earnest effort on the part of a good many people in this country, and a sham effort on the part of a good many others, to carry out something like "civil-service reform" in the United States; and one of the main objects of this reform has been to deprive the party in power of the right of levying assessments upon the office-holders who draw money from the United States Treasury, which money, when thus taken from them by assessment, is used for the corruption of the people at the ballot-box and for the purpose of keeping in power the party that happens to have the majority of office-holders and the alleged right to call upon them for contributions. I believe that this part at least of what is called "civil-service reform" receives the hearty support of every honest man in the United States, whether he is a Democrat or a Republican.

But let us look at this bill and see how much it is going to contribute towards that beneficent purpose. An assessment upon office-holders of 1 or 2 per cent. yields an immense sum for the corruption of voters; and the suppression of this practice has received the earnest attention of the people of this country, who desire honest elections. This bill provides, not that a man shall merely pay a part of the official salary he earns during the year, but that a particular official, in each judicial district, shall have the power intrusted to him of selecting and practically appointing unnumbered adherents of his own political party, who shall attend the polls at a compensation of $5 per day to carry out the instructions of their political boss.

Under the old system the campaign committee simply sent the money to the polls; under this new scheme a Federal officer will send the men themselves, who are to be paid directly from the Treasury, and this official has no limit placed upon his right to take the people's money for this purpose.

The compensation of these supervisors and of all other officers under this bill is not to be subjected to the scrutiny and examination of Congress, and their accounts for salary and expenses are not to be examined by the regular accounting officers of the Treasury.

The salary of the officers of this Government from the President down must be annually appropriated by the people's representatives, and the accounting officers of the Treasury must scrutinize and examine all accounts and claims against the Government, but these officials are to be paid from a permanent appropriation and their accounts passed on by the judge only who appoints them, and are made "special," which means that they are to be paid ahead of and in preference to other claims.

The President can not draw his salary unless appropriated each year by Congress, but these election officers can. The President can not increase the Army and Navy by one man without an act of Congress, but the chief supervisor of any district under this bill can increase his army of election officers to any number he desires without consulting Congress and pay them from the public money without limit as to amount. In fact, the people of the United States, the Army and Navy, and the Treasury are placed under the absolute control of the chief supervisors of election without accountability to any one for their use or abuse.

Now it needs no eloquence to depict the horror of having 100,000 or 500,000 or 1,000,000 men at the polls where the people are casting their ballots—these men receiving a compensation of $5 a day, and all of them appointed, not by both parties equally, but by one man who owes his appointment not to the people or their Representatives, but to a judge of a United States court, whom we can not get at if we choose to do so.

The gentleman from Massachusetts is, as some people think, an earnest reformer of the civil service, while others are unkind enough to express doubt; I give him credit for an honest purpose to do what is right, and I say there can be no more iniquitous provision, nothing which will wipe out more completely every effort to relieve us from the influence of office-holders than the provision in this bill for the appointment of an innumerable body of men to attend at the polls and do the bidding of a partisan Federal official.

The law as it now stands is that the supervisor of elections must come from the town, city, or voting precinct in which he serves. This bill, if it becomes a law, authorizes the chief supervisor to put into your voting precinct or mine any number of men from any part of the Congressional district, even though those men come from places 100 or 200 miles away, and be utterly unknown to any of the voters of the precinct.

Not only so, Mr. Speaker, but there is another very peculiar provision in this bill. Some of the States of this Union provide that ballots, in order to be legal and to be counted, shall be printed in a certain way and be of a certain size, so that every man may cast his vote without it passing under the inspection of his "boss"—the boss under whom he earns his livelihood or his political boss—so that the heebers and the bribers shall not know what kind of a vote he casts. But this bill provides that every vote that is cast for a member of Congress shall be counted. So that in Massachusetts, for instance, if the State officers decide that they must throw out under the State law a ballot, all the names being upon one ticket, this bill says they can not do so, that this ballot is to be counted, and to be counted in a particular way—every name upon it is to be read out, and the name of every office voted for read out.

Again, what are the supervisors to do? In the first place, any supervisor at an election where the State managers, or inspectors, as they are called, hesitate for one moment—the expression is "who do not immediately pass upon the right of the voter who is challenged"—then a supervisor, not the majority, but one, shall pass upon it, and if he so decides this vote shall be put into the box, and when received shall be counted, and the State managers shall have no right to reject it, although the majority of the United States supervisors are not there to pass judgment upon it. There is no appeal from that decision. If they choose to let in one man, if one of the supervisors chooses to let in any man who comes to vote, no matter whether he is registered or not, no matter whether he is qualified under the State laws or not, no matter whether he has complied with the provisions of the State statutes or the constitution or not, if any one of the supervisors says the man can vote he can do so, and his vote, cast in defiance of the State law, must be counted. But if that be true what is to prevent one of the supervisors, in a close district, from electing any of the State officers or county officers that he sees fit to elect? There is no provision in the law as embodied in this bill to correct such an abuse. There is no provision to correct it or to eliminate that vote in any case. There is no provision that the rights of the people shall be respected, while everything is provided for the rights of the supervisor, who is supposed to be an angel from heaven, because he is appointed by a judge of the United States court who has a tenure for life.

Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but they are to count the votes in a particular way. Every ten votes are to be taken out of the ballot-box by the supervisor, and to be handed to the State inspector, and the State inspector hands them to another supervisor, and he passes them on to another inspector, and he to another supervisor, and so on, so that every vote in the ballot-box, even if a general ticket, is to be handled by seven men, three of whom are not appointed by the State officers, are not in any way responsible to the State law, and who have a right to pass upon the receipt of the votes and the counting of them as they see fit. Now, in New Jersey Indiana, and Illinois, the law requires that the tickets, after they are counted, shall be locked up and preserved for six months.

This bill provides that one of each kind of the tickets is to be pasted on the return and sent here. That is one of the provisions of it. Another is that the United States canvassers are to draw out and destroy extra ballots. How can you preserve the tickets and at the same time send them to Washington and also at the same time destroy them? And these canvassers, gentlemen—I want to call your attention to it—who are to pass finally on the right of every member of this House to his seat upon this floor are not, by the provisions of this bill, to meet at any specified place in the State and are not to give any notice of any meeting that they may hold. All that is required is that they shall meet at some place in the State where a circuit court of the United States is held, and in my State there are three places, I believe, certainly two, and in many of the States five or six, where United States circuit courts are held. I can not imagine any reason on earth why a man who is interested in the final outcome of the vote should not have notice of the place and time where the canvassers are to meet. I repeat, therefore, if this is an honest bill, if its purpose is to bring about honest elections, it would not show such defects upon its face; and that they do exist any gentleman will find for himself who will take the trouble to examine and study it.

But another very peculiar provision of the bill is contained in section 38, and I do not know of any better name for that provision than to call it the "jury-fixer." You all know that around every courthouse in every large city where there are jurors there are some men whose business it is to influence unfairly and dishonestly those who are drawn or are likely to be drawn to serve on the juries. I do not know of any people in the United States that to-day enjoy more completely the utter and supreme contempt of every honest man who knows anything about the administration of justice than these people. But this section provides that the law of the United States as it now exists, which is that the jurors shall be drawn by the clerk of the court and by a jury commissioner of the opposite party, shall be amended so as to provide that the clerk of the court alone, representing one political party, alone shall have the right to select all of the jurors, and that the opposite side shall have no voice in the matter or anything whatever to do in the selection.

Mr. Speaker, when it comes to the selection of jurors to carry out the purposes of the bill, this provision indicates that it shall be done by an official of the court hidden away from the sight of any man, or any man of the opposite party, at least, from the one to which he belongs. I say that no more iniquitous proposition was ever submitted to any body of men for their approval than the proposition that the statute law of the United States, which now provides an honest mode of selecting jurors, shall be altered so that the jurors shall hereafter be drawn by one man, and that man free from the presence of a witness of the opposite party.

Mr. MILLS. May I ask the gentleman from South Carolina what was the necessity for changing the jury law, in a bill that purports to provide for fair and free elections?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, I think that was explained very well by my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW] in his statement before the committee, that he thought at first it was entirely out of place to mix up the juries with this partisan election law, but that after reading the bill he thought that it was simply the culmination of the whole thing, that it was partisan in the beginning and through the middle, and it ought to be partisan at the end [Laughter on the Democratic side.] I think that is a just explanation of the whole business.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is another provision with reference to this jury law which is equally curious, and that is, that the supervisor who has faithfully—these are the words—who has faithfully performed his duty as a supervisor shall be excused from service as a juror.

That struck me as being very peculiar, and I could not understand it, but after looking over the duties of a supervisor I thought that it was nothing but fair that the man who would be willing to act as a supervisor under this bill, and carry out what appears to be the unholy duties expected of him, should be considered as having done enough to entitle him to be excused from any further service in that line. That is, I think when he has done that he has done his share and he ought to be excused from any further service. But a man who has not "faithfully performed his duty" as a supervisor, who has not been willing to override State laws as seems to be herein expected, whose integrity has sustained him when the supervisor has ordered him to make a wrong return, he should not be excused. He will have to run the chances of being drawn on a partisan jury.

And to show the purpose of this change in the jury law I will read to gentlemen an extract which shows what has already been done in that line. You will all remember that there has been some trouble about the administration of law in the United States courts in Florida, and I have a letter from a very worthy gentleman from that State, which he addressed to the President of the United States. Its tone is calm and judicial. The writer's character is such as to entitle him to great respect at the hands of the representatives of the people here. He says:

On July 1 last, the judge appointed a jury commissioner in open and flagrant violation of the United States statute, and another officer of the court has only recently been charged with an admission that this act was unlawful, but was done to make the conviction of Democrats sure, a charge which he has never publicly denied.

The marshal of this court ordered his deputy—

Now look at what we are coming to—

The marshal of this court ordered his deputy to select for jurors only "true and tried Republicans"—

That is the order of the marshal—another open violation of the statute, which directs that the selection shall be made without regard to party affiliations. Under this arrangement the grand jury contained twenty-two Republicans in a total of twenty-three members.

Does any man believe that that is an honest jury, in a State like Florida, where the total Republican vote is not half the Democratic vote, that you could get an honest jury of twenty-two Republicans and one Democrat?

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] says that if we have honest elections we ought not to be afraid of this bill. It is not the elections that are troubling us, it is the iniquity of the office-holders who are sent South to oppress the people. That is the trouble with this bill. We have had eight long years of sad experience of that sort in our State, and I say there is not a gentleman on that side who if he had been there, even as a Republican, would not resent every effort to re-establish that system of iniquity which went under the form of civil government.

I want to call the attention of the House to one more provision. I can not take up all my time in explaining this bill, but I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that in one section the Legislature is prohibited absolutely from changing any of its State laws as to the election of Congressmen, and as I hold, as to any election, except as to the places and as to the printing of tickets. That is section 37 of the bill. The object, of course, is to continue the present system. Even if the Democrats and the Republicans by a unanimous vote choose to change their own laws upon that subject, under this bill they can not do it. And yet it is stated that this is simply a measure to get an honest count for members of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, let us ask ourselves why this bill should be passed. I have run over it somewhat hurriedly, and probably have wearied the House with its details, but let us ask ourselves honestly what reason can be given for enacting such a law. This Government has been in existence for a hundred years or more. There has never been any necessity up to this time for the passage of any such law as this, and it seems to me that if the people have been trusted, through their representatives in their several States, to manage the election of members of Congress for a hundred years, and there has been no special emergency within the last few years which requires any action upon the part of Congress, that we might, at least, trust them for some time longer in this matter which is so sacred and dear to them.

It must be a humiliating thing for Republicans to confess by this bill that while through seventy-five years, when this country was controlled alternately by the Federalists, the Democrats, and the Whigs, the people could manage their own elections, that now, after twenty-five years of almost uninterrupted control by the Republican party, the people have become so corrupt, their honor so blunted, their integrity so weakened, that they can not be trusted to make an honest return of the votes they cast and must be guarded and scrutinized and supervised as if they were criminals.

Is that not rather a bad record for a party that claims to be the party of great moral ideas—a party that claims more virtues and has fewer than any I ever knew or heard of in my life? [Laughter.] If the result of their rule of this country for a quarter of a century has not been such as to debauch the public sentiment which, when they took charge of the Government, was honest and upright and patriotic, why should there be any such law as this upon the statute-book?

The chief reason assigned by the gentleman from Massachusetts for the passage of this measure is that the public at large think that there is corruption at elections. Mr. Speaker, I think that is the most humiliating confession I have ever heard on this floor. He means to say that if the people have an opinion as to the dishonesty of their Government which is not well founded, the Representative should acquiesce in the unjust charge and trim his sails accordingly, instead of squarely meeting the case and giving to the public the truth as he knows it. I think, Mr. Speaker, that it is the duty of a Representative of the people to tell them the unadulterated truth whether it be what they have believed or not, and he ought to stand to it.

When a member gives to the House advice of this character upon a matter of such importance, we may well question ourselves whether we ought to follow him when he asks our support of a measure of as great consequence as the one now pending. If his theory be correct, any upright man who has the misfortune of acquiring a reputation for dishonesty through the misrepresentation of his enemies ought not to call for the proof of the charges, face his enemies, and live down the lies that are told against him, but he should go around like a sneak-thief pretending that he is a dishonest man, simply because the public sentiment leans that way.

One of the chief difficulties in this country in settling forever many of the pressing problems that confront us arises from the total misapprehension of the motives and actions of the Southern people, for which sectional demagogues are largely responsible. No people have ever been more misunderstood and misrepresented than those of the Southern portion of our country, and there is nothing in which we are more interested and about which we are more anxiously concerned than that we shall have the opportunity to meet face to face our countrymen from every portion of this Union, and that they may have willing ears to listen to the truth with reference to the people who have suffered so much from being so greatly misunderstood.

Gentlemen, a good deal has been said in this country of late about the new South. What this country really needs is a new North. It needs a North that will take a view of all the facts and not be guided by their own preconceived prejudices. It needs a North which will not waste all of its time and energy in reforming other people's abuses. It needs a North that will sometimes look at its own shortcomings and not always on those of people a thousand miles away; and it needs a North which will believe that when a man in the South of the Anglo-Saxon race happens by any untoward circumstance to come into serious collision with another man of the African race that it is not always because the other man is black.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, it needs a North which, with all its culture and patriotism, freeing itself from all narrowness and prejudice, will rise to the high plane of viewing this whole country as composed of one people, with one hope, one destiny, and one flag, and all moved by the same earnest desire to contribute to the grandeur and glory of a common country.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I would like to have a little more time, if entirely agreeable.

Mr. ROWELL. I ask that the gentleman may have a little more time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent that he may take such time as he desires, and that it be charged to this side of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman will be allowed to consume such further time as he desires. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not pretend to say that there are not many men in the North who do take a broad view of the situation, nor to say that the South has not received many substantial benefits from the North in the way of aid toward the education of poor people, both white and black, and in many ways I need not here mention. I am anxious to give them credit for everything that they have done or are doing that is good, and I am not here to criticize them severely for the views that they take on this question; but I am here to say that the first thing that we need is a different view from the Northern people as to the Southern question. Let me quote from a distinguished citizen of Massachusetts, for whose purity and patriotism we all have profound respect—a man long since dead who still lives. Mr. Webster, when attacked by the prejudices of Massachusetts, said:

The question is whether Massachusetts—intellectual in character and of high moral sentiment—the question is whether she will stand to the truth against temptation and against her own prejudices. She had conquered everything else, a sterile soil and an unfriendly climate; she had conquered everybody's prejudices but her own. The question is whether she will conquer her own, and that is the question I am determined to ask her. I do not wish these States to be bound together as a mere legal corporation, but by the common sympathies which bind kindred hearts. I desire to see throughout this country that balm for every wound, that remedy for all the evils under which the country groans, a united love for a common country.

[Applause.]

Now, gentlemen, these are noble sentiments, and I would like to repeat them in the ear of every citizen of Massachusetts to-day. I would ask them to rise to the height where they can take a broad and an unprejudiced view of the needs of this country, and when they have done that we will not be under the necessity of opposing any more such measures as this.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to say a few words with reference to the matter of securing an honest return to this House of the true sentiments of the people of this country. A great deal has been said throughout the whole country, and it has gotten to be a kind of a shibboleth of the Republican party and of other people who want to overturn the party now prominent in the South, to cry out for "a free ballot and a fair count." I say unhesitatingly that that is essential to the permanency of this Government.

But, gentlemen, what is the use of talking about a free ballot and a fair count unless we go to the extent of remedying the whole wrong? What is a free ballot? It is the right to put into a box, unhindered, a piece of paper with the name of the man of your choice representing the principles that you advocate. And what is a fair count but an opportunity to have every vote taken out of that box and fairly counted in the result? But, after all, that is a mere means. That is not the end of voting. The end and object of voting is that the voter may have his sentiments represented upon this floor and at the other end of this building, and there is where I say our friends on the other side fall far short of what they undertake. "A free ballot and a fair count" is a mere delusion and fraud unless the laws of the country are so framed in the several States of this Union that when a man casts his vote and has it counted it shall amount to something.

Now let us see about some of our Northern States in this respect. They delight in talking about the negro and alleged frauds in the South. The fact of it is, that I think there are a great many men on that side of the House who owe an everlasting debt of gratitude to the darky. They never would have been heard of if had it not been for him. Their political capital consists in talking about the blacks and abusing the white people of the South. That is the main-spring of their existence, so far as politics is concerned. And they do this for two purposes; first, because they want to be elected, and second, because they want to keep the eyes of the voters away from their own performances at home. Now what is the use of talking about free ballot and a fair count in Kansas, for instance, when the State is gerrymandered in such a way that not a Democratic voice has ever been heard from that State on the floor of Congress? Yet gentlemen waste their time and their strength and their energy in abusing the South and talking about the rights and the wrongs of the colored men of the South, when there are 147,000 Democratic voters in Kansas whose voice has never reached this House of Representatives.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. KELLEY. How could the gentleman expect any gerrymandering or non-gerrymandering to elect a Democrat from Kansas when there are not four Democratic counties in the whole State? [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. HEMPHILL. It does not make any difference how many Democratic counties there are in the State. That is not the question. The question is as to the representation of the voice of the people of the State, and the gentleman knows that the Democrats of Kansas never had a Representative here.

Mr. KELLEY. No, I do not. On the contrary, I know that they have had a Representative here.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Once.

Mr. KELLEY. Yes, once.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The exception proves the rule. Mr. Speaker, if the parties had a fair representation upon this floor in exact accord with the sentiment of the voters, there would be now in this House 163 Democrats, 154 Republicans, 5 Prohibitionists and 2 Labor candidates. That would be the result if there was a fair and honest expression here of the sentiments of the people of this country.

In California 117,000 Democratic votes are required to elect two Representatives, while 124,000 Republican votes elect four Representatives. The average number of votes to the Representative are, Democratic 58,000, Republican 31,000. In other words, it takes 27,000 more votes in California to put a Democratic Representative here than it takes to send a Republican Representative.

In Illinois 348,000 Democratic votes elect seven Representatives, while 370,000 Republican votes elected thirteen Representatives. The average number of Democratic votes to one Representative is 49,000; the average number of votes to each Republican Representative is 28,000. That is, it takes 21,000 more Democratic votes in Illinois to elect a Democrat here than it does to elect a Republican. I see that creates a smile on the other side. Gentlemen over there think that is all right. That is what they call "a free ballot and a fair count" up North.

Take Iowa, 179,000 Democratic votes elect one Representative, while 211,000 elect ten Republican Representatives. The average number of votes to the Representative on the Democratic side is 179,000, while the average number of votes to each Republican Representative is 21,000. In other words, it takes 158,000 more Democratic votes in Iowa to send one Democratic Representative here than it takes to send one Republican Representative. Yet the gentleman from Massachusetts thought it so small a matter that the Democrats of all these States should be swindled out of their rights on this floor that he deemed it absolutely unworthy of notice.

Mr. Speaker, I have here a great many other figures. Take the State so ably represented by the gentleman who has been elected dictator of this House, to pass all our laws for us during the Fifty-first Congress without any effort on our part. See how the case stands there. In Maine 73,734 Republican votes have chosen four Representatives, while 54,516 Democratic votes have chosen no Representative at all. In other words, there are four Representatives here from Maine representing 73,734 people; and there is not one man here from Maine representing 54,516 people.

In Massachusetts 104,385 Democratic voters elect two Representatives, while 183,892 Republicans elect ten. Average number of votes to the Representative: Democrat, 52,191; Republican, 18,389; difference, 33,803.

In Michigan 213,469 Democratic voters elect two Representatives, while 236,387 Republicans elect nine. Average number of votes to the Representative: Democrat, 106,734; Republican, 26,625; difference, 80,469.

In Minnesota 142,493 Republican voters have five Representatives, while 120,793 voters not of that party have no political representation.

In Nebraska 108,425 Republican voters have three Representatives, while 94,228 voters not of that party have no political representation.

In the great State of New York it takes to elect a Representative: Democrats, 42,389; Republicans, 34,105; difference, 8,284.

In Ohio it is as follows: Democrats, 79,251; Republicans, 26,003; difference, 53,248.

In Pennsylvania it is as follows: Democrats, 63,805; Republicans, 25,052; difference, 38,753.

In a Congressional election a Republican has three times the political weight of a Democrat in Ohio and Massachusetts, four times as much in Michigan, and more than eight times as much in Iowa, while in nineteen States, ten Republican and nine Democratic, the minorities have no influence or power in a Congressional election and have no political representation in the House of Representatives.

Gentlemen, if a minister of the gospel goes into the pulpit one day in each week and preaches the gospel in its purity and beauty, and serves the devil with might and main the other six days of the week, the people of the community will most likely not have much confidence in him; and you could not blame them very much. That is just the way we look at these sham efforts at reform coming from the other side of the House, under the pretense of a "free ballot and a fair count," when it is known by everybody that these same reformers have so fixed the apportionment in their States that representation amounts to absolutely nothing so far as the Democrats are concerned.

Now for the total. In fourteen Northern States, as the New York World shows by figures, there are 3,386,000 Republicans, who elect 126 Representatives, the average being not quite 27,000 to each Representative, while 3,074,000 Democrats elect in the same number of States only 47 Representatives, or an average of 65,000 Democratic votes to elect a Representative.

Gentlemen, if voting means anything; if it means the expression through Representatives of the policy which the people desire to see adopted, I say that you in the majority are here wrongfully; you have no right to be here, because the people have not by their full and fair expression sent you here.

Mr. SPRINGER. They are usurpers.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, you are usurpers.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Will the gentleman from South Carolina permit me one observation?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I would prefer not to be interrupted, because I am trenching on the time of other gentlemen.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I wish only to call the gentleman's attention to this point: The gentleman must have noticed that in the exhibit to which he has referred in relation to fourteen States, several of the Northern States are omitted. I do not know that it would make any particular difference in the result; but the gentleman, I know, is too fair not to notice that omission.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I only specify some Northern States. There may be a little inaccuracy in the addition and subtraction; but anything of that kind would not affect this general result, that 65,000 Democratic votes are required to elect one Representative, and 27,000 Republican votes to elect a Representative. I am sure there is no such mistake as would affect that general result.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Oh, I grant the showing of the argument.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Take, for instance, the State of New York, which has two representatives at the other end of the Capitol voting for protection and for monopolies, as we think. How do they get there? Why, they get there because the Legislature of New York refused to have a census of the voters of the State so that there should be a reapportionment. Since 1885 the Legislature, in the teeth of the constitution, has refused to the people the plain right to have themselves enumerated and their representatives apportioned according to the enumeration. And so Mr. EVARTS and Mr. HISCOCK are today in the Senate of the United States misrepresenting the sentiments of the State of New York.

The same thing is true with regard to Connecticut.

Mr. PAYNE rose.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Just wait a moment; you can say it afterward, and it does not amount to anything, anyhow. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Why are you not fair enough to say it?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, I will say this. The Legislature of New York passed a law providing for a census, taking in the amount of property and everything of that kind, which the constitution did not provide for, and the governor vetoed it, as he ought to have done.

Mr. PAYNE. Did not Mr. Tilden, when governor, sign a precisely similar law?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Tilden, like other people, did some things under stress of weather.

Mr. SPINOLA. We are talking about what the Republicans did. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEMPHILL. Take the State of Connecticut. In 1884, 1886, and 1888 the largest number of votes there, as we all know, were cast for a Democratic governor; but the Legislature did not regard the voice of the voters; they turned right around, slapped the people in the face, and put in a man who was not elected by a majority of the votes. And as we all know, Connecticut has her representatives in the Senate of the United States who advocate and vote for Republican principles, while the political sentiment of Connecticut is absolutely Democratic, and has been so for many years.

Gentlemen, when you have righted the wrongs at your own doors; when you have taken the beam out of your own eye so that you can see without prejudice; when you have fixed the laws of your own States so that there may be a proper and honest expression of the sentiments of the people of the Northern States—in other words, gentlemen, when you have practiced what you preach and shown your faith by your works, then come to us and we will receive you with open arms; and if we do not take your advice we will suggest something better which you will agree to. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, gentlemen, this question is not only of very great importance to this whole country, but it is a question of exceeding great consequence to the Southern portion of it. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] realized this, for he addressed the larger part of his remarks in this House to treating of that phase of the subject. In the Northern States of the Union, whether the Democrats or Republicans are in power is a matter of not so much consequence, because you have there honest people in both parties, and you have dishonest people in both parties, of course; but generally speaking, the better sentiment of the country in all sections of the Northern States stands by what is honest and just, and will give you at least a fairly clean and honest administration of public affairs. But, gentlemen, when you look to another portion of this country the prospect is very different.

Now, we know very well that the colored man has just as many rights and privileges before the law as we have, and we know, also, gentlemen—and it is not a matter of belief only—that, during the years of the longest and saddest experience that ever fell to the lot of any people on earth, we were robbed by the picked villains of the United States under the forms of law, backed up by the bayonets of the United States Army. There is not a man I have ever met from one of the Northern States who is so devoid of manhood and courage that he would not, under the circumstances which governed the Southern States at that time, assert his right as an American citizen and fling off such a miserable sham of a Government, which, instead of protecting the people, robbed them of everything they could gather together after the destructive ravages of war.

We have seen in South Carolina every military company of white men disarmed by law and at the same time 95,000 black men enrolled as State militia and ordered to attend political meetings. We have seen 14,000 black men organized just before an election and 1,000,000 cartridges bought for their use. We have seen the State debt increased $13,000,000 in four years. We have seen the decision of the supreme court of the State as to the right of gentlemen to seats in the Legislature overruled by a corporal of the United States Army. In truth, we have witnessed and experienced every insult and injury that could be heaped upon a people; and, gentlemen, we do not want to be put in that position again.

So far as this law affects members of Congress only we protest against it, but we can shoulder it if the country can, but as to our own State, we know that the honest and intelligent people must either rule it or we must leave it; and for myself, gentlemen, in this presence and before the people of the United States and before that God who sits upon the circle of the heavens, in all reverence, but in all earnestness, I swear we will not leave it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is the home of our fathers. There their bones lie buried through many generations. They bought it with their blood when Concord and Lexington were the battle-fields of this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] They have handed it down to us unimpaired; and, gentlemen, are we not our fathers' sons? Shall the blood first turn back in our veins, and shall we transmit to coming generations a great and noble State which has been overriden and down-trodden by a race whom God never intended should rule over us? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, gentlemen, I believe, and I do not hesitate to say it, that the colored man has his rights in full. He has as many rights as I have, and I concede them all to him, but he can not have his rights and mine, too, and this law is intended to put him again in control of the government of the Southern States. It is intended to awaken again that race prejudice which is fast dying out; it is intended to bring about a constant irritation and clash between the two races in the South, and will retard its growth and be destructive of the very principles of government in that section.

Now, gentlemen, I want to quote a few words from a speech which I will not read at length. They are the words of a gentleman who is prominent in this country and has received the support of the Republican party in a most earnest contest for the governorship of South Carolina, certainly one of the most scholarly men I know. I refer to Governor Chamberlain, formerly of South Carolina. He spoke before a Boston audience not a great while ago, and after talking of other things came to the question of the condition of the colored man in the South. I quote from his language:

What we shall do about it is our only proper present inquiry. I see men running to and fro, patriots wringing their hands in despair, magazine writers crowding our tables with discussions, editors venting their omniscience, and clergymen lifting up their prayers over our portentous race problem. I confess I share in no such excitement, and I confess, too, here in Boston, that I have very little respect for those who are raising this alarm and outcry. It is, in my judgment, at least nine parts out of ten the babble of professional or ill-informed philanthropists and the interested jargon of demagogic politicians. [Cheers.]

That is the opinion of a man capable of judging.

What, then, is the duty of the North in respect to this problem? What is Boston's and Massachusetts' duty? What is the duty of all patriotic men? I answer with my whole mind and conscience, their duty is to let the negro alone.

Can a patriotic American conceive of a more unpatriotic and infamous course of conduct—infamous towards the negro as well as the white man of the South—than, without other than a cold-blooded partisan aim, to arouse the hatred of both races toward each other, to set the negro and white man at each other's throats, while they in cowardly safety, in New Hampshire and Kansas, look on at the bloody results? And such men, heaven defend us, are our Senators and Republican leaders! [Cheers.] When President Harrison calls for a "bugle blast," or Depew discourages solemnly of our duty to defend a free ballot, let us be brave enough and manly enough to tell them that such thunder is a stage trick which has had its day of success, and that the real point of danger to a free ballot and to American institutions lies in the means and methods which in the last election carried New York for Harrison. [Long-continued cheering.]

I want to read one further extract from this speech. He was the Republican governor of South Carolina and lived there for twelve years. He has been away from our State since 1876. He went back again and has been there six or eight months. As to the situation and condition of the negro upon his return as compared with that when he left, I quote this language:

What do I find? I find that since 1876 both races in South Carolina have prospered. I find the prosperity of the negro has advanced pari passu, more than pari passu, with the white man. I find the negro more self-respecting, better provided with schools, far better, acquiring property more rapidly, more industrious, more ambitious for education and property, than he ever was before 1876; and I have come here to-night, at not a little inconvenience, to proclaim this in the ear of Boston's philanthropy and Boston's patriotism. [Cheers.]

I do not exonerate the white race at the South from all past or present blame. There are wrongs done there to the negro now, but I do say that the negro has never known such an era of advancement and prosperity in all that befits a citizen and freeman at the period since 1876; and if it be treason to say it, I reply, in historic words, "Make the most of it!" [Long applause.]

Now, gentlemen, these are the sentiments which we think are true with reference to the condition of the people in these Southern States. I could go on and add to them, but I will not do it now. I only desire to say, gentlemen, in conclusion, that of course the day when we can resist by force any law of the United States, however unjust it may be, has gone by forever.

To fraud or violence we will not resort, but every lawful means that can be suggested consistent with honor we will employ to preserve our civilization and our prosperity and our freedom.

We can only appeal to the good people of this country to give us that fair treatment which they, under like circumstances, would demand at the hands of the Government to which we all pay taxes, which we all support, and whose common flag we all love.

I know, Mr. Speaker, there are some gentlemen upon whom we can not impress the sacred truths which come up from every part of the Southern country. They do not believe us, they do not want to believe us. Such men willfully misrepresent and traduce us. We do not expect their good opinion, and we sling defiance in their teeth. We can not reason with them. Facts do them no good.

But back of these lies the great body of the American people. For one, I have an abiding faith in their sense of justice and in their love of right; and when we have fully, fairly, and honestly stated to them the facts with reference to the Southern country, and the position of the black man in it, when they have once understood the whole case, I have no doubt that they will render an honest and a righteous verdict.

And whatever that verdict may be the Southern people will accept it as the judgment of their countrymen, and as the final arbitrament of this great problem; and relying upon Him who is the God of Justice, as well as the God of Nations, we will go forward in the great work that lies before us, and endeavor to perform our whole duty to this country honestly, patriotically, and faithfully. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BINGHAM. On behalf of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads I report back to the House the bill (H. R. 9856) making appropriations for the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and request the House to non-concur in the amendments of the Senate, and request a conference upon the same.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, June 24, 1890.

Resolved, That the bill from the House of Representatives (H. R. 9856) entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891," do pass with the following amendments:

Page 1, lines 6 and 7, strike out the following words: "two hundred and fifty" and insert in lieu thereof "three hundred."

Page 1, line 20, strike out the words "two hundred" and insert in lieu thereof "five hundred and ninety."

Page 1, line 22, strike out the word "that" and insert the word "this."

Page 3, line 7, strike out the word "fifty" and insert the word "thirty-five."

Page 4, lines 25 and 26, strike out the words "six hundred and sixty-four" and insert in lieu thereof "seven hundred and twelve."

Page 4, line 26, after the word "dollars," insert the following:

"And from this appropriation the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to expend the sum of $45,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to cover one-half of the cost of transportation, compensation, and expense of clerks to be employed in sorting and pouching mails in transit on steamships between the United States and other postal administrations in the International Postal Union."

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move non-concurrence in the amendments of the Senate, and request the appointment of a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker announced the following gentlemen as conferees on the part of the House: Messrs. BINGHAM, KETCHAM, and BLOUNT.

FEDERAL ELECTION LAW.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Speaker, after the eloquent and exhaustive speech of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], chairman of the committee that reported this bill, this side of the House might well afford to rest the case, because all else that may be said will be but a repetition or a presentation of the same arguments in different forms. And after the eloquent closing of the speech of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL], all sides of the House, if he represents the sentiment of that State, ought to cry out aloud for the passage of this bill, because, as I understand him, he proclaims the will of the minority in South Carolina.

The bill under consideration, Mr. Speaker, is no new departure in legislation. It is but an enlargement of the law which has been upon the statute-book since 1871, and which, for eighteen years, has been constantly called into requisition in all the great centers of population for the benefit of all the people, and always in the interest of honest elections. For eighteen years it has been frequently called into requisition in the rural districts as well North as South, and never to the detriment of any legal voter and always in the interest of light and truth. It is not a revolution in the practices of this country. It is not trenching upon the rights of any of the States reserved to them. It is but an exercise of a power placed in the beginning in the Constitution of the United States, a power that the people in Congress assembled have not hesitated to make use of when honest elections and fair representation demanded that that power should be called into use.

The gentleman from South Carolina goes back to the time when the measure first became a law requiring a division of the various States into Congressional districts, and he calls up the protests of several States against that law, and the declaration of some of them that it was an exercise of power not granted by the Constitution. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that, notwithstanding those declarations, the judgment of the years has been pronounced in favor of that exercise of power, and now nowhere in any State by any political party is there advocacy of a return to the former rule.

The test of the wisdom of an act is the approval of the generations that follow, and the protests to which he refers have gone down into history as protests made for political use; protests manifesting the unwisdom of the protestants. The resurrection of the history of the opposition to the districting act in this year of our Lord 1890 is unfortunate for the gentleman's position, for it recalls one of the worst mistakes of the Democratic party in opposing a legitimate exercise of Federal power.

Mr. Speaker, there is no more vital question confronting the American people than that which concerns honest elections, whether those elections have reference to State or local affairs, or whether they have reference to the House of Representatives of the United States. So long as the people rest secure in the belief that legislators are chosen by the free and uncorrupted suffrage of the electors, so long as they are satisfied that laws are enacted and executed by those who have been honestly chosen, just so long will there be respect for the authority of the law and a public sentiment opposed to lawlessness and a standing army of conservators of good government. It is the conviction that all the people have a voice in the selection of legislative and executive officers; the conviction that every man, however high or however low, counts one at the ballot-box, that makes this "a Government of the people, by the people, and for the people."

Our fathers when they founded the Government under which we live laid the corner-stone in the doctrine that governments are established among men by the consent of the governed, and in building a new nation out of all the varied forms of government that the world had developed selected that one which recognizes in each citizen a sovereign, with a right to a single voice and the equal of every other man at the ballot-box; the right to protect himself with his ballot; the right to give his consent to the government under which he lives at the ballot-box, and the right to have defended the purity of the elections where that voice was expressed.

Now, I shall not enter into any discussion of the constitutional questions of whether we have a right to enact into law this bill which we are now considering. It is res adjudicata. It is a settled question, and to stop to discuss it before this body is to waste the people's time. But because we have the power it does not necessarily follow that we ought to exercise it. If, under the ordinary machinery supplied by a State for holding elections, we are having fair elections throughout the country, if those not qualified are kept from voting and all the qualified are permitted to cast an unpurchased and uncompelled ballot with assurance of an honest count and correct return, then there is no need of other law. If crimes against the ballot are only sporadic, cropping out here and there, the work of the criminal classes, without seriously affecting results, then we have no occasion to call upon the reserve power of the Federal Government to correct these sporadic and occasional evils; but if, on the other hand, crimes against the purity of the ballot-box are general, or general in any particular locality, and the people of the State or the localities are either unable or unwilling to cope with and uproot the evil, then it ought not only to be the duty, but it ought to be the wish of every representative of the people to use whatever power is found in the Federal Constitution to correct the wrong; and I can not conceive how any man can oppose the proper exercise of that power if he believes that crimes are prevalent and the results of elections uncertain, unless it is his desire that these crimes may continue, and that minorities instead of majorities shall make the laws and control the destinies of the nation.

Now, is it true that crimes against the suffrage are common? Why, Mr. Speaker, it is only a few years ago that, figuratively, the whole American people held their breath awaiting for the threatened marshaling of armies to determine who should be inaugurated President of the United States. On the one hand our friends on the other side were charging that Rutherford B. Hayes was not elected President of the United States and that Mr. Tilden was the duly and lawfully elected President, and they have been vigorously maintaining from that day to this that the Republicans stole the Presidency. Upon the other hand, we upon this side of the House have answered back: "You tried to take the Presidential office by force; failing that, you tried to steal it; failing that, you tried to purchase it by the most unblushing attempt at corruption ever heard of in the country; failing that, you threatened to marshal your partisans and take that which you could neither capture, steal, nor buy; and ever since have been finding fault because you were not permitted to do it." If what I say is true, or if half of what the other side believes is true, then in 1876 there was fraud, there was corruption of the most gigantic character in American history. Their numbers are not few who believe that six years ago Mr. Cleveland was counted into the Presidential chair by the action of corrupt officials at the polls in his own State, to say nothing of the suppression of votes in all the South. I say there are those, and their numbers are increasing every day, who believe it; and if that belief honestly exists, ought it not to be the wish of every representative of the people to so conduct elections as to make such a charge impossible of belief in the future?

It is an historic fact that the first year after the law of 1871 was put in force it eliminated 20,000 fraudulent names from the register of a single city, and in other large cities in proportion. No one anywhere among honest men acquainted with the facts will deny that in all the great—

Mr. SPINOLA. Yes; I deny it.

Mr. ROWELL. That in all the great centers of population there is a need of just such supervision in aid of the State authority and that watchfulness over possible dishonest officials to prevent dishonest elections.

Now, in saying this, I am not charging that the people of these great cities desire dishonest elections, but I am charging that into these great centers of life gather the criminal classes; that criminals, by the aid of other criminals, lift themselves into place and power in spite of the will of the majority, and that, having so done, they get control of election and registration machinery, so that it becomes necessary to bring in other power, outside of the local authority, to uncover the blackness of crime and to let the light of day in upon it and to bring the criminals to punishment; and good men rejoice that there is a machinery outside which can help the honest majority in their cry for help against the criminals who, by "repeating," by false registration, by the stuffing of ballot-boxes, by false election returns, take possession of great city governments against the will of the people.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] thought it strange that our colleague, the chairman of the committee [Mr. LODGE], should advance the idea that where there was a general belief that frauds in elections existed there ought to be a law to disclose whether that belief was true or false; and he thought that we ought to stand up in our majesty, remain silent under the charge, and trust to time and circumstances to develop the truth. We, legislators for the nation, hold our peace when all the country charges that large numbers of men hold their seats in this body by the will of the minority and against the will of the majority! Hold our peace and have the people declare that the laws are not enacted by the voice of the people, but by the voice of the minority! Is that the gentleman's idea of duty to country, duty to his own State, duty to the common people, the conservators of good order everywhere?

But, Mr. Speaker, I intend to be entirely frank in what I say upon this bill. It is everywhere in Northern circles believed that the black vote of the Southern States is suppressed. It is everywhere believed that the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States is nullified. Now, if that belief is not true, it is one of the purposes of this bill to develop that fact. It is one of the purposes of this bill to secure everywhere to every man who desires it and is qualified the right to cast his ballot and have it counted; and in using the term "every man" I mean every man without reference to where he lives or what his color may be. It was the pleasure of the American people to incorporate into the Constitution of the United States the fifteenth amendment, and since that article became a part of our Constitution everywhere, in every State, the black man has been a voter upon the same terms as the white man.

Is it our duty, under the oath which we registered when we took our seats here, to see to it that the Constitution, the whole Constitution, and every section of it shall be upheld? Or did we take that oath with a mental reservation that if we live in a State where there might be colored men making up a majority of the population we would proclaim to the world that "we, the minority, must control, or that either they or we must leave the State, and that, so help us God, we would not leave it?" Is there any other meaning to that declaration, so defiantly made on this floor, than that, although the colored men are registered voters, although they are made voters by the Constitution of the United States, and although they constitute a majority of the voters, yet "we, the minority, will control the State for them and us; we, the minority, will represent the State in the national halls of legislation; we, the minority, will ignore the political rights of the majority, and we will do it in spite of the Constitution and in spite of any law that may be enacted by the Congress of the United States?"

Mr. Speaker, I have said that the belief is prevalent throughout the North that the black vote in the Southern States is suppressed. I now propose to affirm that that belief is based upon absolute proof. The black vote is not only suppressed, but it is the announced determination of the men who control public sentiment there, men of prominence and character throughout the great black belt of the country, that that suppression shall continue with law or in spite of law. Before I come to refer to the facts which I propose to cite, I want to discuss for a little while the question whether that ought to exist, and also the other question whether it is within the reasonable expectation of the country that the evils now existing of deprived suffrage will be corrected by the various localities.

I said in the outset that this Government was founded upon the idea that every man living under it gave his consent to the law, that consent to be manifested by the vote which he cast. When the war closed in 1865 it resulted in the emancipation of a race that for more than two hundred years had been slaves. That was the necessary outcome of that war. The black man had been the subject of discussion from the very beginning. That discussion culminated in a bloody war; on the one side men fighting for national unity, and on the other side men fighting to dismember the nation and found a new nation upon the corner-stone of human slavery. But the men who sought to maintain national unity were the victors. A new nation was not formed in the last half of the nineteenth century, in free America, founded upon human bondage. The bondsman went free. What was then our condition; what was the situation of the great ruling class of the South who had attempted to break up the nation? There were two possible conditions for them. One was exile, the other was re-enfranchisement. It was impossible that they should live in this country a subject race. It was impossible that they should obey laws and have no voice in making them; impossible, because incompatible with the theory upon which our nation was built.

But, while that is true, they were in a very different condition from the people of the North. The northern armies went home victors. The soldiers of the North went to homes which had not ceased to prosper during all the years of war, to homes where the foot of the invader had never penetrated, to glad welcomes because of the victory, and because of a belief that thenceforth they would be held as heroes who had been engaged in a righteous cause. Victors can afford to be magnanimous—can afford to trust the future and believe in the perpetuity of the nation they helped to save, and even to trust those not well disposed to it. But the Southern army went home vanquished, humiliated, because humiliation necessarily comes with defeat. They went to homes devastated, to a country that had been invaded, to homes, cities, and railroad systems destroyed, to a section absolutely impoverished, and they went to a social system absolutely overturned and uprooted.

That they were not well affected toward the new Union, the result of the war, and toward the new social conditions, the result of emancipation, not well affected toward the freedmen, need not surprise anybody. On the contrary, had they not been disappointed, had they not felt resentment and hostility, and had they not for a time refused to participate in State and national affairs, it would have been a surprising condition in this country.

Now, while it is true that it was not possible for them to live in this country without re-enfranchisement, and without a participation in the affairs of the Government, it is equally true that there was no room in all this country for a subject class, and that therefore the black men of that country, recently made freemen, must also, ignorant as they were, be provided with the weapon of self-protection—the same weapon put back into the hands of their former masters—the ballot of the freeman. Ignorant they were, I grant you; and that ignorant suffrage necessarily entails evil, I grant you; but the evil is nothing in comparison with the evil of a subject class. We could have waited; but under the then condition of affairs, or any condition that might be looked for except in the very remote future, there was no hope that the black men once slaves would ever be enfranchised freemen by the consent of their late masters. If they were ever to be put on the road to independence and real manhood, the quicker they started the better for all concerned. Therefore it was the patriotic duty of the people of the United States, before they surrendered the power to do so forever, to see to it that the black men of the South should have the same right as the re-enfranchised white men of the South—the right to cast a ballot, and to have that ballot counted.

Mr. Speaker, concessions never come willingly from above. The favored of fortune who have climbed the rounds of the ladder until they have reached the heights are ever ready to force back the struggling men beneath them, seeking to climb the same ladder. Liberty's circle is broadened by the surging of the masses from the bottom—reluctantly compelled from those above. And in the hundred years just past we may all find a lesson. Every decade shows a broader suffrage, a wider liberty, compelled by the struggling millions who have not caught the ear of fortune and placed themselves beyond the need of legal protection. Revolutions never go backward unless they are revolutions of reaction. Liberty and privilege, once captured by the people below, can never permanently be retaken by the few who are above.

Prophecies of evil are always coming from the wise in their own conceit against the broadened suffrage—prophecies of destruction from the few who think they have been divinely commissioned to rule. But those prophecies have ever in the long run been belied; and the broader the suffrage, the wider the circle of liberty, the greater the prosperity to all the people. And he who would deserve well of his country, having reached the top, may well consider the wisdom of stretching a hand to the struggling men below him instead of trying to force them back into the depths.

Hence the time had to come when the ballot must be placed in the hands of every freeman. The evils that came with it must be endured as being less evils than perpetual bondage, and perpetual bondage of the worst type is that kind of bondage which may not protect itself with a ballot. We heed upon this floor the demands of the men with tickets in their hands. No law which strikes at the great mass of voters ever gets through this House, with the knowledge of the members, without vigorous protest. If there is no vote in the hand of any one of the masses, who heeds the interest of that class of men? Who cares for the men who have not yet attained to the high privilege of American citizenship? That class of people do not count at the polls; that class of people have nothing in their hands with which to protect themselves.

I have said Southern men were not well affected towards their former slaves at the close of the war. They did not dislike them as slaves, but they despised them as freemen because they had been accustomed to regard them as only fit for menial service. The condition has not greatly improved. The black man has allied himself politically with those who gave him his freedom. The master has formed other political alliances. He refuses to believe that his late slave can ever reach any other place than that of menial service. While such belief lasts there can be no political union between black and white in the South. When it ends and justice is conceded to the black man, there will remain no race issue.

These men, lately bondmen, ignorant, semi-civilized, unaccustomed to self-reliance and independent judgment, ought not to be judged by their mistakes, but rather by their successes under adverse circumstances.

After more than two hundred years of bondage, subject absolutely to others' will than their own, shut out from all knowledge, such as white men find necessary to success, circumscribed in their movements, with no permanent family ties, with no legal defense against oppression, 4,000,000 men ushered into liberty to commence life in abject poverty and amongst those who had no faith in them as freemen, it was to be expected that they would halt and stumble, and even disappoint the hopes of their friends. Their helplessness appealed to the sympathy of every well-wisher of humanity.

But they were in the country, and of it. Their ancestors had come hither in chains. Their labor had enriched their masters. They could not and can not now be spared. They are here to stay, in the land of their fathers. Laws are for them as well as the whites, and he who studies with the idea that the whites are the only people who are to be legislated for makes a grave mistake.

The progress of these people in the last quarter of a century, in education, in getting wealth, ought to admonish the whites that this race will not always be servile.

Now, Mr. Speaker, has the black vote been suppressed? That it has is a truth that everybody recognizes. The man of wealth and power may forget election day, but the common citizen, who knows that there is one place in the world where he is the equal of every other man—that place the ballot-box—never willingly stays away from an election on an important occasion. And whenever you find a great body of men always absent on election day, you may set it down as conclusive proof that they are not away by their own consent or by their own will. A prominent man, testifying in a case before the Committee on Elections and trying to justify the belief that the black men of his district were not kept from the polls by the firing of cannon night and day for two weeks before the election, said, "No, that don't scare them; nothing but the shotgun keeps them from the polls."

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. OATES. The gentleman says that wherever there is the absence of a large number of voters from the polls it is conclusive evidence that they have been intimidated.

Mr. ROWELL. That was not exactly the way I put it.

Mr. OATES. Was not that the substance of the gentleman's statement?

Mr. ROWELL. No, sir. I said, on important occasions, at important elections, wherever a large body of the common people are not found at elections on election day it is conclusive proof that there has been something done improper, either then or at some past time, to keep them away from the polls.

Mr. OATES. I deny your statement, and know of my own knowledge that it is untrue in many instances. I will prove my position when I have the opportunity.

Mr. ROWELL. Well, Mr. Speaker, I shall not engage in a bandying of words with my friend from Alabama as to his knowledge. But I undertake to say that what I have stated is the universal experience of observing and unprejudiced men. And I know how necessary it is to deny that conclusion, because only upon that denial can there be an accounting for the almost universal absence from the polls of the black men in many of the Southern States. I shall soon come to sworn proof of what I assert; and I say to my friend from Alabama that the records of this Congress are full of absolute proof of the truth of what I have asserted, coming from a dozen districts in the Southern States where the black men are.

Now, I want to take up the election of 1888. That was the year of a Presidential election. Four years before, the Democratic party secured the executive control of this Government after having been out of power for twenty-four years. They went into the contest of 1888 with earnestness, with vigor, and with a determination to hold on to that control which they had secured four years before. The Republicans, on the other hand, unwillingly had surrendered power and were eager to regain the power they had thus surrendered to the Democracy. It was an election in which North, South, East, and West were deeply interested, and everywhere the voters were aroused, intelligent and the ignorant alike, and heart and brain were enlisted as they had not been in years.

Now, take the State of South Carolina, the State from which my honored colleague on the committee [Mr. HEMPHILL] comes, and in which he lives; the State where his fathers lived and where their bones lie buried; the State that he does not intend to leave, although he must leave, he says, if the blacks there have the free right to vote and have their votes counted. In that State, in 1880, there were 604,332 black people, men, women, and children, and about 391,000 white people, or over 60 per cent. of the population blacks; and it has been proved so often, so overwhelmingly, and without serious contradiction, that 95 per cent. of these black men are Republicans, that we have a right to assume that had all the black men voted in South Carolina, by a majority of 50,000 it would have cast its vote for the Republican electors, and sent a solid Republican delegation to this Congress. And yet the total vote in all of that State for Congressmen in its seven districts was only 76,365, less than 11,000 to a Congressional district; and the total Republican and scattering vote was only 10,460. Seven thousand of these were cast in a single district, and that district made up in 1880 of over 180,000 people, made out of five of the old Congressional districts, and made in an image that man never dreamed of before, made contiguous by 50 miles of sea-beach, over which the ocean waves flowed every day.

Mr. PEEL. Will the gentleman bear with me for a moment, if it will not divert him?

Mr. ROWELL. Certainly.

Mr. PEEL. My colleague has called my attention to the fact that you stated that where a vote was not polled in a Congressional district that it was evident there was intimidation or corruption.

Mr. ROWELL. No, not exactly. I did not say intimidation. I said that there had been some reason which disfranchised the voters or kept them away from the polls.

Mr. PEEL. Well, I wanted to say in response to the gentleman, that in 1886 the Congressional Directory will show that I did not receive 5,000 votes in my district.

Mr. ROWELL. That may be. Had you opposition?

Mr. PEEL. No. And I will say here in the presence of this House that there is no district in the United States where elections are fairer than in mine.

Mr. ROWELL. I hope that is true.

Mr. PEEL. And there has never been a whisper of suspicion against it. You can not get a Republican to say anything against the fairness of elections in that district.

Mr. ROWELL. How many did the opposition poll in 1888?

Mr. PEEL. They polled a good many votes then; I do not recollect the exact number.

Mr. ROWELL. Was the whole vote about 25,000?

Mr. PEEL. I do not remember the number, but I can say to the gentleman that every man who wanted to vote voted, that every man who votes there has his vote counted, and there is no restriction on the right to vote.

Mr. ROWELL. Well, Mr. Speaker, what the gentleman states exactly carries out the idea I suggested in what I said. In unimportant elections if you have a district that has no opposition, and there is nobody else to be voted for except a member of Congress, then a few of his friends will go and vote and that is an end of it. I understand that very well. Such an election is not likely to bring out the votes of the district. It is only those elections that take place when important issues are involved.

Mr. PEEL. Will not the gentleman concede that it is likely to take place in any district where there is no opposition in an off year?

Mr. ROWELL. Undoubtedly; and that is the very reason I am not talking of off years, but of Presidential years, important elections; and I have shown that in the State of South Carolina only a little over 10,000 Republican votes were cast, with a black population of over 600,000, 95 per cent. of whom are Republicans, and that the white vote was some 60,000, and that together there were less than 11,000 votes in a Presidential year on a Presidential day for each of the Congressional districts. And outside of the Seventh district there were only about 3,000 Republican votes cast. I know the reason why. More than 50 per cent. of the colored votes of that State had been disfranchised by an unconstitutional statute of the State.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the gentleman allow me one moment?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS. I want to say in a Presidential year, in 1888, in my district, I received 12,855 votes, and my Republican competitor received 2,396. And I want to say that no man on the face of the earth has ever intimated that there was anything unfair about the election there, or that anybody was intimidated, or there was any ballot-box stuffing, and I dare any man to make the assertion.

Mr. ROWELL. Oh, well, I never take a dare. That is not my way of doing business, nor my way of talking.

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; but I wanted to answer emphatically that part of your argument.

Mr. ROWELL. Now, I do not know anything about your district. I know what is true as a general rule, and know what has been proved to be true in a dozen cases during the present Congress that I have investigated, and as many more that I have examined in past Congresses.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Will the gentleman allow a short statement?

Mr. ROWELL. I will yield for a question.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Well, it involves a little statement.

Mr. ROWELL. Oh, no; I can not yield for that. You might want to "dare somebody, too." [Laughter.]

The gentleman will understand, of course, that I do not mean to be discourteous, but I must beg not to be interrupted.

Mr. Speaker, there are ten Congressional districts in Georgia, and the total vote of Georgia in 1888 was 129,383 for Congressmen, or a little less than 13,000 for each Congressional district.

The Republican and scattering vote throughout the State was 33,842, an average of 3,400 Republican votes to the district. There were 725,133 colored people in that State in 1880, and 816,906 white people. For some reason the Democratic white voters cast their ballots and for some reason the Republican black voters did not cast their ballots.

Mr. CRISP. What reason do you assign for that?

Mr. ROWELL. I do not know, sir, but I have my belief.

Mr. CRISP. Let us have your belief. State what your belief is.

Mr. ROWELL. I will. I believe that the revolution which swept over the South in 1875—that revolution to which nearly every Southern man points with pride as the grandest act that ever took place in any country, in overthrowing what they were pleased to call the carpet-bag government when there was force and fraud and crime that ought to bring the blush of shame to every patriot—that the acts of 1875 and 1876 have had their influence, extending all through the years down to the present time.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. Has the gentleman a particle of proof to sustain that belief? There is not a particle of proof to sustain it.

Mr. CRISP. Let me say to my friend upon how little foundation that belief is based, that in 1871 the Democrats came to their own in Georgia. You say you base your belief on the revolution of 1876. Let me say to you that the Democrats elected a governor in Georgia in the fall of 1871.

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, but the Republicans gave a great many more votes in the fall of 1871 than they ever have since.

Mr. CRISP. Let me state to my friend a fact that he ought to know, before he has any belief about Georgia, that there has been no organized Republican party in that State, except to hold offices here and to send delegates to the Republican convention, for fifteen years.

Mr. ROWELL. And, Mr. Speaker, the fact that there has been no organized Republican party in Georgia speaks in eloquent words of the disfranchisement of the Republicans in that State. [Applause in the galleries and on the Republican side.] And it ought to kindle a fire of remorse that ought to strike into the consciences of the white people who made it impossible that there should be an organized Republican party in Georgia.

Mr. CRISP. How have they made it impossible?

Mr. ROWELL. The fact remains.

Mr. CRISP. State the fact. Show your evidence.

Mr. ROWELL. Existing things do not come without a reason. I do not blame the gentlemen who come here from ten Congressional districts in Georgia who wish to retain their representation on this floor.

Mr. CRISP. You can not even produce a newspaper statement to support your assertion.

Mr. ROWELL. I am not giving newspaper statements now. I am referring to conditions, and I know as an observant man that you never find a certain condition of affairs, unnatural and improbable, unless there has been a reason behind it.

Mr. CRISP. Why is 47 per cent. of the vote in Maine silent? Why is over 40 per cent. of the vote in Massachusetts silent?

Mr. ROWELL. That is not so in Presidential elections.

Mr. CRISP. In Presidential years. The statistics show that.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Oh, no; they all vote then.

Mr. ROWELL. Now I am going to refer to the State of Alabama.

Mr. CRISP. You had better drop the State of Georgia. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. ROWELL. My genial friend over there is always ready to defend the State of Georgia. I hope Georgia will always send as able gentlemen as he to this House, but I would a great deal rather he would come here with twenty or thirty thousand votes behind him than with 1,500. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, my friend does not seem to catch hold of an idea that is very forceful generally throughout the country, and that is that the people of a State may vote or may not vote, as they please, whether it is agreeable to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois or not.

Mr. ROWELL. Now that is just what I am trying to get at, to pass a bill so that the people may vote or not vote, as they please. That is the purpose of this bill. [Applause in the galleries and on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PETERS in the chair). The applause in the galleries must cease.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, my friend expressed a belief about Georgia. As one of its humble representatives I ask him to point to a single line of evidence—

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that there is frequent applause in the galleries. It seems to me that the galleries have been filled up for occasions like this, expressly for the purpose of applauding any slander upon the South. I am tired of it, and I ask for the enforcement of the rules of this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The applause in the galleries must cease. Persons in the galleries are there by the courtesy of the House, and if the applause is repeated the galleries will be ordered to be cleared.

Mr. CRISP. I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] to point to a single line of evidence, or a single claim by anybody, that there are any unlawful practices in the State of Georgia.

Mr. ROWELL. I point to the fact that in the State of Georgia, with a population of 725,000 colored Republicans, there were less than 35,000 Republican votes, and my friend knows very well that there must be some reason for it.

Mr. CRISP. My friend knows very well, from the Directory and otherwise, that there is no opposition and has been none to the candidates in Georgia, and I just now stated we elect in Georgia, for instance, this coming year, in November, no officers except members of Congress. We hold one election in October and another in January, but the members of Congress alone are elected in November. Now, when there is no opposition to them, is it astonishing that the vote should be light? That is a fact; there is no one nominated on the other side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. ROWELL. I ask that I may have time extended in which to complete my remarks.

Mr. TRACEY. I hope the time will be taken from the time of the other side.

Mr. ROWELL. Certainly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By unanimous consent, the time of the gentleman will be extended.

Mr. ROWELL. Now I have given the gentleman from Georgia an ample opportunity to put his side of the case, and I think the House understands the theory upon which I base my opinions, and I proceed to the State of Alabama. The total vote of the eight districts of Alabama was 173,000, 22,000 returned vote for each district. The total Republican vote was 54,574, a little over 6,000 for each district. The white population of Alabama is 603,183; the black population is 601,103—44 per cent. In the seven districts of Mississippi the total vote was 113,675, a little over 16,000 to the Congressional district. The total Republican vote was 25,904—3,700 only to a district. The white population is 479,388, and the black population 650,291, or 58 per cent. of the total.

Now, I have all but one district of Louisiana. In the five districts of Louisiana, and I get the facts out of the Congressional Directory, there were 88,213 votes, or 17,600 to a district. The Republican vote was 20,376, a little over 4,000 to the district. The white population is 454,954, and the black population is 483,655. Taking the five States together, and the total average vote for all the Congressional districts is less than 16,000, while in the State having the largest colored population it is less than 11,000, and 7,000 of that in one district. Now, that is less than one-third of the vote polled in the State of Illinois in a Presidential year.

Now, in the State of Illinois, with its twenty Representatives, the white vote cast was 797,649, or a little less than 40,000 to a district, while in the five Southern States, with thirty-seven Representatives, it was 580,000. Now, as to the State of Illinois, with twenty Representatives and 797,000 votes, two votes in each of the five States count at the polls just the same as five votes in the State of Illinois.

Mr. ENLOE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ROWELL. I have yielded so much time that I can not.

Mr. ENLOE. Just a moment.

Mr. ROWELL. Just a moment, then.

Mr. ENLOE. I wanted to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he could explain the result in the Third Louisiana district, in which Mr. Price was elected over Mr. Minor, and in which he performed some missionary work.

Mr. ROWELL. I think I could explain it very satisfactorily to myself, but perhaps not so satisfactorily to the gentlemen upon the other side; but I shall not assume to give my personal observations in the Third district of Louisiana upon the floor of the House at this time.

Now, it may be said that Illinois is a Western State, or one of the growing States, and therefore it is not fair to make a comparison. I will take the New England States. Take the six New England States together. The average vote for Congressmen at that election was more than double the average vote of the five Southern States I have mentioned, and more than three times the average vote in the State of South Carolina; and that is a section of the country where the population ought not to increase more than normal because of emigration, and could properly be compared with the Southern States, where the increase is but normal.

Now, gentlemen may give a great many excuses for this condition of things, but I can give you a reason out of the sworn testimony presented to this Congress. You want to know what it is. Now, in some entire Congressional districts under the State machinery the vote when returned is absolutely reversed. Fraud taints every ballot-box and permeates the whole community. An honest election is looked upon as dishonest, and an honest election officer looked upon as an enemy of his country. In other Congressional districts armed bodies of masked men ride from poll to poll and seize the ballot-boxes and destroy them, and those ballots are not counted to make up the total vote of the State. In other districts, all through the district, ballot-boxes are stuffed full of ballots that were never cast, and the ballots that were cast are thrown away. In other places in Congressional districts military companies are organized and armed by the State to ride through the districts at night, and to fire cannon morning and evening, as a Democratic witness called for a contestant said, "in order to let the darkeys know that there was going to be an honest election." The night before election these military companies organized and armed by the State ride through the towns shooting into the cabins of colored men to notify them to come out and vote on the next day; and if they do not quite succeed, if in spite of shooting off cannon, in spite of firing into the cabins, the black men are at the polls, these same military companies engage in target practice on the next day with the polling place as a target.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman tell where that was?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, sir; I will tell you where all of these things took place. In the State of Mississippi and in three districts thereof.

Mr. OATES. Which three?

Mr. ROWELL. All three of them are contested here. In the State of Arkansas armed bodies of men seized upon a ballot-box, and five homicides have occurred since that time over that ballot-box.

Mr. PEEL. Will the gentleman state whereabouts in Arkansas that occurred at a Federal election?

Mr. ROWELL. That occurred in the Breckinridge district, in a Federal election.

Mr. PEEL. I challenge the gentleman to show the proof of that.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The statement of the gentleman is not true as to a single murder, and it can not be substantiated by any facts.

Mr. ROWELL. I undertake to say that it is proven beyond controversy that that ballot-box was carried away by armed bodies of men and five men are dead since then on account of that ballot-box.

In one county in the State of Florida an armed body of men went from poll to poll and seized every ballot-box they could reach, when the Republicans were in a majority before the count was made, and then went to a store where another one was locked up, broke into the store and with Winchester rifles in their hands took the ballot-box out of the hands of a Democratic precinct officer and destroyed it.

These are some of the methods by which the black vote of the South has been suppressed. These are some of the reasons which cry aloud for Federal supervision of elections. Seventeen contests have come before this House, sixteen of them from other than Northern States. One other was started and the contestant lost his life while taking testimony. Four others from the South started and were abandoned.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. A good many others might be abandoned with profit.

Mr. ROWELL. Oh, yes. You would not hesitate to abandon a contest under a suggestion that perhaps "it would have a good effect if some of the witnesses and lawyers disappeared." I think I would abandon a contest myself under such circumstances.

Mr. PEEL. If the gentleman will permit me, I want to make a correction. I believe I stated that my colleague, Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, had not been in Arkansas as long as I had been. I believe I stated also that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] could not produce any proofs that armed men were around the polls in Arkansas at an election. I take that back. During Powell Clayton's reign we had plenty of that. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. ROWELL. Well, we ought to have had a Federal election law then to put an end to it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PEEL. But since Powell Clayton and his party were repudiated by the people of Arkansas we have had a better time.

Mr. ROWELL. Yes; and Powell Clayton's brother, who ventured to run for Congress under a Democratic Administration, can not speak in his own defense on the floor of this House.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Right there I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois, does he mean to charge that against the Democratic party?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. ROWELL. I must decline to yield.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois declines to yield.

Mr. ROWELL. The gentleman has a seat on the floor of this House—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Yes, I have a seat here; and as long as I have a seat here I will stand up for the honor of the constituency I represent.

Mr. ROWELL. And the man who contested that seat has no representative on the floor of the House to speak for him.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I do not hear what the gentleman says, but I wish that if he has any charge to make against the Democracy of that community he would make it openly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PETERS). The gentleman from Arkansas will bear in mind that the gentleman from Illinois declines to yield, and the Chair must enforce his right to the floor.

Mr. ROWELL. I can not stop to read the evidence. It covers thousands of printed pages. It was taken, as other evidence is taken, in the manner provided by law and in cases where the litigants were each contending for seats in this House. In many of these cases reports have been made and are in the possession of members. In others the reports have not yet been prepared.

And I affirm, with a full knowledge of what these records contain, that all the frauds I have mentioned, and many others equally flagrant, have been committed; that in ten of the districts where contests are or were pending these frauds were the rule in large sections of the district; that they were connived at by the best people of the districts in all matters except those pertaining to elections; that they were upheld by public sentiment, and that even the strong arm of Federal power has been unable to reach and punish the men who were guilty of these crimes, and all attempts to bring ballot-box-stuffers and ballot-box-robbers to punishment are held to be mere grievances by the people among whom these crimes are committed.

Counties have come almost to open revolt because the Federal courts have sought to bring to punishment the men who went in armed bands and seized the ballot-boxes upon whose contents depended the right to a seat here. With these facts before us, facts which none but the ignorant dispute, gentlemen on the other side answer me that there are no election frauds, and cry aloud for facts.

The whole Democratic party in the House, with one voice, cry out oppression, persecution, and that we are reopening a race conflict because we protest against these crimes and seek to provide against their recurrence.

There can be no oppression if these things have no existence. There can be no change of representation from these States if all are now accorded the right to vote and if that vote is honestly counted. The hand of the law rests heavily only on the law-breaker. Why all this outcry if there is nothing in these charges? Outcry against what? Against a bill which seeks to extend to all supervisors of election the powers and duties now and for eighteen years past belonging to election supervisors in cities of 20,000 inhabitants, and which more clearly defines the manner of performing those duties.

When a political party takes to itself the absolute control of election machinery and excludes its political adversaries from all participation in the conduct of elections and from all opportunity to witness what is being done and how the vote is counted, as is done in most of the Southern States, it does not come with a very good grace from such a party to object to the presence of men not in party affiliation with them as witnesses, and at the same time proclaim the purity of such elections.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is supervision. [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side.] That seems to be a matter which excites the risibilities of the gentlemen on the other side of the House. Honest men do not object to having the light shine in upon their acts. This bill, if enacted into law, provides that there shall be Federal officers present during every process of registration by the State officers, so that they may know every fact about that registration which the State officers know; and that is the extent of their power in connection with registration. Is there any need of it? In the State of Virginia, in the State of South Carolina, in the State of Florida, the Republican who wants to register must go day after day, and week after week, and finally perhaps have the doors closed against him and fail to get his name on the list. If a "John Smith" anywhere in the State is convicted of felony, John Smith's name goes to every register in every precinct of the State, and, although there may be five hundred of them, five hundred "John Smiths" are marked "convict," and five hundred voters are excluded from the privilege of the ballot. Is there need for supervision of that kind of registration? And, if men desire to be honest, is there any possible objection to the kind of supervision here proposed?

But it is said that the supervisors are to be appointed by a chief supervisor who is himself appointed by the United States circuit court. It is true that in all of the Southern States I have mentioned there is no representative upon election boards for the opposition party. No matter what the law of the State, the Democracy stands guard at the polls and Republicans are excluded; Democratic State officers at the top choose officers down in the counties; the county officers select Democrats, for the governor of South Carolina, boasting that they had the freest and fairest election held in any State of the Union, declined to give a single representative to the Republican party at the election.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will my colleague allow a question?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is not that the case in your own district?

Mr. ROWELL. It is not the case in my own district, and never has been.

Mr. SPRINGER. Do not the precincts elect their own judges of election?

Mr. ROWELL. They do not.

Mr. SPRINGER. And do not the county officers, who are all Republicans, canvass those votes?

Mr. ROWELL. I am not talking about canvassing the votes.

Mr. SPRINGER. Were they not all Republicans who canvassed the votes that gave you your certificate of election?

Mr. ROWELL. There is no precinct in my district where the officers, both judges and clerks, are not divided between the parties.

Mr. SPRINGER. How is that done?

Mr. ROWELL. It is done by the appointment of the township and county officers; and the canvass is made by the county officers calling in justices of the peace outside to help do the canvassing.

Mr. SPRINGER. Are they all Republicans?

Mr. ROWELL. If there are any Democratic justices of the peace, the justices called in are Democrats and Republicans; if there are no Democrats holding the position, no Democratic officer can be called in, but every Democratic candidate is permitted to be present to see the count made.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is under the law of the State.

Mr. ROWELL. That is not only under the law, but without any law. There is no occasion, let me tell my colleague, for anybody to commit crime in connection with elections either in his district or mine; and if he is caught in it, there is not any occasion for a United States law to punish him, because there is a public sentiment in favor of honest elections.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the use of this law, then, so far as our State is concerned?

Mr. ROWELL. This law is designed to cover districts North or South where there is a different public sentiment; that is the use of it.

Mr. ENLOE. Has the gentleman found any place in the North where he intends to apply this law?

Mr. ROWELL. There are plenty of places in the North where it ought to apply.

Mr. ENLOE. I have not heard the gentleman indicate them; he has not talked about them in his speech.

Mr. ROWELL. I could point out many of them.

Mr. ENLOE. Just give us a sample.

Mr. ROWELL. And there are plenty of places, I have no doubt, in the South where such provisions are not needed. Where the whites largely preponderate, where there is no spirit of hostility to the colored man, I take it that there are honest elections. But because the Southern people believe that their once slaves are incompetent for any other position than that of menials—because those colored men instinctively know this fact—because of the feeling among the whites—there is a determination that the black vote shall not be cast, or if cast shall not be honestly counted. And the statement of the gentleman from South Carolina in that eloquent conclusion of his speech ought to close the mouth of any man who denies the truth of what I affirm on this point.

But, Mr. Speaker, my friend from South Carolina was in error when he said that under this bill one hundred supervisors could be sent into any district. Only three can be sent into any district—the same number that ordinarily preside at an election.

Mr. SPRINGER. Pardon me; I understood the gentleman from South Carolina to say deputy marshals, not supervisors.

Mr. ROWELL. There is not any provision for deputy marshals except the provision in the old law for cities of 20,000 inhabitants and upwards. There is no provision for such officers in the country districts.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is a provision, as I understand the bill, for as many special deputy marshals as the supervisor may desire to appoint in every place where there is to be Federal supervision.

Mr. ROWELL. There is no provision for the appointment of deputy marshals anywhere except in cities of 20,000 inhabitants; there is no such provision for the country districts—none at all.

I was surprised when the gentleman from South Carolina talked about sending ballots up to Washington. He certainly has not read the bill. There is no such provision in it. There is a provision for a return to a chief supervisor where a whole Congressional district is supervised. There is a provision for a canvass by a United States canvassing board. There is a provision for the attaching of a sample ticket to the returns. But the tickets are to be counted by the United States officers according to the State law; and if the State law describes a particular ticket, and any other ticket is in the ballot-box, the United States supervisor is prohibited from counting that ticket. He is subordinate to the State law.

Mr. HERBERT. Will the gentleman allow me to correct a statement he has just made?

Mr. ROWELL. I hope I shall not be interrupted.

Mr. HERBERT. I want to show that the gentleman is mistaken as to the number of deputy marshals that may be appointed.

Mr. ROWELL. No; I am not mistaken about the number.

Mr. HERBERT. Let me read the bill.

Mr. ROWELL. No; I shall not stop to allow you to read the bill. I think I know what the bill contains.

Mr. HERBERT. Well, you do not.

Mr. ROWELL. If there is any clause in it that I have not gone over and did not help prepare, I do not know it.

Mr. CRISP. How about the clause which the caucus approved and which you afterwards struck out, providing for a test oath?

Mr. ROWELL. My friend may want to talk about that, but that is not here, not in this bill.

Mr. CRISP. But how about it? You said you went over the bill. The caucus approved the bill with that clause in it providing for a test oath.

Mr. ROWELL. Was the gentleman in the caucus?

Mr. CRISP. The papers stated that the caucus approved the bill as Mr. LODGE introduced it.

Mr. ROWELL. I recollect the gentleman referred to the newspapers once before when he knew the newspaper statement was not true.

Mr. CRISP. Do you deny it?

Mr. ROWELL. I would do anything for the gentleman—as much as for any man on the floor of this House—

Mr. CRISP. You must admit that it was in the bill and you did not know it.

Mr. ROWELL. I did not prepare the section of the bill to which the gentleman refers, but I did the one which is in this bill. The bill to which the gentleman refers is not before the House.

Mr. MAISH. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. ROWELL. No, I must hasten on. I am getting out of the line of my argument.

Mr. HERBERT. Let me read section 20 of this bill.

Mr. ROWELL. No, I decline to yield. Now, will that be sufficient?

Mr. MAISH. The gentleman, having had his time extended by the courtesy of the House, ought to be willing to yield.

Mr. ROWELL. I yielded half of my hour for questions from the other side before I obtained the courtesy to which the gentleman refers; and the time I am now occupying comes out of the time of this side of the House.

Now, there can be no supervisor appointed who lives outside of the district. The gentleman wondered why there was a provision incorporated in the bill to have the supervisor hold his office two months after the election. If he will go up into the State of New York he will find that the precinct inspector holds his office for a year. The reason for holding it two months is in order that they may still hold official position until they can be compelled to appear and be examined in regard to any uncertain return they have made.

My friend from South Carolina deemed that it was for the purpose of escaping State prosecution. Does he suppose that any State court has any jurisdiction over the acts of a Federal official done in the line of his duties as a Federal official? And such, Mr. Speaker, is the line of all the criticisms that he made upon the peculiarities of this bill.

Now I want to add but a word. There are penal clauses in this bill which apply to every election, whether supervised or not, if the election is for a Representative in Congress. It provides a penitentiary offense for any one who shall buy or offer to buy a vote; for one who shall sell or offer to sell a vote; for one who shall stuff a ballot-box, shall make a fraudulent return, shall commit perjury with reference to the election, shall fail to discharge his duty as a supervisor, or shall fail to discharge his duty as a State officer acting at an election where a member of Congress is to be elected. No man can commit a crime against the integrity of an election without subjecting himself to a penalty.

I hope, my friends upon the other side of the House, you do not desire that men shall escape that punishment who commit crimes against the purity of the ballot-box. They are provided for here. These provisions govern every election district in the United States, whether supervision is had or not, and where supervision is had it is for the purpose of knowing the facts, and therefore of being able to prove the guilt of the man who has committed the crime. It is a proposition for supervision. It is a proposition that at all places where supervision is desired there may be Federal officers looking on at the acts of the State officers. If those State officers desire to do their duty they will realize that there are other and watchful interests present to prove the fact. But if they do not desire to do their duty, if they intend to falsify the returns, if they intend to count men in as elected who were not, they will oppose the presence of watchfulness of both political parties to see whether they do their duty or not.

In only two instances is there anything outside of the present law. One is where the State officers, or the people in their sovereign capacity, fail to hold an election, as is very often the case in some of the large black districts of the South, then the Federal officials shall supervise and conduct that election, and make return both to the State and Federal canvassing officers; and it provides that such election shall be valid the same as if it had been held by the State authorities. In another instance there is a change, and it is where the certificate of the canvassing board shows that one man is elected, and where the certificate of the State officers shows that another man is elected. Then the authority of the United States which certifies shall be superior upon the question of who shall take his seat and participate in the organization of this House to the certification of the State officer. In all other respects it is supervising pure and simple, and penal clauses appended for violation of either the Federal or State law.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I have detained the House very much longer than I intended, because the line of my thought has been broken up by a great many questions and interruptions. I have only to say that fraud permeates many districts in the United States. In many districts it is connived at by the people who otherwise are the best people. It is the duty of this House to say to them that no part of the Constitution of the United States shall become a dead letter, and unless we propose to allow the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution to be nullified and abrogated, unless we propose to lie down supinely and see 6,000,000 of people absolutely disfranchised and made subject to the law which they had no hand in framing, then we must enact some provision to correct the evils which confessedly exist. I approve of this proposed law. My judgment goes with it, and I am willing to stake my reputation in the future upon this bill if it is once enacted into the law of the land. I shall regard no act of my life, Mr. Speaker, with more approval than the act which gives consent to the passage of this bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, before proceeding I desire to yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH].

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I consider it due to my constituents that I should make a brief statement of the reasons why I do not favor the proposed legislation. I frankly admit that the state of affairs as they exist in certain parts of this country, judging from the testimony taken before the Committee on Elections in contested-election cases, would seem to justify the passage of such a measure, and I would not hesitate to vote for it if I was convinced that it would bring about the desired result, namely, a fair election and an honest count of the votes cast.

I have no doubt that frauds are perpetrated to a certain extent both in the North and in the South. It would, however, be wiser in my opinion to let the people of the different States regulate their own elections. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Time, education of the masses, and advancement of the moral sentiments of the communities will bring about the same result, and when obtained the relief will be permanent.

The law is not general and it does not provide the same system for conducting Congressional elections in every Congressional district of the United States. The application of fifty to one hundred persons claiming to be citizens of the United States and residents and qualified voters of the district for which they make application may force upon the people of that district this supervision of election which may be obnoxious to them. While I have no doubt that Congress has the power to regulate the national elections if it sees fit, under the Constitution, I question the right to enact a law which shall be made applicable in some districts and ignored in others. If a law is enacted at all for the purpose of regulating elections let it be so framed that it will apply uniformly throughout all parts of the country and not depend upon the petition of any number of citizens.

I believe that many would seriously object to the provision of the bill which would give one man, the chief supervisor, the power to direct a house-to-house canvass and to subject them to the annoyance of what they would consider a political inquisition. We must remember that while the people who are strong party adherents might not object to it, the large class of independent voters might consider that it was merely a canvass made officially by the party in power to further the interests of that party. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

United States marshals and supervisors have often caused trouble at election places. They have assumed authority and frequently have prevented or sought to prevent legalized voters who belonged to the opposite political party of which they themselves were members from casting their ballots. I have great faith in the people of the United States. I believe that self-government is not a failure. I believe that where frauds have been committed in election matters public opinion will finally compel the conviction and punishment of the law-breakers.

Take the recent election frauds committed in my own State, in the district represented by my colleague [Mr. MCADOO]. I doubt very much whether a case could be cited from any part of this country which would equal the fraudulent acts perpetrated there. These were condemned by the respectable Democrats of Hudson County whose party was benefited by their commission, and the parties accused were indicted by a grand jury composed mostly of Democrats and are now being tried before a Democratic judge and a Democratic prosecutor. I have no doubt that Jersey justice will prevail, and that if those prosecuted are truly shown by the evidence to have been implicated in the frauds they will be convicted by a jury composed, very probably, largely of Democrats and will receive the full penalty of the law.

That is what public sentiment has done, and will do, to correct election abuses.

I think the law as proposed will tend to bring about a conflict of authority between election officers elected directly by the people and the supervisors appointed. This, I think, would develop a deplorable state of affairs in some sections of the country.

When frauds in election matters become open and notorious and are sanctioned by the community in which they are committed, it shows that the moral sense of that community is in a most wretched condition. Every imaginable law can be enacted, but no matter how stringent it will have no effect on these people. A preponderance of public sentiment against these frauds must be created before a fitting law can be enforced. When this public sentiment has once been created legislation is unnecessary. The people will take care of the matter.

In these times many are apt to come to Congress and to the legislative bodies of the States to ask for the passage of laws to correct evils, or supposed evils. In many of these cases, and I believe in all, legislation is unnecessary, and not only would not bring about the results desired, but would retard any advance in reform—matters that can be regulated only when the people become better enlightened by education and when a public sentiment has been created in favor of the good.

I consider it unwise to enact this law.

I believe its results will not be beneficial to the people of the country, and, speaking as a Republican, not beneficial to the Republican party.

I shall, therefore, vote against it. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KENNEDY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 518) to extend the limit for the erection of a public building at Springfield, Mo.;

A bill (H. R. 887) authorizing the erection of a hotel upon the Government reservation at Fort Monroe; and

A bill (H. R. 7160) making an appropriation for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes.

FEDERAL ELECTION LAW.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I very much regret that my own physical condition is such that I feel I can not do justice to the great subject which is now under consideration; for I come to the discussion of this bill with a profound sense of the responsibility resting upon me and upon the representatives of the people here assembled.

We are here, sir, at the close of one hundred years of the nation's life. We have passed through wars and rumors of wars, and this great country has survived them, with the States of the Union in charge of the election machinery of the country. If I were standing as a lawyer in court called upon to plead to this as a bill in equity—though I can not agree to that term, for I think it is neither legal nor equitable—if I were called upon to enter a plea to it, I should demur not only to the bill in general, but I should demur to it specially, not only to the general principles that are involved in it, but to many individual provisions of it. I would say that it must go out of court, because it is against the Constitution of the land. Gentlemen upon the other side have said, and the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] has said in advance, that any discussion of the constitutionality of the measure is a loss of time. Though I incur the criticism of the gentleman for so doing, yet I must beg leave to occupy a short period of my time in discussing that phase of the bill.

This is a Government of limited powers. There is no power which we have here except that which the Constitution gives us; and, unless the Constitution of the land shows, not doubtfully, but clearly, that this bill comes within it, it is the sworn duty of every member of this House to vote against it.

Mr. Speaker, I beg to consider, first, one or two sections that to my mind, beyond all controversy, are open to the constitutional objection. We find in the first place that the supervisors that are to be appointed are to supervise the registration of voters, and not only to supervise the registration of voters, but actually to pass upon the qualifications of voters. And I want gentlemen to follow me. I refer you to clauses 7 and 11 of section 8 of this bill, wherein it is not only provided that these supervisors shall supervise and scrutinize the registration, but actually pass upon the right of a man to vote. If I am mistaken, will gentlemen upon the other side correct me? I say that the power to pass upon the qualifications of a voter to vote is a power that the Constitution gives to the States that can not be wrested from them. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Why, what is it? The second section of the first article says:

The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature.

And yet it is proposed that that power which is inherent in the States shall be taken from them and given for its determination into the hands of the Federal officer appointed under this bill. Read the bill. I refer you to the section to show that this officer under this bill will have the power to pass upon the qualifications of the voter, to say whether or not he can vote. Not only so, but, as elections are held in many States for State officers and Presidential electors at the same time as for members of Congress, this bill seeks to do by indirection what it is confessed it can not do under the Constitution directly, namely, to put all elections, State and Federal, under the control of Federal supervisors and deputy marshals. The power to challenge the voter and count his vote under such circumstances, when Federal and State elections are held together, puts the election of State officers in the hands of Federal officials. The power to supervise carries with it, by necessary implication, the power to compel the doing or prevent the doing of something which is the subject of the supervision, and if the Federal Government has no power over the right of suffrage in the States how can it give or take away the right to vote by supervision of registration, which is a necessary requirement for suffrage in many of the States.

Not only does it do that, but it does another thing. It gives the power to the supervisor to go to the State officers who are the registrars and interfere with the registration books and to affix his signature to each and every page of the original registration book and copy when any name is received or stricken from the book.

To every copy of the book which is made the supervisor has the power to put his name. More than that, the power is given him of directing—mark the word—directing the officer of the State to do certain things upon his own books, when he has taken an oath to discharge his duty as registrar to his State and to his State alone. Now, I say that there is nothing clearer to my mind than this, that wherever a bill impinges upon the right of a State to control her own affairs as secured to her in the Constitution there we must stop. The history of the Constitution and the instrument itself show that the intent of the framers was that Federal and State powers should be separate and distinct, the Federal Government to be supreme in its powers as defined and limited in the Constitution, and outside or beyond them powerless to change, influence, or control all other governmental powers, which were expressly "reserved to the States respectively, or to the people." (Article X, Constitution of the United States.)

Not only does it do that, but it violates that right in regard to the qualification of a voter which is allowed to each State in providing an educational qualification for the voter. It is not doubted that the States have the right, if they see fit, to require an educational qualification. No man doubts that, and yet look at clause 13 of section 8, where the supervisor is required to go with the voter, point out the box, and tell him where he must put his vote. The constitution of a State may say: "We will have an educational qualification so that those who can not read or write and who have not intelligence to vote shall not vote." This bill says: "Away with your qualification, away with the constitutions of your States; we are over and above you all, and we will compel the Federal officer to go into your States and override your constitutions and go with the illiterate voter, the man that the State has a right to exclude under the Constitution of the United States, and make him vote as we dictate." Gentlemen, these three provisions are sufficient to condemn this bill. They are the special demurrers that I would enter to the bill, and they show that it is not good in law because it is against the Constitution, and it is against the Constitution because it is uprooting a clear provision in the Constitution.

Now, I demur generally to it as being unconstitutional. And I say boldly, in spite of the intimation of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL], who says that time is wasted in any discussion of the constitutionality of this measure (for I have observed a tendency since I have been a member of this House on the part of some gentlemen to sneer at the man who may by chance refer to the Constitution of the country as the guide of his action), that it never was intended that Congress, under a bill like this, should take charge of the elections of the country.

There are three provisions of the Constitution which must be construed together, in my judgment. The first is Article I, section 2, that "the House of Representatives shall be composed of members, chosen every second year by the people of the several States." Suppose there was no other clause in the Constitution but that in regard to elections, would any gentleman doubt that the States would have under that direct power an implied power to provide the machinery to elect them? There can be no doubt of that. But it is manifestly unjust to construe one clause of an instrument by itself; they must all go together; and therefore I read the fourth section of the first article, which provides:

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof.

Suppose it stopped there? There would be no doubt that under this section and the second section of the first article the power would be vested in the States alone, but the Constitution-makers in their wisdom saw fit to add this clause:

But the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

But there is another clause, and that is the eighteenth clause of the same article, which provides that the Congress shall have power "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers." Take all three clauses together and construe them as fair-minded, honest men. What do they mean? Why, they evidently mean that in the first place the Constitution-makers saw proper to leave to the people of the States the control of the elections in the States. But they say—

But the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, etc.

What does that mean? Does it mean to give power to the States in the first part of the section and take it away in the second without rhyme or without reason? Does it mean to play with the States as we used to do when children, "Indian gift"—give with one hand and take away with the other? Was there to be no limitation upon Congress in this respect? Was there to be no condition upon which Congress was to take this power so clearly given to the States?

The Constitution is silent about it. There is nothing there except the clauses which I have given to throw light upon it; but there are reasons for it given by the men who made the Constitution and penned these words that must rightfully be construed as a part of the words themselves, and which clearly elucidate and explain the sections—for I take it, gentlemen, that the reasons which produced the formation of words are as much a part of the words themselves as if they were written.

Before considering the reasons and opinions of those who made the Constitution and those of the different State conventions that ratified it subsequently (and in which State conventions were many members who had been members of the Federal convention that framed the Constitution), let us consider for a moment this fourth section of Article I in itself.

We notice, first, that "the times, places, and manner of holding elections," etc., is primarily confided to the Legislature of each State; secondarily, it is given to the Congress.

The language itself and the arrangement of the two clauses show this:

The times, places, and manner, etc., shall be prescribed by the Legislature of each State.

But the Congress may, by law, at any time make or alter, etc.

The first is original and primary, the second is permissive and contingent. The Legislatures and Congress can not both have original and primary power to act on the same subject at the same time. Such a conflict would never have been sanctioned. Nor can we believe that the men who draughted this section intended to distinguish it from every other in the Constitution in granting to two distinct and separate authorities co-equal power over the same subject at the same time. Nor can we conceive a greater absurdity than the grant of plenary power to the Legislatures of the States in the first clause of the section, only to be abrogated and annulled in the second clause of the same section without cause.

We can not believe that the intelligence which framed that great instrument, careful in avoiding any conflicts that would probably arise between the State and Federal authorities (for that hour was resonant with jealousies of power), deliberately placed this power into two distinct hands to be exercised, it may be, at the same time and in different ways; and it is equally improbable that the power given the Legislatures of the States, as the authority best suited in the minds of the makers of the Constitution, to provide "the times, manner, and places of holding," etc., was intended without reason or cause to be taken from them and arbitrarily assumed by Congress; and that, too, when there had been no failure on the part of the States to provide the necessary machinery and no impropriety in the machinery provided.

We conclude, therefore, that the obvious and plain meaning of the section under discussion is that the Legislature of each State should have the primary authority to prescribe "the times, places, and manner of holding elections, etc.," and that Congress should have such power ultimately.

When shall Congress exercise this control? For what cause shall it assume the power and the States abdicate their control of elections which they have exercised without interruption for one hundred years? These sections and the Constitution are silent upon this subject; but the history of the adoption of the Constitution and the contemporaneous evidence of those who made it supply the answers.

Of the original thirteen States that framed the Constitution seven were outspoken on the subject, while in some of the others there was likewise a strong sentiment against the adoption of the Constitution containing this and other sections.

The language of some of them is most striking and instructive. On the 6th of February, 1788, Massachusetts, through her State convention, presided over by the great Revolutionary patriot, John Hancock, ratified the Constitution. In the report of ratification, after expressing the opinion that certain amendments should be made to "remove the fears and quiet the apprehension of many of the good people of this Commonwealth, and more effectually guard against an undue administration of the Federal Government," the following alteration of and provision to the Constitution is suggested:

That Congress do not exercise the powers vested in them by the fourth section of the first article, but in cases when a State shall neglect or refuse to make the regulations therein mentioned, or shall make regulations subversive of the rights of the people to a free and equal representation in Congress, agreeably to the Constitution.

Not satisfied with the mere suggestion of such amendment and with a prophetic fear that, if such suggestions were not adopted by the first Congress to assemble under the Constitution, some erring son of this ancient Commonwealth might some day waver in his support of those principles in the Halls of Congress, the convention added this strong language:

And the convention do, in the name and in behalf of the people of this Commonwealth, enjoin it upon their Representatives in Congress at all times, until the alterations and provisions aforesaid have been considered agreeably to the fifth article of the said Constitution, to exert all their influence and use all reasonable and legal methods to obtain a ratification of said alterations and provisions, in such manner as is provided in the said article.

South Carolina ratified on the 23d of May, 1788, with the following recommendation:

And whereas it is essential to the preservation of the rights reserved to the several States and the freedom of the people under the operations of a General Government that the right of prescribing the manner, time, and places of holding the elections to the Federal Legislature should be forever inseparably annexed to the sovereignty of the several States: This convention doth declare that the same ought to remain to all posterity a perpetual and fundamental right in the local, exclusive of the interference of the General Government, except in cases where the Legislatures of the States shall refuse or neglect to perform and fulfill the same according to the tenor of the said Constitution.

New Hampshire ratified June 21, 1788, and made a recommendation in the same language used by the State of Massachusetts.

Virginia, on the 26th of June, 1788, ratified with a recommendation in the following words:

That Congress shall not alter, modify, or interfere in the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives, or either of them, except when the Legislature of any State shall neglect, refuse, or be disabled by invasion or rebellion to prescribe the same.

August 1, 1788, North Carolina ratified, having held out against ratification on account of this and other objectionable clauses. The convention recommended an amendment in the same language as did the State of Virginia.

New York ratified July 26, 1788, and the recommendations of its convention are in some respects the strongest of any on this subject. Before the formal statement of ratification, a declaration of rights is set forth in which, among other provisions, we find—

That nothing contained in the said Constitution is to be construed to prevent the Legislature of any State from passing laws at its discretion, from time to time, to divide such State into convenient districts and to apportion its Representatives to and amongst such districts.

Under these impressions and declaring that the rights aforesaid can not be abridged or violated and that the explanations aforesaid are consistent with the said Constitution, and in confidence that the amendments which shall have been proposed to the said Constitution will receive an early and mature consideration, we, the said delegates, * * * do, by these presents, assent to and ratify the said Constitution.

In full confidence, nevertheless, that until a convention shall be called and convened for proposing amendments to the constitution * * * the Congress will not make or alter any regulations in this State respecting the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators or Representatives unless the Legislature of this State shall neglect or refuse to make laws or regulations for the purpose, or from any circumstance be incapable of making the same; and that in those cases such power will duly be exercised until the Legislature of this State shall make provision in the premises.

And in accordance with this declaration the convention suggested an amendment to Congress embodying the above idea.

Rhode Island did not ratify until June 26, 1790, and the language of her convention on the subject and the amendments suggested were in almost the identical words of those of the State of New York, only stronger. The above extracts have been made that it might be seen how strong was the feeling on this subject at the time of the ratification of the Constitution, and that the Constitution itself was only finally adopted in the faith and belief of a majority of the States that Congress would never exercise this power except when the States had failed to do so or from any cause could not do so.

Not alone did the States above enumerated speak out with no uncertain sound, but, in the debates in the Pennsylvania convention to ratify the Constitution James Wilson, a member of the Federal convention that framed the Constitution and a member of the State convention, explained this provision to mean in effect that the States were primarily to act, and Congress only in case of their failure to do so; and the convention recommended an amendment in the following words:

That Congress shall not have power to make or alter regulations concerning the time, place, and manner of electing Senators and Representatives, except in the case of neglect or refusal by the State to make regulations for the purpose; and then only for such time as such neglect or refusal shall continue.

We conclude, therefore, that Congress has the power to "prescribe the times, places, and manner of holding elections" for members of Congress, but that such power is contingent and conditional only, not original and primary.

Under what conditions or upon what contingency?

If we accept the evidence of the States in their State conventions ratifying the Constitution, and that of the men who made the Constitution, the conditions are—

First. Where the States refuse to provide the necessary machinery for elections; and Second. Where they are unable to do so for any cause, rebellion, etc. Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. TUCKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Does not that destroy the force of your theory as to the word "alter" in there?

Mr. TUCKER. Not at all. Not a bit of it. On the contrary.

Congress shall have the power not only to make, but alter. Mark you, Congress must alter and not make the States alter. Congress must make, and not allow the States to go on and make and then say the State law is my law. It must alter it itself, and not mix up a kind of Brunswick stew, as it were, of the duties of State officers and Federal officers in the enforcement of a State law; the regulation must be clear, precise, and concise.

The Federal regulations must be clearly Federal, independent of and apart from the State regulation; and the State regulations must be distinct from the Federal machinery, so that there can be no danger of a collision of authority; so that when the State regulation is altered by Congress it is no longer a State regulation in its changed condition; it at once puts on the Federal character, is a Federal enactment, for the enforcement of which the Federal Government and its agents is alone responsible. Is any other theory consistent with the independence of the State and Federal systems?

And now, if gentlemen will pardon the historical narrative, in 1789, when the First Congress convened, there was a resolution offered for an amendment to the Constitution to be submitted to the States, striking out the latter part of that clause: "But the Congress may have power at any time to make or alter," etc. The proposition was debated for some time, but it was finally defeated by a vote of 23 to 28, and the provision was permitted to stand as it was; but if gentlemen will take that discussion and read it as I have done lately they will find that the men who voted against striking that out put on record as their reason that it was a clause that could never be used, and would never be used, except when the States refused to act. In one of the reports presented here (by my friend from Maryland, Mr. McCOMAS, I believe), I find that he says it is a remarkable fact that many of the States proposed an amendment to the Constitution striking out the latter part of the section and Congress declined to change it, and that that fact made the argument the stronger that the people who were in that Congress intended that the power should remain there. That is only partly true; but it remained there, why? Because of the fact that the men who voted to retain it did so under the distinct understanding, as stated by many of them, that this was a power that could never injure the people of the country, because it never was intended to be used except when the States failed to provide the necessary machinery.

When you come down to the act of 1842, which has been referred to, you find that Congress there attempted to take charge of this matter.

In 1842 Congress passed a law directing the States to elect their Representatives by districts rather than by a general ticket system, as some were then doing. The bill was approved June 25, 1842, and President Tyler sent a special message to Congress giving his reasons for approving it. This was so unusual a proceeding that the venerable Mr. Adams, who was then a member of the House, asked "that the message be referred to a select committee with power to send for persons and papers."

The States of Missouri, Georgia, Mississippi, and New Hampshire declined to obey the law and elected their Representatives by the general ticket system, as theretofore. Upon the assembling of the Twenty-eighth Congress the question of the title to their seats was at once raised and able reports were filed by Hon. Stephen A. Douglas for the majority of the committee and Hon. Garrett Davis for the minority. They were elaborately and fully discussed. A separate vote was asked on each member. In the case of Edmund Burke, of New Hampshire (the first vote taken), the yeas were 128 and the nays were 68. While varying slightly in the other cases, the majority was about the same in each case. We find among those voting in the affirmative such names as John P. Hale, Hannibal Hamlin, Preston King, George C. Dromgoole, Edmund W. Hubbard, and Stephen A. Douglas, and others. (See House Journal, first session, Twenty-eighth Congress, pages 380, 381.) So that the power claimed by Congress to command the States to lay off districts for members of Congress was thus emphatically and quickly denied, and, so far as we are informed, it has never been attempted since.

Then you find that in 1870 and in 1872 Congress provided that elections should be by ballot and that the time of holding them was to be uniform throughout the country. Why, gentlemen, I think nothing demonstrates more clearly than these very laws the absolute necessity of leaving to the people of each State the control of its elections and election machinery. Suppose Congress in its wisdom were to pass a law providing that members of Congress should be elected on the 15th of January in each year, would not that operate to disfranchise many States in this Union? How could the people get out on the snow-clad hills of Maine or the blizzard-stricken plains of Minnesota to vote on the 15th of January? Why, it shows more clearly than anything else that the people of each State are better qualified to judge of what is proper in conducting their own elections than anybody else.

Again, take the matter of the ballot. Congress has acted on that, and therefore it is said that it is constitutional, because Congress has acted on it. But it is to be remembered that Congress has passed a great many unconstitutional laws. I know not what others may think, but I believe there is nothing about which the people of the States should be allowed to exercise their own judgment more than that matter of a secret ballot. Personally, I believe in an open ballot, by the man singing out before God and man, in the broad light of day, the name of the man he votes for. You may not so believe. Then you ought not to be compelled to have a visa voce system. I do not like a sneak or a spy that is afraid to open his mouth and tell the people how he is going to vote. Congress, however, has preferred it and enacted it into law, and by that act has done more in my judgment to disorganize and demoralize the public sentiment of the country than it will ever gain by passing such a bill as this.

Let every man judge for himself. Let every man take care of his own household. Let every people determine for itself what is best for itself, and let others do the same for themselves. A man who insists on taking care of other people's business all the time will find that his own will go to ruin. I heard of a man once who made a fortune by attending to his own business, and I will add to avoid mistake that his name was not LODGE or ROWELL. [Laughter.] What we ask for, what the States ask for, is that they may be left to determine for themselves what is best under the Constitution for themselves.

Now, gentlemen, there is another clause of the Constitution to which I have referred that bears very decidedly upon this question. Chief-Justice Chase in the case of Hepburn vs. Griswold, the old legal-tender case which has become so celebrated in the land, was called on to construe that clause in the Constitution which provides that "the Congress shall have power to pass all laws necessary and proper to carry into execution the foregoing powers." And, gentlemen, if you conclude that under the second and fourth sections of the first article of the Constitution Congress has the power at any time to interfere and take the elections into its own hands, you have yet to construe those provisions of the Constitution with the subsequent one which provides that it can only pass laws which are "necessary and proper" to carry into execution the powers granted. Now, what are "necessary and proper" laws to carry into execution the powers granted to Congress over the election of Representatives? Chief-Justice Chase says that the words "necessary and proper" mean "bona fide, appropriate to the end" in view; that they mean absolute good faith, absolutely appropriate means; not for partisan purposes, but in good faith, bona fide. Now, is it "bona fide, appropriate," to the assumption by Congress of the control of elections for Congressmen to appoint supervisors whose duties shall be not to carry on any separate election machinery, but to go on and stick their noses into the election machinery of the States? Is it "bona fide, appropriate," to the purpose of an election law for the election of members of Congress that State officers should be dragged into the Federal courts and punished for a violation of a State law? Or is it "bona fide, appropriate," to this object that each member of this House should be returned, not by the State that sends him here, but by an officer of this Government appointed for life, amenable to no power, and with no penalty attaching to his dereliction of duty? Is it "bona fide, appropriate," to the purpose of passing an election bill that you should put into it a clause providing that the juries of the country shall be of one political faith? Put your hands upon your hearts and let your hearts seek counsel from on high and answer me whether that is "bona fide, appropriate," to the purposes of passing an election law?

But observe this clause again:

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives, etc.

If Congress has the power to pass this bill, it has the power to amend it and make it applicable to the election of Senators. Apply its provisions to the election of Senators, and what would we have? The Legislatures of the States dominated and controlled in the election of Senators by Federal officers. In the State of Virginia, in the election of Senator, "a committee of three members from each house shall compare the votes and ascertain and report the result." But, if this bill be constitutional and applied to the election of Senators, the committee of each house of the Virginia Legislature could not compare the votes without the supervision of the Federal supervisors. They could not ascertain and count the vote, for under this bill that power is given the supervisors. They could not "report the result" to their respective houses, for the supervisors would report the result to a Federal canvassing board.

Members would be challenged in their right to vote, and the right of the people of a county to representation denied by a Federal official. Confusion, chaos, and collision would inevitably result, and the proud position of free and independent States converted into the subserviency of crouching victims to Federal usurpation and power. Does not the analogy show that the makers of the Constitution could never, never have intended any such power to be given to Congress over the States and their elections for Senators and Representatives? It will not do to say such power in the election of Senators will never be invoked. The political exigency that could disperse the Legislature of a State at the point of the bayonet would not be long in finding a pretext for the application of the club and the billet for the enforcement of its wicked designs.

But, gentlemen, we come now to the discussion of some of the provisions of this bill. This bill has a provision which, so long as I am a member of this House, I shall resist with all the power that I have, because I believe it is against the true interests of the American people. It was John Marshall, of Old Virginia (somebody has said she never tires and some wag has added that it is because she never did anything to make her tired [laughter]; but, in spite of that, gentlemen, I love every foot of her sacred soil with all my heart, not only for what she is now doing, but for what she has done in the past. If her history were blotted out to-day from that of the sisterhood of States and the declaration of her great jurist, to which I am about to refer, were alone preserved to let posterity know that she once had existed, Virginia's life would not have been in vain—it was that great jurist, John Marshall, sitting as a member of the greatest convention that ever assembled on this continent, in 1829-'30, as a member of the Virginia convention to revise the constitution of that State, who used these words in speaking of the judiciary:

I have always thought, from my earliest youth till now, that the greatest scourge that an angry Heaven ever inflicted upon an ungrateful and a sinning people was an ignorant, a corrupt, or a dependent judiciary.

Do gentlemen propose by this bill, when the country is full of corruption in high places throughout the land; when it crawls with its slimy trail even into the highest offices of the Government—are gentlemen willing to drag down the last bulwark of American liberty into the slums of partisan politics? Are gentlemen for party purposes willing to forego the preservation in its purity of the chief bulwark of American liberty? I speak, sir, not as a partisan on this subject. Whatever else may be done in this bill, however much some of its features may commend themselves to you, for God's sake strike out that provision that puts it into the hands of the judiciary of the country to run the elections of the country.

One gentleman who preceded me said that it was absolutely essential for the good of the country that the people should have confidence in the purity of the elections. Is it not more essential that the people should have confidence in the judiciary, those who hold the scales of justice, or ought to hold them, impartially between man and man. I agree with honorable gentlemen to this extent at least: that the merest suspicion of fraud attaching to the judiciary is as bad as fraud itself. The judge of the circuit court of the United States appoints the supervisors (section 5); if one of them is to be tried for misconduct, the judge who appointed him tries him; a jury selected by a clerk of the same political faith is impaneled for him. There could be but one result in nine cases out of ten. The conduct of the supervisor is not alone on trial, but the judgment of the judge in selecting him as such supervisor is also on trial, and before whom? Before the judge who selected him.

One other point I desire especially to bring to the attention of the House. So far as I remember—and I am borne out in this statement by gentlemen who have examined the particular section perhaps more closely than I have—there is not only a life tenure for the chief supervisor who conducts these elections, but there is absolutely no penal statute in regard to him. Duty and responsibility should go hand in hand. Here we have a duty imposed, with responsibility to no one for its proper discharge. If I am mistaken on this point no one will more frankly than myself admit it, but I have been unable to find in the bill any penal provision with regard to the chief supervisor.

But I object to another provision here. I object to that provision in this bill which proposes to apply the power of punishment under the penal clauses to State officers. And I beg that you remember that there is one section in this bill providing a punishment for the officers it creates and eight sections providing punishment for State officers whom it has never created. Is that right? Is it in the interest of preventing collisions throughout the country? Beginning at section 42 and going on through the bill, you will find various provisions for punishing the State officers of elections; and then there is one little section providing for the punishment of the supervisors.

And I say further that Congress has no power under the Constitution to punish the officer of the State for the violation of State law.

I am perfectly aware that it has been stated otherwise in certainly a very respectable tribunal; but that decision was only reached by the learned judge, assuming that in the election of members of Congress, the election machinery was operated under State laws, that Congress in effect adopted such laws as its own, not by enactment, but by implication; but, if my view of the Constitution is correct, Congress has power only under condition to make or alter these provisions in regard to elections; and in order to make anybody liable under its law it must be clearly a Federal law, and not a State law converted into Federal law by implication. It can not say to the State, "We will let you go on; we will let you have your judges of election and other officers of election, and we will have ours; we will have supervisors and marshals; when our officers disobey our law we will punish them; when your officers, who have never taken an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, but are sworn to support the State constitution, violate their State laws, we will punish them, too." I say it is not right.

Mr. McCOMAS. Has not the Supreme Court of the United States, in the Siebold case (100 United States Reports), expressly affirmed the position which the gentleman denies? How does he dispose of that very pertinent decision?

Mr. TUCKER. My friend must have been asleep; I am glad I have awakened him up. I have referred to that decision.

Mr. McCOMAS. I have just come in; but I am wide enough awake to remind the gentleman of a decision of the Supreme Court that directly contradicts his position.

Mr. TUCKER. I have referred to that decision and have attempted to state my views in regard to it.

Mr. McCOMAS. I suppose, then, my friend from Virginia overrules the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. TUCKER. I say this, that neither the Supreme Court nor any other court can bind my conscience as a Representative of the people as to the construction of the Constitution.

Mr. McCOMAS. That fully explains the gentleman's position. I beg pardon for asking him the question.

Mr. TUCKER. I say to the gentleman, moreover, that the duty devolves upon us as one of the co-ordinate branches of this Government to construe that instrument in such manner as seems to us right and proper under our oaths. And if I mistake not there is a bill pending in the other end of the Capitol that we are threatened with very soon, known as the Wilson bill, or original-package bill, in which some gentlemen on your side of the Chamber have undertaken to dissent from the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States and undertaken under their oaths here to reverse by legislation the judgment of that high tribunal upon the matter in question. And if that bill contains what I understand it does, as much as I dislike to disagree with that honorable court, I shall vote for the bill when it comes before us.

Now, gentlemen, I disapprove of another provision in this bill: the power vested in the chief supervisor of appointing an unlimited number of deputy marshals. And on this point my friend from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] is mistaken. Under the twentieth section of the bill any number of deputy marshals may be appointed, as shall in the opinion of the chief supervisor be necessary. I am opposed to the provision of the bill as found in the sixth and eleventh clauses of the eighth section, providing for the canvass of cities by supervisors. Gentlemen know what that means. The object is not to canvass to find out whether a man is registered properly. Why should you presume in advance that a man has forsworn himself? Has it come to this, that in this country the presumption of fraud is against every man? That is the provision. You actually presume that the registration is fraudulent and send these people around with Government money in their pockets to investigate that matter. No one can be mistaken as to what this provision means: that the political work of the dominant party is to be done by hirelings paid from the public Treasury.

I object to another provision of the bill, Mr. Speaker. I do not believe in the supervision feature, as a matter of expediency, looking to the true interests of our State and Federal systems. I think the only logical position for Congress to take in regard to the elections of Representatives, if the time ever comes when under the Constitution it can take charge of the elections, is this: Either to give it absolutely into the hands of the States or absolutely into the hands of the Federal Government. Do not have any mixture of the two. It is, and will be, a source of serious trouble, dispute, and clashing of interests, as well as clashing of authority, if Congress assumes control of a part of the machinery and the States take charge of another portion of it. Congress should either take charge of it absolutely and free the States or let it remain absolutely with the States.

One of the least objections to the bill is the probable cost of it. I have been at considerable trouble to ascertain what that would probably be. I have gotten from the secretaries of state of all or most of the States of the Union a statement as to the election precincts in the United States, which I will insert, as follows:

Election precincts in the United States.

Alabama.....	1,098
Arkansas (estimated).....	1,200
California (estimated).....	1,600
Colorado (estimated).....	600
Connecticut.....	251
Delaware.....	66
Florida.....	600
Georgia (estimated).....	1,500
Illinois (estimated).....	3,000
Indiana (estimated).....	1,500
Iowa.....	1,922
Kansas (estimated).....	3,000
Kentucky.....	1,375
Louisiana.....	744
Maine.....	517
Maryland.....	483
Massachusetts.....	715
Michigan.....	1,466
Minnesota (estimated).....	1,800
Mississippi (estimated).....	1,115
Missouri (estimated).....	2,500
Montana (estimated).....	500
Nebraska (estimated).....	500
Nevada (estimated).....	500
New Hampshire.....	288
New Jersey.....	266
New York.....	3,366
North Carolina (estimated).....	1,200
North Dakota (estimated).....	500
Ohio.....	2,449
Oregon.....	908
Pennsylvania.....	4,217
Rhode Island (estimated).....	500
South Carolina (estimated).....	600
South Dakota (estimated).....	800
Tennessee (estimated).....	2,000
Texas.....	3,985
Vermont (estimated).....	500
Virginia (estimated).....	1,800
Washington (estimated).....	600
West Virginia (estimated).....	700
Wisconsin (estimated).....	1,600
Total number.....	54,649

The above figures are obtained (except those estimated) from secretaries of state, and mostly refer to the date of the Presidential election in 1886. For Pennsylvania, however, the figures are from Smull's Hand-Book, containing the election returns for 1889. Of the election districts or precincts for that State 815 were in Philadelphia.

The table does not contain the numbers for the Territories of Arizona, Idaho, New Mexico, Utah, and Wyoming. Of course the number of election precincts have been considerably increased since the election of 1888.

There are 55,000 in round numbers, without regard to the Territories. Under this bill the cost of the canvassing board, the cost of the chief supervisor, the cost of the supervisors themselves in each district, the cost of deputy marshals, allowing an average of three deputy marshals for each precinct and three supervisors for each, and allowing a fair average of the amount that they are to be paid under the law, I find upon an estimate will be $11,732,800.

Cost of Lodge bill.

Cost of canvassing board:
Three canvassers, per diem and expenses, $20 each.....	= $60
Clerk, per diem and expenses.....	= 20
	80
Days allowed (section 15), 15; estimated average used, 5; 5 x $80.....	= 400
Number of States in Union, 42; 42 x $400.....	= 16,800
Seals, stationery, etc. (estimated).....	= 1,000
	17,800
Cost of chief supervisors, by Congressional districts:
Printing, recording, certifying, stationery, advertising, telegrams, etc., for each Congressional district, $5,000; number of Congressional districts, 330; 330 x $5,000.....	= 1,650,000
Cost of supervisors (section 19):
Average number to a precinct, 3; estimated average pay of each, $6; estimated average days of service, 6; number of precincts in United States, 55,000; total cost of supervisors.....	= 5,940,000
Cost of deputy marshals (section 20):
Number of precincts, 55,000; estimated average for each precinct, 3; estimated average days of service, 5; services per diem, $6; total cost of deputy marshals.....	= 4,125,000
Total.....	11,732,800

Mr. O'NEALL, of Indiana. And add a thousand more precincts and their expenses for Indiana.

Mr. TUCKER. Well, I have fifteen hundred for Indiana. This is a conservative estimate, and I am satisfied it is a reasonable estimate. My own judgment is that it will cost not less than twelve millions, and most probably will reach from fifteen to twenty millions.

I come now to discuss another feature of the bill, and it is this: Gentlemen have declared on this floor that this bill was a national bill intended for the whole country. The gentleman who opened this debate, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], launched us upon a smooth sea, and I thought our sailing was to be of the happiest nature; that there were to be no gales encountered in the discussion. But we were soon disabused of that idea when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] took his position. The gentleman from Massachusetts says this is not a sectional, but a national measure. The gentleman from Illinois has confessed practically that it is a sectional bill.

The gentleman from Illinois imagines he is arguing a contested-election case, and goes into all of the murders and crimes in the catalogue and talks about the war and about the beautiful traits of character of the negro. Why, gentlemen of this House, where did the gentleman from Illinois get authority to talk to me and for me about the character of the colored people? Why, in childhood I was rocked upon the bosom of as noble an old colored woman as ever drew the breath of life. Reared from childhood among them, I know them as the gentleman from Illinois can never know them, and that old "mammy," who was loyal and true to me in life and whose memory is as dear to me as one of my own family, will ever awaken in my heart the warmest feelings toward that race to which she belonged and which was faithful in the trying days of the war.

But the gentleman from Illinois has gone back to the war. Some of us in this House have been born since the war began; we have grown up with the new civilization, with new conditions and ideas; and it is a condition that confronts us here, and not a theory. Why, gentlemen, I say to you that the position of the gentleman from Illinois shows that this bill is to be a sectional one, whose operation is to be chiefly against the interests of the Southern people. He says openly that we cheat the negro, that we steal his vote, that we murder him. The gentleman is not at all discriminating in his remarks against us. Very well. Admit it for the sake of the argument. I ask any gentleman who hears me to tell me in all honor and in all candor whether it be worse to steal the vote of a man who does not know how he is voting than to buy the vote before it reaches the ballot-box of a man who could vote intelligently if let alone.

Mr. KELLEY. This law is against both.

Mr. TUCKER. Oh, yes; I am coming to that. The gentleman says it is against both; but, Mr. Speaker, it is mighty little against both. [Laughter.] You have to-day a statute providing against bribery. You have a section in this bill against it with a little addition that the man who is bribed is amenable also to punishment. And let me tell you when the two get together you will have a pretty hard time trying to find out who was the bribed and who was the briber. [Laughter.] I do not justify and can not justify the stealing of a vote or the killing of a man; but I say, for the sake of argument, admit the truth of the gentleman's assertion, what position are you in if reports be true that money has been used all over this country in carrying elections? and you know, as well as we can know any other fact in this life, that it was used for the purpose of corrupting voters by the Republican party in the last Presidential election. I ask you now in all seriousness to answer candidly the question whether or not it is any worse—supposing it to be bad enough to steal ballot-boxes—to steal a ballot than it is to buy a vote before it goes into the box.

You are forced to plead guilty to the charge that votes are bought throughout the North, and seek to avoid its force by charging ballot-box-stuffing on the South. Are you in position, before removing the beam out of your own eye, to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye?

Both are wrong, but when you begin to pose as the immaculate party that can not exist in an atmosphere tainted with immorality of any kind, and would conceal your own crimes by a tirade against the supposed delinquencies of others, I beg to suggest that it would at least be prudent to sweep before your own doors before demanding that filth should be swept from your neighbor's door.

You say you want to uproot both by your bill. When did the desire strike you? Since the indictments against Dudley were dismissed or the fat-frying processes of Foster were exhausted or after the $400,000 gathered together by the industrious hand of the present Postmaster-General had been expended for legitimate campaign purposes? And if, with bribery and corruption all around you, you have failed to enforce the present law against bribery, how can we hope that you will do so now? The bill is sectional. It is aimed at the South. Is there anything anywhere in the bill to show that it is not? Let us see. The honorable gentleman—no, it was the Speaker of this House himself—made a speech not long ago in the city of Pittsburgh, and did he indicate in that speech that this was to be a national-election law or a sectional law?

Always brilliant, in opening he said:

Your toast strikes the only possible note of continued victory for the Republican party. Continued victory we must have. Not as partisans, but as patriots.

[Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Do not laugh.

Not on the past must be our reliance, but on the future. If we are not to-day in the fore-front of human progress, to have been followers of Abraham Lincoln in the years gone by is not an honor, but a burning disgrace. Progress is the essence of republicanism.

And so on.

Continuing, he says:

I have not, for years, been one of those who talked about the South.

But he determined what he was going to do that night.

For the last eight years no one has heard me, in the House or in the campaign, discourse upon either outrages or wrongs, murders or shootings, or hangings. My silence did not arise from any approval of murder. It is known to everybody that the South denies that cheating is part and parcel of their elections. It is equally known to everybody that that denial is not true—

And so forth, the whole speech being an enumeration of Southern outrages, and at its close a remedy is suggested—"to take into Federal hands the Federal elections." The extracts from that speech show that the Speaker of this House, as a leader of his party, was determined if he had the power—and we all know he has the power—to drive this Republican party, by caucus or otherwise, into the adoption of a Southern election law. There is no intimation in the speech that there are frauds in elections in other parts of the country, in the State of Maine, or elsewhere, but only in the South. I find also that he has given his views to the public in an article in the North American Review that I beg leave to refer to very briefly. He puts it in this form:

Suppose it were a fact that negro domination and barbarism would follow from honest voting in the Southern State elections; suppose it were a fact that disregard of law and complete violation of the rights secured to the negro by the Constitution were absolutely necessary to preserve the civilization of the South; what has that to do with Federal elections? Violation of law and disregard of statutes are not needed to save the United States.

And in other places in that article the distinguished gentleman practically admits, as he does there admit, that if the defense which he alleges is made by Southern people, that they defraud the negro for the preservation of their own civilization, were true, that it would be proper and right and admissible. I say he admits practically that, for the preservation of State governments, property, and life, the things that are charged against the people of the South might be proper; yet that when you come to national elections it would not do.

Why, gentlemen, is it possible that the man who poses as the great friend of the negro would admit that it was proper to kill him or cheat him for one purpose, but very wicked, immoral, and improper to do so for another? If all the exaggerated and base stories of murder of the negro in the South were true, the Southern people could find no stronger champion of their position or justification of their action than the Speaker of this House and his views as expressed in this article. The Speaker, in the same article, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL], both assert that the negro population increases the representation from the South, and that by the suppression of the negro vote that increase redounds to the benefit of the Democrats. Admit all they claim to be true, for the sake of the argument, which is not true in fact, and what do we find? That in the States of Connecticut, California, Iowa, Illinois, Michigan, Minnesota, Massachusetts, Nebraska, New York, New Jersey, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, and Wisconsin, in the year 1888, the Republicans cast 3,386,399 votes and the Democrats cast in the same States 3,074,165. The 3,386,399 Republican votes elected 126 Congressmen, or about 26,900 votes per Congressman. The 3,074,165 Democratic votes elected only 47 Congressmen, or 65,406 votes per Congressman.

That is, in the North, where gentlemen claim there is an honest expression of the popular will, it takes only 26,900 votes to elect a Republican, while to elect a Democrat it takes 65,408; and if the will of the people in the North were not stifled and a free expression of the popular will could be had, the Republicans would have only 90 instead of 126 members of the 173 from those States, while the Democrats would have 83 instead of 47 only, and instead of a Republican majority in this House of 9 the Democrats would have a majority of 63 members. No, gentlemen, when you look at this whole question dispassionately you will find a good deal depends on the question of whose ox is gored.

But for your gerrymandering of the States of Connecticut, New York, Rhode Island, and Massachusetts, they would to-day be represented in the Senate by Democrats, and you know it. When the popular will is thus defeated in the North you call it gerrymandering, not fraud; but the people of the country understand it and your sham pretenses of a desire for honest elections.

Now, I say that the South is getting along first rate. We ask you to give us a free chance in the race of life. We know better how to attend to these social questions than you can possibly know, with all your professed patriotism. We know perfectly well that we have a serious problem before us; that we are educating the negro; that we are giving him those rights which make him prosperous and happy; that we are doing for him more than you can do for him and will continue to do it. We ask for our section what patriotic sons of Erin all over the civilized globe demand for their race, "Home rule for Ireland." Our cause is the same.

Now, I ask you where the demand for this bill comes from. Does it come from the negro? Does it come from the Southern Republicans? Where does it come from? The committee to which I have the honor to belong have had some advocates of this subject before it. Who were they? Most of them politicians, and negroes who live by politics, and one poor fellow who has gone crazy since, who is now in the asylum and who was crazy then, and that class of evidence is the basis of this bill. The business people of the country, North and South, do not want it, for they know that it will disorganize business in many portions of the country, endanger capital invested, and bring discontent and strife where now peace and happiness reign.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I ask that the gentleman be given ten minutes more time.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. TUCKER. I am very much obliged to the committee. I shall not impose upon them very long. What does General Longstreet say upon this subject? General Longstreet says, in an interview with the correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat:

The negro is getting along quite well and would do much better if it were not for the politicians. It does not follow that because a man is black he is a Republican.

Here is a life-long Republican speaking.

A negro is like almost any other man. He will vote for the advancement of his own interests. He will vote against a negro who has gone to the front simply as a politician, in favor of a respectable Southern white man any time. He will vote for a Southern white man that he knows against a politician of the North every time. Schools are working out the problem of the colored man in the South. The development of the country is giving him new avenues of employment. What he is gradually getting is better wages, and what he needs is less politics and less meddling from politicians.

Now, gentlemen, that is the expression of a man who has been a Republican ever since the war, living in the State of Georgia, about which so much has been said here to-day.

Hear also what Ex-Governor Chamberlain, of South Carolina, who was the Republican governor of the State up to 1876, says on this subject in an address at the city of Boston, February 8, 1890:

I come from the South to-night. A business errand has again taken me to the State which was my home for twelve years. I have mingled again during the last four months with the people whom I then knew so well. What do I find? I find that since 1876 both races in South Carolina have prospered. I find the prosperity of the negro has advanced pari passu, more than pari passu, with the white man. I find the negro more self-respecting, better provided with schools, far better, acquiring property more rapidly, more industrious, more ambitious for education and property than he ever was before 1876; and I have come here to-night, at not a little inconvenience, to proclaim this in the ear of Boston's philanthropy and Boston's patriotism. [Cheers.] I proclaim it because it is true and because if any man living owes it to himself and to the country to proclaim the truth in this matter, I am that man. [Great applause.]

What, then, is the duty of the North in respect to this problem: what is Boston's and Massachusetts's duty; what is the duty of all patriotic men? I answer with my whole mind and conscience their duty is to let the negro alone. [Tremendous cheering.]

I repeat, we are getting along in the South now first rate. Let me show you what we have done since the war.

In 1860 the total assessed value of property in the United States was $12,000,000,000, and of this the South had $5,200,000,000, or 44 per cent. In 1870 the total assessed value of all property in the country was $14,170,000,000, and of this the South had $3,064,000,000, or 22 per cent. The assessed value of property in the South, as already stated, was $2,100,000,000 less in 1870 than in 1860. That is an enormous loss; but between the years 1880 and 1889 look at the strides we have made. From $2,900,000,000 in 1880 to $4,200,000,000 in 1889; and the census reports will show a vaster increase over that. Where does that come from, gentlemen? A great deal right out of your pockets.

During the very first year of Mr. Cleveland's Administration $13,000,000 of foreign capital came into the State of Virginia. Our people have caught the impetus of the age; the negro laborers are happy and contented; the Northern people are pouring their money down into our mines and our furnaces, and we simply ask that we may be allowed to take care, not only of our own, but what you may send there to be invested for your own good in the safest way for all concerned.

The cities of Philadelphia, Boston, and New York have all contributed of their coffers to the building up of our beautiful valley of Virginia, and some of it has come from the great West, and all that we ask for the old State of Virginia is to be let alone to work out our own "salvation with fear and trembling."

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I will ask the gentleman if Virginia is not nearly a Republican State?

Mr. TUCKER. Not by a large majority; not by 44,000 last year, and "still some precincts to hear from."

Mr. BOWDEN. How many the year before, when we had some Federal supervisors?

Mr. TUCKER. About 1,500.

Mr. BOWDEN. Exactly.

Mr. TUCKER. When you had Federal supervisors, who suppressed the honest vote! [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WADDILL. I would like you to specify a place in Virginia where Federal supervisors ever suppressed a vote.

Mr. TUCKER. Will you sit down? I do not yield to you. [Laughter.]

Mr. WADDILL. I asked you a question, and that is the way you answer.

Mr. TUCKER. Sit down.

Mr. WADDILL. I will sit down when I get ready, and not by your direction.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia will be in order.

Mr. WADDILL. Decency requires that you should not refuse to answer a question in a proper manner.

Mr. STRUBLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order and ask whether a member on this floor has a right to order another member to sit down.

Mr. TUCKER. Will the gentleman from Iowa be kind enough to take his seat? [Laughter.] Mr. Speaker, I did not mean to be discourteous to anybody. I do not want to be offensive to any gentleman.

Mr. WADDILL. Very well. With that explanation I wish to ask the gentleman if he will yield to a question.

Mr. TUCKER. Not now; later.

Now, we find, Mr. Speaker, that during the four years from January 1, 1886, to December 31, 1889, the total number of furnaces, factories, and mills that came to the South was 13,744. I see the honorable gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McKINLEY] smiles approvingly at that. Then, Mr. Speaker, we find from 1878 to 1889 a proportionate increase in all the cereals, the cotton crops, hay, and so on. We find that in the years from 1880 to 1889 the number of cotton mills have increased in the South from 161 to 353; that the number of spindles has increased from 660,000 to 2,000,000. We find that the total amount of coal developed in the South in 1883 was 6,000,000 of tons; that in 1888 there was 19,000,000, and most of the labor in that development was that of the poor negro for whose benefit this bill is to be passed. The cotton crop in 1880 was only a little over 2,000,000 bales, while in 1889-'90 it amounted to over 7,000,000. We find that the cost of making iron in the Southern land and in my own district, where a large number of the laborers are negroes, according to the testimony of Messrs. Carnegie, Hewitt, McClure, Swank, and others, is estimated at anywhere from $8.50 to $10 a ton; and to-day iron is being made in my own district at a cost of not over $10 a ton.

The honorable gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. MOORE] who spoke some days ago on the tariff referred to these facts and appealed to us to stand by a prohibitory-tariff law; it is not wonderful that such development should come to us, because we have advantages in manufacturing over all other sections of this country, and capital is very sensitive to go where that is the case. We find that the total output of pig-iron in the South in 1880 was 397,000 tons and that in 1889 it was 1,500,000 tons. So that, gentlemen, looking not only to the social status of our people, but looking to the prosperity of our country, the preservation of our civilization, and the property of our people and of your people, we appeal to you to keep your hands off. Do not for partisan purposes relegate this Southern country, by the enactment of such a law as this, to the condition of things existing for ten years subsequent to the war. Let me read you a statement of the financial condition of the South at the close of the war, and then when the carpet-bagger had his grip fast upon her body. Here it is:

States.	Debts and liabilities at close of war.	Debts January 1, 1872—after reconstruction.
Alabama.....	$5,339,654.37	$38,381,957.37
Arkansas.....	4,095,962.57	19,761,395.62
Florida.....	221,000.00	15,763,447.64
Georgia.....	Nominal	50,137,500.00
Louisiana.....	10,099,074.34	30,540,306.61
North Carolina.....	2,099,500.00	34,967,467.85
South Carolina.....	5,090,000.00	30,158,914.47
Mississippi.....	Nominal	20,000,000.00
Tennessee.....	20,105,606.66	45,988,263.46
Texas.....	Nominal	30,361,000.00
Virginia.....	31,938,144.80	45,480,642.21

* June 1, 1871.

† January 1, 1871, about.

Does not this statement show, as well as the history of that dark period in our country's history, that bayonets and force applied in the elevation of ignorance over intelligence can only result in financial as well as social ruin to a people? When Federal troops were withdrawn from the Southern States and the manhood of the people reasserted itself, gradually confidence was restored, and values were enhanced, as shown in the annexed tables of the assessed value of the property of the several States in 1880 and 1890:

States.	1880.	1890.	Increase.
Maryland.....	$459,187,406	$477,398,380	$18,210,972
Virginia.....	303,967,613	*344,169,473	40,171,860
North Carolina.....	169,916,907	217,000,000	47,083,093
South Carolina.....	129,551,624	145,280,343	15,728,719
Georgia.....	251,424,661	380,289,314	128,864,653
Florida.....	31,157,846	93,800,000	62,642,154
Alabama.....	139,077,328	212,197,531	73,120,203
Mississippi.....	115,180,691	197,830,481	82,649,790
Louisiana.....	177,066,459	226,392,288	49,325,827
Texas.....	311,470,736	710,000,000	398,529,264
Arkansas.....	91,191,659	165,000,000	73,808,341
Tennessee.....	211,798,438	323,118,636	111,320,198
West Virginia.....	146,391,740	183,013,737	36,621,997
Kentucky.....	375,473,041	551,678,267	176,205,226
Total.....	2,913,436,065	4,230,166,400	1,316,730,335

* 1888.

The census report of 1879-'80 estimated that the assessed value of property in the South was only 41 per cent. of the true value. On this basis the true value of property in the South in 1880 was $7,105,917,300, and the value at present $10,255,083,700, a gain of over $3,000,000,000.

Relying upon the manhood of our people we are fast forging to the front in material progress in many parts of our State, while struggling poverty holds its grip in other sections, but as a whole our advancement has been marvelous. Will you strangle in its cradle this infant Hercules with such a law as this?

In conclusion, let me say, gentlemen, that, while this bill in my opinion is unconstitutional, Congress has no power to pass it; that the provisions of it are hideous, and that they ought not to be entertained by this House or this Congress; that even if it passes it will never accomplish the purpose whereunto it is sent. You may rely upon that. As was said in the discussion here to-day, if there be fraud and corruption in the country the only way to correct them is by an enlightened public sentiment which will frown them down, so that a man who deals in fraud, bribery, or corruption will not be countenanced in the community. [Applause.]

Now, gentlemen, I am through. I thank the House most cordially, and especially my friends upon the other side, who have been kind enough to give me their attention, and I only ask that this House will do so act that will disturb the harmony, that beautiful harmony of the State and the Federal Governments, that beautiful system which when kept in its perfect symmetry is the admiration of the world, but when jostled or gotten out of gear will work destruction to the people for whose welfare it was intended. I thank you, gentlemen, for your kind attention. [Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

APPENDIX.

The following tables are taken from the Manufacturers' Record and the Redemption of the South.

The production of coal in each Southern State in 1880, 1882, 1887, 1888, and 1889 was as follows, in tons:

States.	1880.	1882.	1887.	1888.	*1889.
Maryland.....	2,228,917	1,294,316	3,273,023	3,479,470	3,213,886
Virginia.....	45,896	100,000	825,263	1,073,000	1,592,455
West Virginia.....	1,839,845	2,500,000	4,806,820	5,498,800	4,728,047
Georgia.....	154,644	175,000	313,715	280,000	265,000
Alabama.....	322,972	800,000	1,900,000	2,900,000	4,000,000
Tennessee.....	406,151	860,000	1,900,000	1,967,000	2,500,000
Arkansas.....	14,778	80,000	180,000	198,000	250,000
Texas.....			75,000	90,000	200,000
Kentucky.....	946,288	1,300,000	1,933,185	2,570,270	2,750,000
Total.....	6,049,471	6,569,316	15,212,006	18,061,270	19,407,418

* These figures were compiled by Mr. F. E. Saward, editor Coal Trade Journal, New York.

In 1882 the South produced 6,569,316 tons of coal, and in 1889 19,407,418 tons. Thus in seven years, from 1882 to 1889, the output of Southern coal mines advanced from 6,500,000 tons to upwards of 19,500,000 tons. Between the taking of the census of 1880 and that of 1890 the output of Southern coal mines has more than trebled, and every year will show continued gains as the development of this industry is rapidly expanding.

The production of pig-iron in net tons in the South for each year from 1880 to 1889, according to the official report of the American Iron and Steel Association was as follows:

States.	1880.	1881.	1882.	1883.	1884.
Maryland.....	61,437	48,756	54,524	49,153	27,342
Virginia.....	29,934	83,711	87,731	132,907	157,483
North Carolina.....		800	1,150		435
Georgia.....	27,321	37,494	42,354	45,384	42,635
Alabama.....	77,190	98,081	112,745	172,465	189,664
Texas.....	2,500	3,000	1,321	2,381	5,140
West Virginia.....	70,338	66,409	73,220	88,398	55,231
Kentucky.....	57,709	45,973	66,522	54,629	45,052
Tennessee.....	70,373	87,406	137,602	133,963	134,597
Total Southern States.....	397,301	451,540	577,275	699,260	657,599
Total whole country.....	4,305,414	4,641,644	5,178,132	5,146,972	4,589,613

States.	1883.	1886.	1887.	1888.	1889.
Maryland.....	17,299	30,502	37,427	17,608	33,847
Virginia.....	169,782	156,250	175,715	197,396	251,356
North Carolina.....	1,790	2,200	8,640	2,400	2,898
Georgia.....	32,924	46,490	40,947	39,397	27,559
Alabama.....	227,438	283,859	292,762	449,492	791,425
Texas.....	1,843	3,250	4,383		4,544
West Virginia.....	60,007	98,618	82,311	95,259	117,900
Kentucky.....	37,528	54,844	41,907	56,790	42,518
Tennessee.....	191,190	199,166	230,344	267,931	294,655
Total Southern States.....	712,835	875,179	929,436	1,132,858	1,564,702
Total whole country.....	4,529,869	6,365,328	7,197,206	7,369,628	8,517,068

The most striking fact in connection with the output of iron in the two sections is brought out by comparing the production of 1887 and 1888, two years of dullness in the iron trade, and, as already said, it is during such periods as these that the South's advantages are made the more apparent. In 1887 the South produced 929,436 tons of iron and in 1888 1,132,858 tons, a gain of 203,422 tons, while the North, which made 6,257,770 tons in 1887, made 6,136,770 tons in 1888, a decrease of 121,000 tons. Presented in tabular form this makes the following showing:

Production of iron in the South:	1887.....tons...	1888.....do.....	Increase.....do.....
1887.....	929,436
1888.....	1,132,858
Increase.....		203,422
In the rest of the country:	1887.....do.....	1888.....do.....	Decrease.....do.....
1887.....	6,257,770
1888.....	6,136,770
Decrease.....		121,000

The yield of principal crops in the South in 1879, 1887, 1888, and 1889 was as follows:

Crops.	1879.	1887.	1888.	1889.
Cotton.....bales...	5,755,359	7,017,000	6,938,290	*7,250,000
Increase over 1879.....		1,261,641	1,244,641	1,494,641
Corn.....bushels...	333,121,290	492,415,000	509,705,000	419,517,000
Wheat.....do.....	54,476,740	52,384,000	44,207,000	55,060,000
Oats.....do.....	43,476,600	81,506,000	78,254,000	77,714,000
Total, grain.....do.....	431,074,630	626,305,000	632,166,000	652,291,000
Increase over 1879.....		195,230,370	201,091,370	221,216,370

* Estimated.

These figures show an increase in the production of grain from 1879 to 1889 of over 220,000,000 bushels. How does this increase compare with the production in the rest of the country? The following figures show:

Field in whole country, except the South.

Crops.	1879.	1887.	1888.	1889.
Corn.....bushels...	1,214,780,500	963,746,000	1,478,095,000	1,503,375,000
Wheat.....do.....	394,279,890	403,945,000	371,661,000	435,500,000
Oats.....do.....	320,293,720	578,112,000	623,481,000	573,801,000
Total.....	1,929,354,110	1,945,803,000	2,473,237,000	2,702,676,000

Notwithstanding the fact that the West produced last year the largest corn crop ever made, the increase as compared with 1879 was only 31 per cent., while the increase in the South's corn crop from 1879 to 1889 was 55 per cent.

While the South, as shown by the foregoing figures, made an increase from 1879 to 1887 of 195,000,000 bushels of grain, or 45 per cent., the increase in all the rest of the country for the same period was only 16,000,000 bushels, or less than 1 per cent.

States.	July 31, 1889.			May, 1890.
	Mills.	Spindles.	Looms.	Mills.	Spindles.	Looms.
Alabama.....	21	131,904	2,414	16	49,432	863
Arkansas.....	5	13,800	224	2	2,015	28
Florida.....	1	1,400		1	816
Georgia.....	73	455,998	10,246	40	198,656	4,493
Kentucky.....	6	45,200	677	3	9,022	75
Louisiana.....	5	60,280	1,384	2	6,096	120
Maryland.....	25	175,642	2,836	19	125,706	2,425
Mississippi.....	11	69,396	2,054	8	18,568	644
North Carolina.....	111	386,837	7,851	49	92,385	1,790
South Carolina.....	44	417,730	10,667	14	82,324	1,076
Tennessee.....	31	126,221	2,478	16	35,736	818
Texas.....	8	50,868	496	2	2,648	71
Virginia.....	14	99,889	2,754	8	44,340	1,322
Total.....	355	2,035,268	45,001	161	667,854	14,323

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, it is now late in the day; we have been in session more than six hours, and I move that the House do now adjourn.

EXTRA COMPENSATION OF LETTER-CARRIERS, 1890.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment while I submit a joint resolution under instructions from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. HAUGEN. I will yield to the gentleman.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 183) was read, as follows:

Be it resolved, etc., That the unexpended balance of $99,439.07 of the appropriation for the free-delivery service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1898, be continued and made available to June 30, 1891, for discharging the claims of letter-carriers for compensation for extra time in the months of May and June, 1898, made under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to limit the hours that letter-carriers in this city shall be employed per day," approved May 24, 1898.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PETERS). Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us have the report read.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will state that it is simply to continue for one year longer the unexpended balance which under the general statutes would be covered into the Treasury at the close of the present month, in order that the Department can adjust the accounts of the men who have worked over eight hours a day. The joint resolution appropriates nothing additional from the Treasury, but merely makes the appropriation of 1898 continue until the account can be adjusted.

Mr. McMILLIN. It does not change the law at all?

Mr. BINGHAM. It does not change the law and does not appropriate an extra dollar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution at this time?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BINGHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen who desire to print remarks upon the election bill may have the privilege of doing so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I have no objection to gentlemen who are interested in the discussion printing remarks when the matter is under consideration or within a reasonable time thereafter, but I do object to a leave to print which is unlimited as to time.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Then let it be within ten days after the vote is taken upon the bill.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 8342) for the removal of the United States court-house building at Baltimore, Md.; and

A bill (H. R. 9287) to provide for a term of court at Danville, Ill.

The message also announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments to the bill (H. R. 9803) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, agreed to the conference requested by the House, and had appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. BLACKBURN conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments to the bill (H. R. 9856) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, agreed to the conference requested by the House, and had appointed Mr. PLUMB, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. BLACKBURN conferees on the part of the Senate.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. RAY, an extension of his leave for two days.

To Mr. SPINOLA, indefinitely.

To Mr. DIBBLE, until Monday next.

To Mr. DORSEY, for five days.

To Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR, indefinitely.

To Mr. MORSE, for one week.

J. B. BERNADOU.

Mr. WILKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to concur in an amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 166) authorizing Ensign J. B. Bernardon, United States Navy, to accept two vases presented to him by the Government of Japan. The name is incorrectly spelled in the joint resolution, and the Senate has amended it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana to the present consideration of the Senate amendments to the joint resolution indicated by him?

There was no objection.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Line 1, strike out "Bernardon," and insert "Bernadou." Amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution authorizing Ensign J. B. Bernadou, United States Navy, to accept two vases presented to him by the Government of Japan."

The amendments were concurred in.

The motion of Mr. HAUGEN was then agreed to; and the House accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

INCREASED CLERICAL FORCE IN WAR DEPARTMENT.

Communication from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of War of the 26th instant, submitting additional estimates of appropriations for increased clerical force, etc., required by the record and pension division of War Department—to the Committee on Appropriations.

COMPILATION OF UNDELIVERED LAND PATENTS.

Letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with certain inclosures, in reply to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 6th instant requesting information as to the persons or firms who had compiled a list of the original, undelivered land patents in said office and by what authority it was done—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, the following resolution was introduced and referred as follows:

By Mr. MORRILL:

Resolved, That Thursday, July 2, immediately after the reading of the Journal, be set aside for the consideration of general bills reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and this shall be a continuing order until such bills are disposed of;

to the Committee on Rules.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk and disposed of as follows:

Mr. LEHLBACH, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 431) for the erection of a public building at Lawrence, in the State of Massachusetts, reported, as a substitute therefor, a bill (H. R. 11157) for the erection of a public building at Lawrence, in the State of Massachusetts; which was read twice, and, with the accompanying report (No. 2560), referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DORSEY, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10590) to carry into effect the recommendations of the International American Conference by the incorporation of the International American Bank, reported, as a substitute therefor, a bill (H. R. 11159) to carry into effect the recommendations of the International American Conference by the incorporation of the International American Bank; which was read twice, and, with the accompanying report (No. 2561), referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. CARLTON, from the Committee on Claims, reported with amendment the bill of the House (H. R. 5136) for the relief of F. G. Fuller and J. A. Mitchell, executors of John O'Dell, deceased, accompanied by a report (No. 2562)—to the Committee of the Whole House.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills of the following titles were introduced, severally read twice, and referred as follows:

By Mr. STRUBLE: A bill (H. R. 11154) to repeal part of section 6 of an act entitled "An act to divide the State of Iowa into two judicial districts," approved July 20, 1882—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MORRILL: A bill (H. R. 11155) to establish a port of entry and delivery at Leavenworth, Kans.—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11156) to allow soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm and leg in the military service of the United States a pension for each disability—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama: A bill (H. R. 11158) to authorize the New Orleans Terminal Railway and Bridge Company to construct, operate, and maintain a bridge, and all the necessary approaches thereto, over the Mississippi River, above the city of New Orleans, State of Louisiana, on the left bank of the Mississippi River, to the opposite bank in said State—to the Committee on Commerce.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 11160) for the relief of Mattie Ashurst, of Bourbon County, Kentucky—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11161) for the relief of Mrs. R. P. Todhunter, of Fayette County, Kentucky—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. COOPER, of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 11162) to correct the military record of Capt. W. B. Ellis—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HOUK: A bill (H. R. 11163) for the relief of James Brogdon, of Stockton, Tenn.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11164) for the relief of Robert McCampbell, of Knoxville, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11165) for the relief of J. H. Norwood, of Trigon, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11166) granting an honorable discharge to Pleasant Slover—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 11167) for the relief of Henry B. Wood, an invalid veteran soldier of the Mexican war—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PERKINS: A bill (H. R. 11168) granting a pension to James E. Ruark—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. QUINN: A bill (H. R. 11169) granting a pension to Isadora Ritter, formerly Isadora DeWolf Dimmick—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RUSK: A bill (H. R. 11170) for the relief of Frederick Engelhardt—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SMITH, of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 11171) granting an increase of pension to Edwin Reeder, late a member of Company A, First Tennessee Infantry in the war with Mexico—to the Committee on Pensions.

By M. STOCKBRIDGE: A bill (H. R. 11172) granting a pension to Frederick Ochs—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11173) to increase the pension of Elias D. Thompson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THOMAS: A bill (H. R. 11174) for the relief of Philander R. Baldwin—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11175) granting a pension to Emily Leach, widow of William D. Leach—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11176) for the relief of Lucy Simmons—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11177) granting relief to A. M. Stratton—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BROWER: Petition of Pilot Mountain Alliance, No. 2086, of Surry County, North Carolina, asking Congress for appropriations of money for complete system of levees on Mississippi River from Cairo to the Gulf, to prevent disastrous floods and improve navigation—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of L. H. Rothrick, C. A. Miller, and 26 others, citizens of Rowan County, North Carolina, for same purpose—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of J. R. Howard, J. L. Shim, and 23 others, citizens of Burke County, North Carolina, for same purpose—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. CARUTH: Memorial of Cornwall & Bro., Louisville, Ky., regarding duty on glycerine—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. COLEMAN: Petition of John C. Landreau, for relief—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. DAVIDSON: Petition of citizens of Walton County, Florida, for the passage of Senate bill 2716—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of other citizens of same county, for same measure—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of G. H. Symmes and 19 others of Hillsborough County, Florida, asking passage of House bill 7162—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of W. G. Coxwell and 25 others of Calhoun County, Florida, for same measure—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of W. R. Shields and 10 others, of same county, for same measure—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of W. H. Eppers and 12 others, of Leon County, Florida, for same measure—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. EVANS: Petition of citizens of Warren, Franklin, Grundy, Coffee, Cannon, De Kalb, White, Cumberland, Bledsoe, Putnam, Overton, Clay, Jackson, Fentress, and Smith Counties, asking that United States circuit and district courts be held at McMinnville, Tenn., to try causes from petitioning counties—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the heirs of Christopher Wood, asking pay for property destroyed during the war—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. FUNSTON: Petition asking revocation of the charge of disloyalty against John Kinchlon—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, another petition, asking same relief—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, another petition, for same relief—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of citizens of Kansas, asking for speedy action on the question of sale of liquor in original packages when brought from one State to another—to the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. LEE: Petition of Laura M. Brown, for the estate of Patsy Noles, deceased, late of Culpeper County, Virginia, praying that her war claim be referred to the Court of Claims under the provisions of the Bowman act—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana: Petition to accompany the bill (H. R. 11123) to pension Eleanor Grafton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOORE, of New Hampshire (by request): Memorial in favor of an equestrian statue of Maj. Gen. John Stark—to the Committee on the Library.

Also (by request), memorial in favor of Thomas Leahy—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MOREY: Petition for the relief of Rolly Moore—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. O'FERRALL: Petition of Julia A. Lewis, widow of James Lewis, deceased, late of Frederick County, Virginia, praying that her war claim be referred to the Court of Claims under the provisions of the Bowman act—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ROWLAND: Petition of I. S. Oliver and others, voters of Robeson County, North Carolina, asking for an appropriation of $6,200,000 for Galveston Harbor—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. SCRANTON: Petition of Hon. W. W. Watson and others, citizens of Scranton, Pa., for the perpetuation of the national-banking system—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. SKINNER: Petition of John T. Daniels, for the estate of John Wescott, deceased, late of Dare County, North Carolina, praying that his war claim be referred to the Court of Claims under the provisions of the Bowman act—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. STAHLNECKER: Petition of the National Furniture Association, assembled at Chicago, Ill., June 11, 12, and 13, 1890, asking that mahogany and certain articles in connection with their trade should be placed on the tariff free-list—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania: Petition of McCreary and 25 others, citizens of Lawrence County, Pennsylvania, for passage of a bill prohibiting transportation of liquors, etc.—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TRACEY: Resolution of the Excelsior Club of New York, protesting against the passage of the free-coinage silver bill—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Also, petition from Cohoes, N. Y., in favor of the knit-goods schedule in the McKinley bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WILKINSON: Memorial of the New Orleans Board of Trade, limited, indorsing the action of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, relating to the overflow of the Mississippi River and the urgent necessity of prompt action by the General Government to provide permanent protection—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. WILLCOX: Petition of citizens of Middletown, Conn., for the perpetuation of the national-banking system—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 27, 1890.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received yesterday from the House of Representatives, were read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. 8792) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Winona, Minn.; and

A bill (H. R. 8047) to construct a wagon bridge across the Mississippi River at Hastings, Minn.

The bill (H. R. 8155) to grant school district numbered 7 of the township of Dearborn, Wayne County, Michigan, certain lots of land for school purposes was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. 10086) granting leaves of absence to clerks and employees in first and second class post-offices was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CASEY presented a petition of the Farmers' Alliance of Sherbrooke, Steele County, North Dakota, and a petition of the Farmers' Alliance of Carrington, N. Dak., praying for the passage of House bill 5353, known as the Butterworth option bill; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the Farmers' Alliance of Sherbrooke, Steele County, North Dakota, and a petition of the Farmers' Alliance of Carrington, N. Dak., praying for the passage of House bill No. 283, known as the Conger land bill; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. VANCE presented the petition of J. S. Malant and 26 other citizens of Pitt County, North Carolina, praying for the passage of Senate bill 2806, known as the subtreasury bill; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3891) to suspend the operation in certain cases of the statute of limitations in force in the District of Columbia, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. REAGAN, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4039) to amend sections 3834, 3836, and 3837 of the Revised Statutes, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Samuel Sherwin, administrator of Thomas Sherwin, deceased, late of Washington County, Maryland, praying to be allowed compensation for stores and supplies taken for the use of the United States Army during the war of the rebellion, reported a bill (S. 4164) for the relief of the estate of Thomas Sherwin; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4081) to provide for the incorporation of trust, loan, mortgage, and certain other corporations within the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments.

Mr. PAYNE, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3832) granting lands to the Territory of New Mexico for common-school, university, and other purposes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported favorably the amendment submitted by Mr. PLATT intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. WASHBURN June 23, intended to be proposed to the Indian appropriation bill, reported it with a favorable recommendation; and it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, introduced a bill (S. 4165) to authorize the board of supervisors of Maricopa County, Arizona, to issue certain bonds in aid of the construction of a certain railroad; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. PADDOCK (by request) introduced a bill (S. 4166) to provide for the disbursement of money appropriated by the acts of 1874 and 1878, making appropriation for the payment of workmen who worked on public improvements under the late board of public works of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. SPOONER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the agricultural appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COKE submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPOONER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the agricultural appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a resolution requesting the return from the Senate to the House of Representatives of the bill (H. R. 10086) granting leaves of absence to clerks and employees in first and second class post-offices.

The message further announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 166) authorizing Ensign J. B. Bernardou, United States Navy, to accept two vases presented to him by the Government of Japan.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 163) to provide for the unexpended balance, $99,439.07, for discharging claims of letter-carriers for extra compensation under the eight-hour law, approved May 24, 1898, and appropriated for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1898; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ADMISSION OF WYOMING.

Mr. PLATT. If there is no further morning business, I move that the Senate resume the consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask my friend to yield to me, before he goes on with the Wyoming bill, to call up the bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary in respect of elections, redistricting, etc., in the Territory of Utah. I will give the number of the bill. It is a very important and desirable bill, and I hope it will only take a little while.

Mr. PLATT. If the Senator will permit me, I think that in consideration of the fact that an hour has been agreed to by unanimous consent when the vote should be taken upon the Wyoming bill and there are Senators who desire to speak upon it, I ought not to yield this morning. I should be glad to oblige my friend with regard to that important bill, if it were not for these circumstances. I suggest to him that it is very possible he may find the opportunity to bring up his bill to-morrow; but I think that under the circumstances I ought not to cut short the time of Senators who desire to occupy the floor upon the Wyoming bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have done the best I can, Mr. President. The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BERRY in the chair). If there be no further morning business, that order is closed.

Mr. PLATT. Now I move that the Senate resume the consideration of House bill 982.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 982) to provide for the admission of the State of Wyoming into the Union, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] as a substitute for the bill.

Mr. MORGAN proceeded to address the Senate. (See page 6574).

Mr. DAWES. I ask the Senator from Alabama to yield to me that I may submit a conference report.

Mr. MORGAN. I yield for that purpose.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAWES. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9086) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 43, 44, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 71, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 91, 93, 100, 101, 102, 104, 108, 110, 114, 116, 117, 123, 129, 130, 131, 132, 134, 135, 136, 139, 140, 141, 144, 145, 146, 147, 149, 150, 164, 165, 167, 175, 176, 177, 178, 189, 194, 195, 196, 199, 200, 203, 204, 205, 207, and 208.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 40, 41, 42, 47, 48, 50, 51, 53, 56, 57, 72, 73, 74, 75, 82, 89, 92, 94, 95, 97, 98, 102, 106, 107, 109, 113, 118, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 142, 143, 144, 153, 156, 160, 161, 162, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 179, 201, 210, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 230, and 237; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter to be stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"Provided, That hereafter every application for examination before the Civil Service Commission for appointment in the departmental service in the District of Columbia shall be accompanied by a certificate of an officer, with his official seal attached, of the county and State of which the applicant claims to be a citizen, that such applicant was, at the time of making such application, an actual and bona fide resident of said county, and had been such resident for a period of not less than six months next preceding; but this provision shall not apply to persons who may be in the service and seek promotion or appointment in other branches of the Government."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$117,670;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 52: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed, insert "two;" and insert after the word "each," on page 17 in line 15 of the bill, the following: "for an additional Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive a compensation at the rate of $4,500 per annum, $4,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 55: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "13;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "4;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 57: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$181,490;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 111: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 111, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "5;" and on page 52 of the bill, in line 15, strike out "one stenographer," and insert in lieu thereof "two stenographers;" and on same page, in line 16 of the bill, after the word "dollars," insert the word "each;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 112: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 112, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$108,150;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 119: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 119, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$154,920;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 137: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 137, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For an Assistant Secretary of the Navy to be appointed, from civil life, by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive a compensation at the rate of $4,500 per annum, $4,500."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 157: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 157, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 68, in line 5 of the bill, strike out "thirteen" and insert in lieu thereof "twelve;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 158: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 158, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$96,950;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 180: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 180, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$21,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 181: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 181, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 182: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 182, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$7,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 183: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 183, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$7,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 184: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 184, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$9,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 185: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 185, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 186: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 186, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 187: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 187, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$7,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 188: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 188, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$9,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 190: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 190, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 191: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 191, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$9,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 192: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 192, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$7,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 193: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 193, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$10,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 195: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 195, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "two;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 197: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 197, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$11,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 202: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 202, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$119,970;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 206: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 206, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$12,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 210, 211, 212, 213, and 214: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 210, 211, 212, 213, and 214, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"For rent of topographer's office, $1,500; for rent of a suitable building or buildings for the use of the money-order office of the Post-Office Department, at $3,000; for rent of building for use of the money-order division of the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department at the rate of $4,000 per annum until not later than February 1, 1891, $2,384; and the building known as Marini Hall shall be vacated by said division not later than that date; for rent of building for use of said money-order division for balance of the fiscal year at a rate not exceeding $9,000 per annum, $3,750; for expenses of removal of said division to new location, $800; for rent of a suitable building for the storage of post-office supplies, $4,000; in all, $23,384."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 215: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 215, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "three," and insert, after the word "each," on page 85, in line 3 of the bill, the following: "For an additional Assistant Attorney-General, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive a compensation at the rate of $5,000 per annum, $5,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

On the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 11, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 34, 159, and 163, the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

H. L. DAWES,
P. B. PLUMB,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
BENJ. BUTTERWORTH,
J. G. CANNON,
WM. H. FORNEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DAWES. I move the acceptance of the report. If any Senator desires to know the purport of it I can state briefly, before the acceptance of the report or afterward, what will be the condition of the bill if the report is agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I did not have any idea that the Senator was going to bring in a table on statistics or logarithms. Of course we do not understand anything about it, and never expect to understand anything about these conference reports by the mere reading of the amendments by numbers.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the Senator's pardon if I have disappointed him. I supposed the Senator's experience here would lead him to observe that the legislative bill was full of logarithms.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, I discover that it is.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope action will be taken on the report at once without debate so that the bill which has been pending before the Senate may be proceeded with.

Mr. DAWES. I can state very briefly the condition in which the bill will stand after the report is accepted, either before or after its acceptance, I do not care which.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report of the conference committee.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. DAWES. I now move that the Senate further insist upon the amendments as to which there is a disagreement and ask for a further conference with the House of Representatives upon them, and I will state that they consist of simply those amendments introduced into the bill by the Senate affecting the proposed increase in the number of employes in the Senate, the increase in the compensation of certain employes of the Senate, and the proposed increase in certain items of the contingent expenses of the Senate, and the proposed increase in the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office from $4,000 to $5,000, and of the Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office from $3,000 to $3,500.

On these amendments the committee of conference has been unable to agree. All of these amendments but one were inserted by vote of the Senate, and the conference committee did not feel at liberty to recede from them without some authority from the Senate. The question is open either to a motion to insist or to recede. If the Senate insists, then the committee of conference will feel instructed to still adhere to these amendments. If any Senator desires to test the sense of the Senate upon a motion to recede, that would take precedence of the motion which I now make.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think these amendments to increase the salaries of officers and employes ought to be forced upon the other House. The old rule used to be whenever one House declined to agree to an amendment in regard to salaries the other House proposing the amendment should recede. I believe that is a wise rule to check the pressure that is made upon members of either House to increase salaries from time to time. I therefore move that the Senate recede from the amendments upon which there is a disagreement. I understand they all apply to increasing the compensation of employes of the Senate except the amendment in relation to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, whose salary was increased by a very large vote of the Senate. I think the better way is to make the motion general, that the Senate recede from its amendments which, after the adoption of the conference report, are disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate recede from its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President, it seems to me that there ought to be another conference, another attempt to arrive at an agreement, and particularly as to the change to which the Senator from Ohio refers. I have no objection, so far as I am concerned, to receding from the amendments of the Senate affecting its own employes; but as to the amendments relative to the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Assistant Commissioner, there certainly ought not to be any recession. The Senate by a very large and decisive vote determined that those salaries ought to be increased and put on the plane, on the same level, with the salaries of other officers of like grade, and certainly there ought not to be any yielding as to them.

Mr. DOLPH. I hope the motion will not prevail as to two of the amendments involved, the amendments of the Senate adopted by a large vote concerning the compensation of employes of the Senate, clerks of committees and secretaries of Senators, making them annual and fixing their salaries. I think the rule in such cases is not, as stated by the Senator from Ohio, that one branch of Congress is expected to yield to the other. I think that on a question where the salary or compensation of the employes of one body is concerned—

Mr. SHERMAN. I think I can state with confidence to the Senator from Oregon that where one House proposes any amendment changing the law upon any subject and the other House simply says, "We will not agree to it," then the custom requires, and the necessity of the case compels, the House proposing the amendment to recede, because no bill ought to be passed unless it has the assent of both Houses of Congress, and neither House can force the other to agree to an obnoxious amendment by the threat of defeating an appropriation bill.

Mr. DOLPH. If the Senator means by "obnoxious" an amendment that does not please the other branch of Congress, the word is properly used, but it is not usual for the Senate or for the House of Representatives to recede from amendments after only one conference.

I certainly have heard it stated over and over again in this body at every session since I have been a member of the Senate that each branch of Congress ought to be allowed to judge as to what employes it should have and what compensation it should pay them, and I think that ought to be the rule. If the Senate chooses to make provision for annual clerks of committees, or if it chooses to make provision for secretaries to Senators, the House of Representatives ought to yield and let the Senate take the responsibility of that legislation.

If it were true that it was incumbent upon the Senate to yield its amendments made to appropriation bills on objection by the House, the House would simply dictate to the Senate what appropriations should be made, and the Senate would be shorn of all power and all voice in the matter of appropriations, even as to what it shall pay its own employes and what employes it shall have. If that is the rule, it is a rule which would be More honored in the breach than the observance.

I rose not to discuss the question, but to let the Senate understand that the proposition now is that the Senate shall recede from the amendments it adopted by a large vote in regard to clerks of committees and in regard to secretaries of Senators, so that the old inequality shall continue whereby one-half of the committees of this body have annual clerks at salaries ranging from $2,220 to $3,000 per annum and some of them assistant clerks, while the other clerks are per diem clerks only.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I hope the motion made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] that the Senate shall recede from its amendments en masse will not be adopted. I think there is great force in the suggestion made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] that each House should be permitted as a rule to regulate the compensation of its own employes, and also to have the power to decide what employes are necessary to enable it to transact properly the business of the people.

We have been governed hitherto, I remember in several instances in concurring with House propositions for the increase of salaries of House employes, by the principle that it was but proper deference to the other body that we should permit them to regulate that matter, as pertaining to their own government, for themselves.

But this motion embodies one item to which I rose particularly to call the attention of the Senate. Early in this session the Senate passed, I think unanimously, a resolution authorizing the employment by the Committee on Claims of this body of an assistant clerk at a salary of $1,440 per annum. That item is embraced in the motion made by the Senator from Ohio, and if his motion should be adopted it would be receded from by the Senate.

The Senate, as I said, has already authorized the employment of that assistant clerk by the year, and it is a service which is essentially necessary. Every member of this body knows that that committee is burdened with bills which involve almost constant labor and investigation. Nearly one thousand claims bills are now pending before us, and we are disposing of them as rapidly as is possible. The assistant clerk of the Committee on Claims, Mr. Rand, is a gentleman who has been connected with that committee for nine years, part of the time as a messenger, but discharging at the same time the duties, without extra compensation, of assistant clerk. I appeal to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], and to all Senators here who have served upon this committee since I have been a member of the Senate and to Senators who are now members of that committee, to say if it be not true that the services of that old employe as assistant clerk are indispensable almost in connection with the committee. He has at hand for ready use the history of bills running back through many Congresses and information which is of great value.

During vacation he spends his time in making investigations in aid of the work of the committee, so that the vacation for us is no vacation to him. The House of Representatives ought not for one moment to object to this provision in view of the fact that in that body there are two committees, the Committee on War Claims and the Committee on Claims, which deal with the bills, all of which go before the single Committee on Claims in this body. The work which the Committee on Claims here is obliged to do is work done by two committees in that House, and each of the committees in that House has not only an annual clerk, but an assistant clerk at a salary of $1,440 a year. So they have for two committees of the House, considering the same bills which are before our one committee of the Senate, two annual clerks at a salary of $2,200 each a year and two assistant clerks at a salary each of $1,440 a year, and here is a denial of the right of the Senate to give to its one committee, transacting all this business, one assistant clerk at a salary of $1,440 a year. It is not fair to the committee, it is not fair to the Senate, and it ought not to be yielded to.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I desire to make a suggestion in reference to the action of the Senate. It is known that yesterday the understanding and unanimous agreement arrived at was that the bill under consideration in relation to the admission of Wyoming should be voted on at 4 o'clock to-day; and in pursuance of the arrangement the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] took the floor this morning and got fairly started in an address to the Senate when he was interrupted by this conference report by his consent, not supposing that it was going to take any time. I appeal to the Senator from Massachusetts, who has charge of the conference report, that he allow it to lie over until after the bill for the admission of Wyoming is disposed of, so that the Senator from Alabama can proceed with his remarks.

Mr. DAWES. I think if the Senator will look at it a moment he will see that I ought not to do that. This is the last week of the fiscal year and the last day but one of the week. We have this bill and the sundry civil bill and the Indian bill—

Mr. SPOONER. And the agricultural bill.

Mr. DAWES. The consular bill, the Post-Office appropriation bill, and several others of the general appropriation bills unfinished.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand, if the Senator will allow me, that the motion to recede will probably be withdrawn, and if that is done the conference report can be disposed of at once, and in that case I shall have no objection, but I think it is hardly fair that the Senator from Alabama should be crowded out in this way under the circumstances.

Mr. DAWES. I beg the Senator's pardon. The Senator sees the necessity for it.

Mr. GORMAN. I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] that this bill is more important than any other which is before Congress, and we can very easily extend the time by general understanding on the Wyoming bill, even if this takes an hour.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to say that I do not wish to detain the Senate about this matter. If it is thought to be best to have a second committee of conference, I withdraw my motion and will let the ordinary motion be made.

Mr. CULLOM. I think we ought to have another conference, and I hope it will be done.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I was going to suggest that I hoped the Senator would do that in order that there might be another conference.

The trouble does not arise in the House of Representatives because of the case stated by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] nor because of the case in which the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK] has so much interest. It arises because the Senate has made so large an increase in the salaries of its official force, and that increase is in no degree answered by any increase in the House force; and there will be found by the conference the difficult matter, there will be found the issue; and although for one I am willing that there shall be another conference, and that these minor matters may be adjusted, as I have no doubt they can be, and save all the valuable force that is needed, I should feel when it comes back again that if the House still insists, rather than put the Senate before the country as insisting on this large increase in the pay of its official force, it will be better then for the Senate to recede and close this bill; and unless the Senator from Ohio shall renew his motion, then I shall certainly make it.

Mr. GORMAN. I want to enter my emphatic dissent to all that the Senator from Maine has said. This question is not one of the small amount involved in this amendment. It goes away beyond that. The Senate for itself, as it has the undoubted right to do, has determined the number of employes in this body that are necessary for the conduct of its business, and has fixed, in its judgment, the proper amount of compensation; and it will be very strange indeed if this body or the other, when that case is presented, should tamely submit to dictation from any quarter. It is not the amount involved or the number of employes, but it is the principle. The Senate heretofore and at this very session—

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator a question.

Mr. GORMAN. In one second. I say that heretofore at this session the Senate did not hesitate and it has never hesitated to accord to the other branch of the legislative department precisely what they thought was necessary for the conduct of their business, and when their officers have not performed their duty faithfully and honestly, there was no hesitation on the part of any Senator in voting to make up that deficiency. That has been the universal rule, and in my judgment, Mr. President, the Senate can not afford to surrender upon this question.

Mr. HALE. Upon that the rule has undoubtedly been that in all every-day matters the decision which each House comes to as to the force that it needs and as to the compensation that any small increase of force calls for shall be assented to by the other body, and neither House has interfered much in such matters so far as concerns the other.

But if either House should to-day pass a resolution or incorporate into an appropriation bill a provision doubling the salaries of all its employees, the other House would not be called upon to consent to that and to make no controversy about it. Here is a case where the Senate has a large official force connected with the convenience of Senators, and the House has none such; and now the House has the clear right to object to any such large increase on the part of the Senate in its official force and its pay while the House does not see fit to incorporate any corresponding rule of its own. It is not a question of a few committees, it is not a question of a single committee, but it is the great question of the large increase which the Senate has put upon this bill, adding to the expenditures for its personal force. I maintain here and now that that is a contest which the Senate can not maintain, and that sooner or later the Senate will have to yield, not to intimidation from the other House, but because the House has a right as a co-ordinate body to see to it equally with us that the scale of salaries shall be reasonable here.

Mr. STEWART. I do not wish to debate this, but I desire to say—

Mr. PLATT. I want to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. STEWART. I shall get through in a moment.

Mr. PLATT. I will wait for a moment.

Mr. STEWART. I want to make my protest against surrendering by the Senate what the Senate knows to be necessary for the orderly conduct of business here. This question was thoroughly discussed and the measure carried by a large majority, and it is the judgment of the Senate that it is necessary to the conduct of business, and whatever the other House does to carry on its business, let it do; but we have nothing more than is absolutely necessary for us.

It is not a question of raising the salary of Senators, but a question of furnishing them with facilities to do the duties that are devolved upon them, and they are the best judges of that. To say that Senators shall not have the necessary force to discharge the duties required of them is economy in the wrong direction. In this very bill I can point out useless salaries four times beyond the amount of Senators' clerks' salaries, which are insisted upon and put in by the House. If they want economy I can show them where economy can be applied; but it is bad economy to deprive Senators of the ordinary facilities for discharging their duties to their constituents while they have those duties to perform, and it is expected of them to answer their constituents' inquiries and to attend to Department duties. While these functions are imposed upon Senators they must have assistance or they must be neglected. No Senator has the physical power to perform the duties required of him without assistance, and that was thoroughly discussed and passed upon here; and to say that we must surrender such an amendment when we know it to be necessary is to deny to the Senate the ordinary rights and privileges of such a body. I concur with the Senator from Maryland in his protest against the position taken by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to inquire what is the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is the Wyoming bill.

Mr. PLATT. Then unless we can have a vote at once on this report I shall call for the regular order.

Mr. DAWES. I understand—

Mr. PLATT. Wait one moment. I am speaking and I want to finish my sentence.

I know it is customary to bring in reports of conference committees; but under the circumstances when we had an hour for voting fixed at 4 o'clock this afternoon by unanimous consent, and the Senator from Alabama was making an address and other Senators desire to speak upon the question which is to be voted upon at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, I do not think we ought to take up the time of the Senate in the discussion of a conference report which may last all the time until 4 o'clock; and unless we can have a vote at once I shall call for the regular order. If the Senate is ready to vote on this question I do not desire to do so now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is no motion pending now before the Senate.

Mr. DAWES. I do not know anything about the rules of the Senate, but if a conference report is not privileged I have been in the wilderness for twenty years.

Mr. PLATT. The making of it is, but the consideration of it is not.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator inquired of the Chair what was the order of business.

Mr. PLATT. I did not suppose the regular order had been displaced by the presentation of the conference report.

Mr. DAWES. I supposed it had been. I supposed a conference report was privileged and that it superseded a pending matter; but I do not want to spend any time upon it. The Senate can either insist or recede in five minutes if they choose. I have taken no time of the Senate in discussing it.

Mr. DOLPH. Is the motion to insist open to amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not understand the Senator from Massachusetts to make any motion.

Mr. DAWES. Do I understand the Chair to say that there is no motion pending? The Chair must have forgotten that I made a motion to insist in the beginning. The Senator from Ohio made a motion to recede. That took precedence of the motion to insist, but if he has withdrawn that there is pending the motion to insist.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator from Massachusetts to have withdrawn his motion and to have accepted that offered by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. DAWES. I did not withdraw that motion, but the motion of the Senator from Ohio took precedence of it. That motion took precedence of mine, but it did not dispense with mine.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts that the Senate further insist upon its amendments not disposed of by the report of the conference committee, and ask for a further conference thereon.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I supposed I had the floor as I only yielded for a moment to a question of the Senator from Maine.

I desire to say to the Senator from Connecticut that if an hour or two is consumed upon this conference report, which is a privileged question, and which is a most important one and the bill should be disposed of—

Mr. PLATT. I think the Senate is ready to insist, and that corresponds with the Senator's desires.

Mr. GORMAN. It would be but fair to other Senators to extend the time for the Wyoming bill vote by the time occupied in considering this report. I am not content simply with a vote, after what has been said by the Senator from Maine, to send this bill back to a conference committee. We know the Senator's standing in this body and on the conference committee, and I do not believe for one that we can afford to pass this matter over with the intimation to the other branch that upon the next conference we shall recede, or admit that we have employed too many persons here around the Senate. That is a question for the Senate to determine. If I remember aright, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] has already had a committee appointed by resolution to ascertain the proper number and compensation hereafter to be paid; but in the mean time, knowing perfectly well that the Senate has passed and does constantly pass resolutions to employ persons about the body and pay them out of the contingent fund, the Committee on Appropriations and the Senate itself determined that that was a bad mode of procedure, and therefore attempted to fix in this bill a fair compensation for all the clerks who are not annual.

As to their services being absolutely necessary, there is not a Senator on this floor who does not know the fact. It applies wholly to Senators who happen not to be chairmen of committees. Nearly every important committee in this body has one or two clerks, and a messenger, with a compensation exceeding the amount that is provided for in the amendments which the House does not agree to. The clerks of the prominent committees receive $2,200 and the measure of compensation for the other clerks who do as important work here is fixed at $1,800.

Mr. President, I say again that there is a principle involved.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator will bear the committee witness that, without regard to their own votes upon this question, they have stood by the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand perfectly that the Senator from Massachusetts would stand by the will of the Senate as it had been expressed, but I desire to give emphasis to this vote of the Senate after the statement of the Senator from Maine that on the next conference we ought to recede, that we can not go before the country simply because we said that $1,800 is the proper measure of compensation for these clerks who ought to be employed and who, for the public necessities, ought to be here the entire year, taking the measure of compensation fixed at the last session of Congress when we paid them under a resolution of this body which amounted to $1,820 for the year. So there is no loss to the Government under this provision. It simply fixes the amount and determines the number of men we require, and in my judgment the Senate ought to stand by their former action and instruct the conferees to stand by the amendment as it is incorporated in the bill.

Mr. President, this body performs all the work that is performed by the committees on the other side and more. In addition to the ordinary legislation, of which there is not a feature that does not come here, as the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] well said yesterday, every subject is considered in this body both in committee and by the body itself, and I join with him in trusting that it will ever be so. In addition to that, the executive work of the Senate exceeds, or at least almost equals, the legislative work. Therefore, sir, I do not believe in this matter of clerks that we have too many officers. In other respects we may have more than the House in proportion. That is a matter of inquiry by the committee raised under the resolution of the Senator from Vermont. But I go back of that and say that if we have too many, that is a question which the other House has nothing to do with. The Senate owes it to itself, in my judgment, to stand by this proposition.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think my friend from Maryland, if he will allow me, restates the proposition that the other House has nothing to do with it a little too broadly. The House of Representatives has the same key to the purse of the people that the Senate has, and while a due consideration to the judgment and views of each House by the other is one that always ought to be entertained, and will be I hope always, I think it is possible that it might happen that a case would arise—it is far from having arisen now, I agree—where the House of Representatives would be justified, and reciprocally in respect to some extravagance that we thought they were engaged in we should be bound, as the equal representatives of the people's purse, to say that we would not assent to that. But I only state that to qualify the broad remark of the Senator, for I agree with him that this case is not within that rule at all.

Mr. GORMAN. I agree with the Senator from Vermont, and that is precisely the idea I intended to convey. But in this case it seems to me there ought not to be any hesitation in instructing our conferees to stand by the action of the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not agree with what the Senator from Maryland has stated as the prerogatives of the Senate, nor do I agree that the proposition which the Senate has ingrafted on this bill, raising the salaries of clerks of Senators and clerks of committees which are not annual to the sum of $1,800, is correct. I think the House of Representatives, after yielding of course something to the judgment of the Senate as to its own expenditures, is not bound to surrender entirely its conviction when an appropriation is made or asked to be made which it shall deem to be extravagant and wasteful.

I believe that money can be appropriated out of the Treasury only by law, and that no law can be passed except by the joint consent of both Houses. I think that possibly the expenditures of the Senate and of the House of Representatives have become of late very large, not to say extravagant. I do not go too far when I say that the annual cost of Congress now exceeds the whole annual expenditures for the support of the Government, including the Army and the Navy, under the early Administrations of this Government.

That is the fact, Mr. President, that now for the mere convenience of Congress we have reached a point where more money is expended annually than was spent for a year during the early administration of the Government for the whole expenses of the Government, civil and military.

I desired simply to say that much. I think the appropriation for clerk-hire is too high, and I think the House of Representatives have a right to say that it is too high.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, within the last year we have admitted four States into the American Union which in their population and resources are almost equal, if not quite equal, to the entire body of the people of the United States in the earlier days to which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] refers. They bring with them a corresponding volume of work, and indeed a very greatly increased volume of work, which takes those gentlemen up to all they are capable of doing to provide for the organization, and the first steps to be taken in the government of those great States and corresponding duties of course devolve upon the rest of the Senate.

We have here far less than a third of the numbers of the House to consider in committees every bill that the House passes upon and send to us. It has 325 members and its committee duties are divided between that great number. Of course it does not devolve upon the individual member of the House as much of personal labor as the duties of a Senator require at his hands here.

More than that, if the House of Representatives think that they need more force, or if they think that they need clerks, and if they have the courage to demand them, the Senate of the United States would not be reluctant at all, I think, in granting to them any sort of assistance that they might say as Representatives by their votes that they needed for the dispatch of the public business.

It is not correct to say that these officers with whom we are surrounded here are for the convenience of the Senate or the convenience of Senators. They merely share with us labors which would tax us beyond the powers of human endurance if we were not thus supplied with assistance. My observation has been that the details of the business of the country with this vast population of 65,000,000 of people, a great many of whom have business to transact here, have been very much better attended to since Senators were supplied with this assistance that we got from the law than before. I do not believe that there is any money expended in the public service which really does the people more good than that which gives to the Senators in this body the assistance of clerks for the transaction of the business of their constituents.

There are very few gentlemen on this floor who have the opportunity in the course of their service in this body to attend to their private affairs. I can say so very truly in regard to myself, and I think almost any Senator here would bear me out in saying that his own personal business is continually neglected for the sake of rendering full and efficient service to the Government of the United States. There are very few Senators in this body whose time is not taxed every day and every night in the week, and Sunday included, for the transaction of the necessary business devolved upon him. Most of us have five or six committees that we are obliged to visit. We are all the time trying to get out of committee duty. I do not mean that we are shirking the duty, but we are trying to be relieved from the numbers of committees that we are assigned to in this body, and almost every Senator here has five days out of the six occupied in committee work, during which time he is bound to neglect the departmental service that he must render properly and naturally to his constituency and is bound to neglect his own private affairs.

Now, the Senate is not setting itself upon too high a plane when it is asking this assistance from the Government of the United States. You may go into any one of the great Departments of this Government and you will find that the presiding officers of the bureaus have more assistants, at a very much larger cost to the Government, than Senators have here; and yet I dare say that there is scarcely a bureau in this Government which is of more importance to the country than the labors of any Senator who might be mentioned. Why can we not ask a contribution from the people of the United States for our sustentation and our assistance in the transaction of business that is peculiarly and solely the business of the Government of the United States and the people for whom that Government exists?

So I have not felt chary in my advocacy of liberal assistance to Senators on this floor in the transaction of these duties. I am, therefore, against the suggestion of the Senator from Maine that we shall recede, which motion he says he will make as soon as he gets back into conference. I regret very much that the honorable Senator gave the weight of his personal opinion and suggestion that he would make that motion before he came out of conference upon this report. The Senate has acted in good faith about this matter. It was discussed and understood, and it is not that Senators are desiring to benefit themselves, but the country, that we put in this amendment to the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], that the Senate insist upon the amendments undisturbed of by the conference report and ask a further conference thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. DAWES, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

ADMISSION OF WYOMING.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 932) to provide for the admission of the State of Wyoming into the Union, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GORMAN. If the Senator from Alabama will yield to me for one moment I suggest to the Senator from Connecticut that we shall by unanimous consent extend the time to take the vote until half past 4 if there is anybody who desires to speak when the hour of 4 o'clock arrives.

Mr. PLATT. With the understanding that if any one desires to further discuss the matter at that time, I will consent to the extension.

Mr. GORMAN. Yes, until half past 4 o'clock.

Mr. PLATT. But if the Senate is ready to vote, let us vote at 4 o'clock.

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, if the people of the United States feel no greater interest in this bill and in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas than the Senate of the United States exhibited during yesterday and, in fact, during the whole of the discussion of this great measure, it would be hardly worth while to take up any time to indulge in any explanation of the principles upon which it is based or the facts in reference to which this enactment is proposed to be made. Either the majority of the Senate of the United States has come to some understanding or agreement that this bill is to pass notwithstanding any objection that may be urged against it or any argument that may be made, or this matter of drawing States into the Union has got to be such a commonplace affair that it scarcely attracts the attention of the gentlemen who are concerned here as ambassadors of their own States.

The admission of a State into the American Union is to my mind the most solemn and the most important event with which the Senate of the United States has to deal. We have pretty nearly exhausted all the territory that we have in reference to which we can exercise this very high function of creating, by our consent, local sovereignties within the boundaries of this great Union. It seems to me that in the disposal of the remainder of the Territories there ought to be the most thoughtful and careful attention given to all of the future interests and welfare of this country, not merely connected with the local benefits to be derived by the people who are immediately concerned, but also in respect of the great feature of our Government, preserving a just balance of power in this body between the different geographical sections of the country.

The protection that is thrown by the Constitution of the United States around the respective States in the persons of their Senators and in their influence in this great tribunal indicates that there ought to be the most conservative care exercised in regard to the admission of new States into the Union. No State can be deprived, without its own consent, of equal representation in the American Senate. That is a de-tree which must continue as long as the Constitution continues, and it seems to be the only thing in the Constitution that is incapable of amendment. It is a guaranty upon which we have entered into the Union, from every State to every other State, that during the continuance of this form of government no State shall be deprived without its consent of its equal power and its equal right to vote in this body. All amendments that may be proposed, all features which are open to amendment in the Constitution besides this, are subject to the control of two-thirds of the two Houses and three-fourths of the Legislatures of the different States, or to the control of a convention which may be assembled in obedience to the Constitution. But it is a very significant fact, and one that, it seems to me, ought to be considered in every case of the admission of a State into the Union, that when that State comes here it comes clothed with that exceptional sort of sovereign power which prohibits a reduction of its authority in this body unless by its own consent.

The representation of each State in this Union is equal without reference to its area or its population. There are some States in the American Union of very diminished area, some with diminished and diminishing population, some whose voting capacity as exhibited in its elections has got to such a low degree as that many counties, even in the rural districts of the United States, cast as many votes at the ballot-box as an entire State. If such States were now presented for admission into the Union upon the basis of their population, and especially upon the basis of their population as contrasted with the enormous area that they possess and control, the question would scarcely be debatable, under the present condition of public sentiment and the present understanding of our Federal and State relations, whether they could now be admitted into the Union. But being here it makes no difference. If their population shall dwindle until they become minimized almost absolutely; I will say that if there were but a hundred men left resident in a State that has representation on this floor, those hundred men through their suffrage would exercise in this Union, beyond our power to control it without the consent of that State, the full power that might be exercised by the largest and most imperial, as we term them, of our States.

So, Mr. President, in the admission of a State into the Union it is well worth our while to be very careful in respect of the population of the State, its future prospects, and also in respect of all those matters which indicate good faith, or the want of it, in the proceedings which have resulted in the presentation of the State here for the full rights of statehood. In times past we have had many controversies, some relating to the question of slavery and others of a different character, some relating to ementes and outbreaks that have occurred within the borders of Territories that desire to be admitted here, some attended with physical violence and threats of violence which seemed to have induced the Congress of the United States, in order to pass by a critical period of disturbance, to admit States into the Union which I think would not have been admitted upon a more deliberate and careful and cooler consideration of the surrounding circumstances.

I do not, Mr. President, regard myself bound by any precedent which has been established under those circumstances in the exercise of my power to vote upon the admission of a State into the American Union. Looking to the rights of my own State and the other sister States of the American Union, I think I have the clear right and also the obligatory duty resting upon me to ascertain as best I may whether the proposed State seeking to be admitted into this Union has shown a degree of qualification in the proceedings which have led up to the organization that presents itself for admission and in the constitution which it presents, to see whether or not it is in all respects such a civil community to be invested with local powers of sovereignty as will work out in its future proceedings a harmonious line of action and harmonious results in correspondence with the history of the country and with the action of the other States of the American Union.

There is another feature in that part of the Constitution which confers upon Congress the power to admit States into the Union, and that is that they shall be admitted upon terms of equality with the original States. In the adoption of that feature of the Constitution we took the condition of the original States in all material respects as furnishing the standard and the guide by which we were to measure the competency and qualifications of the State proposed for admission into the Union; and where we find a State seeking to be admitted into the Union that strikes out upon new lines of policy, social or otherwise, we have the right to be very careful to see whether or not, after the State is admitted into the Union, terms of equality shall exist and subsist between that State and the original thirteen, I will say, in the spirit in which the Constitution provides that they shall exist.

Moreover, Mr. President, in the admission of States into the Union, where we have a right of selection and where we have a duty of selection between the one or the other that may be proposed to be brought in, there are some other very important considerations, it occurs to me, which ought to be taken into view.

I had the honor of voting for the admission of the State of Washington and the Dakotas and Montana into the Union under enabling acts, which were thought to be the most proper and just way of getting those States into the Union; and while I have some objections, and some serious objections, to certain of the fundamental provisions of the constitutions on which they were admitted, and while I objected also that the President of the United States should not have authority by proclamation to admit those States until their constitutions had undergone the supervision of the Congress of the United States, there was still another and, to my mind, a very important general and political reason why those States should be brought into the Union as early as possible.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Mr. President, I hope that we shall have order in the Senate. Audible conversation is going on so that it is almost impossible to hear the Senator from Alabama in his remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. MORGAN. I am very sorry to interfere with other Senators, Mr. President, but I do not make the objection myself, because I am speaking to the Reporters and to the outside country. I do not expect to speak to the dead ears of this Senate. Though one should arise from the dead, though a prophet should come and speak to us in our hours of amusement and entertainment or while we are working our political projects and plans, I think he would not be heard by this body.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I left my own seat to get near the Senator so as to hear his remarks, and I should be glad to be allowed to do so, but I can not hear him as near as I am to him here.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I gave my support in the Senate to the bill providing for the admission of the four States, South and North Dakota, Montana, and Washington, as I stated, notwithstanding I had some objections at that time to what was understood to be the constitutions that those States would submit for our ratification; and I particularly objected that the President of the United States by proclamation, after he had examined those constitutions and found them republican in form, should be permitted to admit those States into this sisterhood. In a debate that occurred in the Senate recently we found that there was a good deal of acrimony of feeling that grew out of certain political procedure in the State of Montana. I do not know that the Senate has been more exercised over any question since I have been in this body than over that, all of which would probably have been avoided if we had taken a course of greater deliberation, greater circumspection with regard to this very important subject of admitting States into the Union.

I am here to-day to plead for deliberation and for circumspection. I am here to plead against the possible influence of any political excitement or political expectation upon the question of the admission of any State into the American Union.

I was more attracted to the measure of which I speak by the fact that it was provisional, that it was an enabling law, than by any other feature of the case except one, and that was that it in its results, after those States should come into the Union, would create a cordon of States on the Canadian border, where I have thought ever since my attention has been attracted to public questions that it was very necessary that we should have in full exercise all of the moral force as well as the national power that belongs to our system of government. We filled up the gap along the entire Canadian border except what we might call the pan-handle part of the proposed State of Idaho; and I would prefer the admission of Idaho to Wyoming, so far as that matter is concerned, just upon that account, for as little as we may think so now, the time will arrive, I believe, in the not very distant future, when there will be a very decided impression made upon other countries and other nations by the fact that we have assembled upon the borders of Canada a series of great States whose people, animated by statehood and by all the beneficent consequences that surround that idea, will settle, improve, and strengthen themselves and their country in every possible way.

In 1850 President Taylor sent his annual message to the Congress of the United States, and a little later than that he sent a special message to the Congress urging the admission of California and New Mexico as States into the Union. It is true that in doing that he, in some measure, endeavored to escape a question in regard to slavery which was then threatening the peace of the country, but he presented in those messages, as I remember them, very important considerations aside from the particular question or issue, which induced him to make an earnest recommendation for the admission of California and New Mexico as States into the Union.

His recommendation was urgent, and was on the ground that those areas were fitted for statehood, and that it was a duty we owed our newly acquired citizens under the treaty with Mexico.

That was forty years ago, and President Taylor and his able Cabinet were at that time fully prepared to recommend the admission of New Mexico into the Union along with California upon the population that she then had. I will not go over the reasons which were assigned in that message, except very partially in the argument of another branch of this proposition, to which I expect to advert; but the recommendation of the President's message on that occasion was that West California should be admitted. I am not able to describe precisely what the boundaries of West California were as they were understood at that time, but I think that they cut down considerably into what is occupied almost entirely by the State of Nevada and perhaps came as far east as the country that is now occupied by a portion of the Territory of Utah.

Suppose that from that time to the present we had found the same excuse for delay and postponement in respect of the admission of California into the Union that we have managed to find in respect of the admission of New Mexico, recommended in that same message, what would now be our relative position upon the Pacific coast to the other nations of the earth, with a Territorial band or strip along the Pacific coast? If we had pursued towards California the same policy that we have towards New Mexico, we would have a Territorial band stretching along the Pacific coast, with no more power, no more attractiveness, no more unification or solidification of its communities or its political authority than is found in these other Territorial organizations of our country, all of which are intended to be merely preparatory and temporary.

That magnificent State which stretches now with a seacoast on the Pacific of about 600 miles would have been comparatively a wilderness.

But California, through the attractiveness of its mineral resources as well also as the fertility of a great portion of its soil, drew to it rapidly a population from the Central and Eastern and Southern portions of the Union. The people of the South migrated to that country in quite considerable numbers, and are there now. We found a sufficient element of white population immediately assembled there to justify us, in the opinion of Congress, in receiving California into the Union under conditions and circumstances that were certainly abnormal, that were very much objected to; but it was the pressure of the slavery question that caused the people of the United States at that day suddenly, as I may say, and without any preliminary preparation, to admit California as a State into the Union.

It has always seemed to me that the guaranties contained in the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo in respect to the populations of California, Nevada, New Mexico, and Arizona were obligatory upon the Government of the United States. After a year of probation, in which a Mexican citizen had the right to determine for himself whether he would remain in that country and accept the United States citizenship, the guaranty in our treaty was that they should be entitled to all the rights and privileges and benefits of American citizenship. I do not say that treaty in terms compelled the Congress of the United States to organize those communities into States or into any other form of political government that we choose to adopt, but the understanding was between Mexico and the people of the United States that those people, by force of the treaty, became citizenized, that they should be respected as citizens of the United States, notwithstanding their illiteracy, notwithstanding that they were Spaniards, or that they were Indians. We removed from that people, by the treaty that we adopted, every disqualifying influence to full and complete enjoyment with the citizenship of the United States, and having done that it does not lie in our mouths forty years after that time still to postpone conferring upon those people the rights of statehood merely because it is suggested in some directions that they are not a people who, in point of literature, have the capacity to deal with the questions at the ballot-box which concern themselves and all the rest of the people of the American Union.

New Mexico and Arizona, by the attractiveness of their soil, and far more, I believe, by the attractiveness of their great mineral wealth, have drawn into their borders a very large number of the most intelligent and most enterprising men of the whole country. I believe that to take them man by man among the white inhabitants of those two Territories, those who have gone there would measure with the men of any other State in the American Union in the respects to which I have been alluding. There is an infusion of Indian and Spanish population there, but there are not more Indians, I believe, in New Mexico or Arizona than will be found in Wyoming or in Idaho. That infusion of Indian population, although it is citizenized, we have seen from the report of Governor Prince, of New Mexico, which has been read here by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], are becoming enlightened. They have had long experience in the matter of casting the ballot, in the matter of jury trials. They have accommodated themselves in their experience as well as in the information that they have gained to all of the institutions that prevail throughout the States and Territories of this Union; and they certainly are in a far better state of preparation for the exercise of the rights of citizenship than the negroes in Alabama were when we conferred those rights upon them by an amendment to the Constitution.

You may take the white and Indian and Mexican population in Arizona, and the white and negro population in Alabama, and if there were any possible chance to get a correct general average between the two in respect of the capacity and ability of these different classes of people to govern themselves and to assist in governing other people, the advantage would be found in favor of Arizona and New Mexico. The standard would range higher than it is possible to put it where the suffrage among negro population is universal. Being compelled as I am and as we all are to recognize the equal rights of the negro race to participate in the suffrage and in the holding of office, and in all other matters that concern the affairs of the State and of the United States Government, I am not prepared as an honest man to say that the people of my own State, take them by and large, occupy a more elevated position, a higher range of capacity and ability for local government or for general government than the people of New Mexico and Arizona.

So I do not find that there is any insuperable difficulty in the character of the population in either Arizona or New Mexico for admission as States into the Union. I do not hear of the prevalence of Mormonism in either of those Territories. If it is a fact that it prevails there, it is something that has been overlooked. Neither the priests nor the politicians, I believe, have paid the slightest attention to the existence or non-existence of Mormonism in Arizona and New Mexico.

But the brand of that so-called faith rests upon the people of the Territory of Utah, and it makes no difference if the Gentiles have been able to carry the elections in Salt Lake City; it makes no difference that the offices in that Territory are occupied by Gentiles; it makes no difference, it seems, that the powers of the Government of the United States are being continually exercised to break down that denomination of so-called christian people; it makes no difference that they presented a constitution here in which polygamy was absolutely prohibited beyond the power of repeal, the moral brand has attached to those people in Utah, and they, with not less than 200,000 of population, with a great city, splendid farms, mines that have yielded larger during certain years than any other of the mines of the United States, a most enterprising and orderly population, have been condemned to a perpetual Territorial existence. I suppose that if politicians in the United States had their way with them they would wipe them out with the sponge of extinction; there would be nothing left of them.

Utah has no chance for statehood, and there is but one possible obstruction to it, as everybody will admit, and that is the fact that in their Territorial condition heretofore, and before the Government of the United States by the strong arm of legislation took hold of their institution and virtually abolished their church, certainly abolished it as a political corporation, those people practiced the profession of polygamy and have put themselves in a condition where they have no sympathy, where they have no rights that we think it is necessary to guard and protect, and where we can not conceive or imagine that they are to be entitled to statehood.

There is a moral delinquency, there is a moral stain upon the whole community of Utah that keeps them from coming as a State into the American Union. Why the same people, men and women, should have been permitted to vote a constitution for Wyoming, that is silent as to polygamy and Mormonism, the Republican party understands, and the country will not be slow to comprehend. I am not here for the purpose to-day of suggesting an enlargement of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas so as to include Utah. Why so? Because public opinion is not yet ripe for the admission of that Territory as a State into the Union, and I respect public opinion upon matters of that kind.

But, Mr. President, for forty years, not public opinion merely, but Presidents of the United States and illustrious Cabinets have been suggesting and urging the admission of New Mexico into the Union as some compliance with the implied, if not with the expressed, obligations of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo; and yet we are reluctant, yet we defer it. Why do we defer it? To what time do we defer it? On what account do we defer it? What do we expect to accomplish by the postponement of the admission of New Mexico in favor of the intelligence or the morality or the elevation of those people? Nothing, sir. No Senator has been able to point out and none will be able to point out any fact existing, or expected to exist, the removal of which or the remedy of which will entitle New Mexico to come into the Union. It is an indefinite postponement of her admission, a postponement without cause or reason, without justification, and contrary to the spirit of our own institutions and our own treaties.

Why, sir, there is found one of the most energetic and powerful communities in any Territory in the American Union. Those men have spread their influence, the influence of high civilization, over that Territory in places where it was not expected that a human being could live, and through their irrigation and cultivation of the soil large and abundant crops have sprung up in New Mexico, and upon the plains and the hillsides and river valleys that were considered to be absolutely sterile. I do not know any community in the United States that really compares with the people of New Mexico in the development of their natural resources, considering all the embarrassments and difficulties under which they have labored. They are there with enormous masses of coal at their command, with valuable bodies of iron ore. The fundamental conditions exist there for the building up of the most prosperous of communities. It is the only place I have ever been where a man could dig coke out of the ground that had been made by the sweeping fires that passed over the coal beds that were exposed on the surface of the earth.

The mineral power and wealth of New Mexico is unexampled and inexpressible. It is true she has not got a very great amount of running water; neither has Kansas. Kansas, from the middle of that State back towards Colorado, is as far from being a well watered State almost as New Mexico; yet by irrigation, by strife with the elements of nature, by continual labor, those people have built Kansas up into a wonderful agricultural development. If Kansas had the mineral wealth in her borders that New Mexico has she would be as rich as California.

But are we to neglect Territories entirely either because their people are somewhat illiterate or because the surface of the earth does not bear fruit except under the compulsion of the hand of labor and of skill? If we had waited for these things there is many a highly populous area in the United States to-day that would be a desert at this moment.

But let us come to the other proposition of filling up the boundary line between California and Texas with organized States. Does any man in the Senate fail to see a great opportunity in the achievement of that result? Why, sir, without reference to any future possibility of hostility between ourselves and Mexico, without reference to future strifes that may arise between us, having a view to nothing else than mere commercial competition and the protection of our border there against the intrusion of wild bands of Indians, and against intrusions by Chinese and others, and against smuggling, we have the most important reasons for concentrating upon the southern border of our country between Texas and California organized States that will carry into that area the attractions that draw heavy populations. We need organized States upon our borders far more than we do in the interior. The spread of the power of the United States can not be adequate to the majesty and grandeur of this Government unless our populations are found distributed around our outside borders and are there organized into States.

Now, it was these inducements, as I have said before, more than any other that caused me to vote, against many objections that I had, for the preparatory steps that were necessary to bring into the Union the four great States of which I have been speaking, three of which lie along the frontier of Canada. I do not believe we have accomplished for the people of the United States anything in a half century that is more beneficial, that gives us greater security, that will develop our progress to its full extent, than the bringing in of those four States in the Northwest.

When I voted for those bills I knew that those States would be Republican. I had a mere suspicion or expectation, I will call it, that one of the States might send Democratic Senators to this body. Notwithstanding I felt the need, and do now, of Democratic power in this body as much as any man in it, and would prize it as greatly as any person here, I did not hesitate to vote for the admission of those States into the Union, as I have said, contrary to many objections that otherwise would have prevailed in my mind; nor did my colleagues on this side of the Chamber refuse to vote for that measure. We stood then, as we stand now, for measures that will benefit the country, whether or not they will bring an increase of power in Congress and in the electoral colleges to the great party we belong to. We laid aside the question of how much influence those particular States might exert in the particular Presidential election now approaching.

I trust, sir, that the time will be, if it is not now, in the Senate when those gentlemen who have charge of the great destinies of this country will be able to look beyond a particular Presidential election and the fruits of that election in the distribution of the offices among their friends or power in their own hands, and will be able to read on the more distant horizon of the glory, progress, and the firm establishment of this great country upon principles of government that will endure and bless the people.

But, sir, it has seemed to me that this broad proposition brought forward by the Senator from Arkansas has not met with the slightest favor in this body on the other side of the Chamber. Why it has not I am unable to say. Why it is that we could not take the very same statute, mutatis mutandis, that we applied to the four States that we admitted during the last Congress and apply it to the four ready to be admitted now I can not understand. There is some hidden reason for this. There is some impulse that causes Senators on that side, who brought forward the proposition to admit four States under the provisional act provided in the last Congress, to disregard it entirely when the same proposition in substance is presented from this side of the Chamber.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Alabama permit an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPOONER in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. The Committee on Territories of the Senate pursued the same course in the last Congress with regard to the admission of new States that it has at this session. It reported several bills, and the Senate passed certainly bills for the admission of South Dakota and Washington through the Senate. The proposition to combine the admission of four or five States did not come from the Senate. It came from the other branch of the Legislature, and was reluctantly accepted by the Senate, so far as it was accepted, because we felt that that was the only chance to do justice to the Territories which we had already reported favorably upon and for whose admission we had passed bills through the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, the proposition to admit the four States that we admitted last Congress came from the other side of the Capitol.

This proposition comes from the other side of the Capitol. We concurred in the proposition which came from the other House in the last Congress. Why not send a proposition of the kind that they sent to us in the last Congress back to them now, and ask them if they will not concur in a measure that is so just and so proper? That is the only way, Mr. President, really to eliminate from the subject the suspicion of political influence, and only political influence, as being the operative cause of the passage of this bill.

I regard the proposition of the Senator from Arkansas as being the most important and most beneficial to the people of the United States that has been presented in many years to this body. It will have a reviving effect upon immigration and industry of every kind in all these four States proposed; and after expressing our opinion here upon what the constitutions of these new States ought to be, in order to make them not merely republican in form, but in correspondence with the original thirteen States or the States now in the Union, we can afford then to go on and allow them under their constitutional conventions, organized in due form and by legal authority, to establish for themselves an organic law and to come back here to be admitted into the Union.

It must require some violent emergency to justify us in the action we are about to take.

There is no haste about the admission of Idaho or the admission of Wyoming into the Union that does not equally apply to New Mexico and Arizona, unless it may be the political calculation that when these States are admitted into the Union there will be six more Republican electoral votes to be counted by the Houses in deciding the next Presidential campaign.

Senators can not very well escape these conclusions. They may imagine that the country will not suspect them of such designs, or they may even proclaim that personally they have no such designs, but that this bill was born of that feeling there is not a doubt in the world. Why Wyoming and Idaho have been now selected out of these other Territories to be christened and admitted into this great sisterhood is a matter of pure political calculation and nothing else, and no one is going to be deceived about it.

My judgment is that when we come to play at politics with these great institutions, the right of American States, distributing the powers of statehood in a way that disturbs the balance in the United States so seriously, like powers on a chess-board, as we are about to do, the people of the United States will want to know of us why it is that we pick out particular States to be admitted when there are others seeking admission, that have been seeking admission for years together, which are silently rejected or contumeliously banished from the doors of the committee-rooms and from the Senate.

I am not prepared to say, except as Senators have informed me in their speeches here, how frequently constitutions have been formed and presented to the Congress of the United States for the admission of New Mexico as a State into the Union, but there certainly have been several instances where unobjectionable constitutions, adopted in a form and under circumstances to which there could be no reasonable exception, have been presented to the Senate and the other House and they have been repulsed. Now, that we should turn around on the eve of an approaching Presidential election—for we are very close to it—and more particularly on the eve of an election during the next fall which is likely to be one of very great interest to the people of the United States, and take two States, pick them out of the Territories of the Union and pull them into the Union by the ears, looks to me as if it were a sort of operation that was not to be justified by any sound principles of statesmanship or any great public necessity, but that has found its justification in the minds of its promoters only in the fact that they were increasing their own political influence in the next Presidential election and in other elections.

Why do we select two Territories for admission as States and compel them to elect Republican Senators, and leave two others that may be Democratic States?

I do not know why this proposition to admit the State of Wyoming was taken up first, whether it was accidental or not. I do not know whether the committee shrunk from what is alleged to be the very patent gerrymander that is in the Idaho bill.

Mr. PLATT. Does the Senator desire information as to why it was taken up first?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, I should like to have it.

Mr. PLATT. It was first considered in the Committee on Territories and reported to the Senate on the 20th of January. The consideration of the case of Idaho was delayed on account of the clause in its constitution which was said to disfranchise Mormons from voting, and that bill was not reported to the Senate until perhaps six weeks or two months later. So the Wyoming bill stands first on the Calendar, No. 185, and the Idaho bill stands very much later on the Calendar.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, it is a fortunate circumstance, if the committee have that way to account for it. However, after it was found that the Mormons in Idaho had the right to vote I do not find that the committee made any exception or turned them back to ascertain whether they could not carry this constitution without their support. They took Mormonism in Wyoming and the gerrymander in Idaho!

Mr. President, if it had been Utah that was here in place of Wyoming, Utah being supposed to be Democratic, the stain and abomination of the Church of the Latter-Day Saints would have rested upon it with such an incrustation of immorality as that committee never would have been able to get through it with a pick in a month's work. But when one of these other Territories is to come in as a State, loaded over and interlarded with Mormonism, and the women voting too, there seems to be not the slightest difficulty in her admission, and the committee even boast that it is according to the laws of high morality as well as good politics that this State should be brought into the American Union. I can imagine the gagging, the revulsion, and the physical and moral excitement that must have obtained amongst the committee, and especially with the honorable chairman of it, when he had to hold his nose in committee and vote for the admission of this Territory into the Union with its Mormonism.

New England, which cuts out the pace of morality and everything else, I believe, for the United States, has been particularly loud and earnest in the denunciation of Mormonism, and has sent out a number of commissions and societies of one sort and another, and a large amount of money subscribed and to be expended out there in the elimination of Mormonism in Utah and all that surrounding country. But when Wyoming comes with a gerrymandered vote, so that there is not any possibility in the world of the election of two Democratic Senators from that State, and with the attention of the world called to the fact that the Mormons and their wives have been voting there and have carried the election, there seems to be peace and quiet and harmony and good feeling.

Politics, it is said, Mr. President, makes strange bed-fellows, stranger even than Mormonism. It is a bad day for our country when, denouncing, as we do in our laws and in the execution of them, this moral blight upon the country, the Senate of the United States is found ready to adopt it with all its hideous enormity, and hug it to its bosom for the sake of getting a little political comfort and strength out of it.

We are told in regard to Arizona—I gather this information from the speech of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]—that that Territory was organized on the 24th day of February, 1863, and is therefore older than both Wyoming and Idaho. Arizona has 112,920 square miles, and it had a population in 1890, the last census year, of 44,440, according to the census returns, twice as many as Wyoming had.

In those particulars there is no reason why if Wyoming is prepared for statehood Arizona is not. Arizona is traversed from end to end by the Southern Pacific Railway and in a large part by the Atlantic and Pacific Railway. It lies just to the east of the great State of California, just to the west of the great Territory of New Mexico, and on the south it is bounded by the Mexican line. Whoever has passed through that Territory within the last three or four years is bound to confess his pleasant surprise at the very rapid progress those people have been making in agricultural as well as in mineral development. They are building up bright and beautiful towns. Their people are going up into the gulches of the mountains and confining the waters and distributing them about over the sage-brush plains which we are in the habit of calling deserts, and they are raising fruits equal, if not superior, to California both in quality and in quantity. It certainly is the most delightful country in the world for the growing of fruits, requiring not much irrigation and having the command of a very much larger supply of water than people are in the habit of thinking.

I do not know any community in the United States more active and vigorous and energetic or money-making than the people of Arizona. They are alert about all their interests. They are there upon the Mexican border where they are going to have on the Gulf of California at an early day a very important trade. The bordering country on the Gulf of California, on the east side of that gulf, is very rich, and has an immense commerce that must find its way into Arizona or into California. To get to California much of it has to travel quite twice the distance by sea, that separates it, for instance, from San Diego. You go down the gulf with your ships until you pass the point of the peninsula, and you turn and measure again that full distance, and then you start on your journey to San Diego, to Los Angeles, or to San Francisco, or to the mouth of the Columbia River with your exchangeable productions. Now a very rich country, already penetrated by railroads, it will become a country from which there will be derived by the people of Arizona in the near future an immense trade, such a thing as a man is incapable of understanding or conceiving of unless he has been into that country and knows of its growth and its power.

There is not a more fertile region in the United States except in those places, and there are not very many of them either, where they are covered up by drifts of sand. The detritus from the mountains to the west, most of them very largely supplied with fertilizers of a valuable quality—marl and other fertilizers—is blown by the trade-winds across to the east. Any one who looks at the face of the country will see that there has been in Arizona the distribution of an immense amount of fertile soil that waits for nothing but water to make it one of the most beautiful and productive regions of the earth. In travels which were divided by a space of less than two years through that country I do not know that I ever experienced such astonishment at the progress of a people as I did at those of Arizona.

Now, why should these communities with that vast system of railway, with all their grazing lands, and their mineral lands, and agricultural lands, lands that produce these fine fruits, be kept out of the Union? Who can state a reasonable objection to those people coming as a State into the American Union and being entitled to all the privileges and advantages of statehood? Who can answer the argument or the point that in a national sense it is for the security of our commerce as well as for its expansion that there should be two States upon that border occupied by the present Territorial limits of Arizona and New Mexico? Who does not know that if the invitation of permanent government and statehood was extended to the enterprising people of the United States to go into those Territories and settle them up, the people would flock there and immediately build on the border of Mexico, which is now an unmarked line in a desert land, one of the most thrifty communities to be found anywhere in the American Union?

What are we to derive through a people like that, who have access to all of that magnificent mesa that commences to rise at the Gila River and ascends in a slope that is imperceptible to the City of Mexico, filled with minerals of a most valuable character, including large deposits of iron and petroleum, with grazing ground of almost unimaginable extent, a sugar-producing country, a fruit-producing country, a country that must yield its wealth through a proper traffic into the hands of the men who will occupy and control the States of New Mexico and Arizona? Who can not see that it has become an important duty of the people of the United States to organize statehood there, just as important as it was to organize it in Washington or in Montana?

Mr. President, when we play laggard in order to contribute what we can to the strength of a political party in a Presidential election and make the destiny of great States to hang upon the miserable point as to whether they are going to vote Democratic or Republican in the next Presidential campaign, when we delay doing our duty for considerations of this kind, we need not expect to be excused or overlooked by the indignant people of the United States. They will call us to account for it. They understand what we are dealing with. They know that we have higher functions to perform here than merely to elect a Republican or a Democrat to the Presidency.

In respect to the admission of States into this Union, which after they have been admitted are absolutely inextinguishable and must stand as a permanent political power as long as the Government stands, they know that in the exercise of that high power on our part we are dealing with the gravest and most important question that we ever have to touch in our Senatorial capacity, and they will expect an account from us of reasons that are satisfactory, reasons that are conclusive, to sustain the necessity which we are now pleading here for delay in the admission of these Territories as States into the Union.

The people of the United States can see that if Arizona and New Mexico and Idaho and Wyoming are brought in together there could not possibly be a decided political calculation involved in the act. They would understand that the Senate of the United States, for once at least, had separated itself from these minor and miserable considerations and had got its consent to stand up and look the questions of the future in the face and to shape the destiny of this great country according to its political and geographical necessities and the rights and interests of its people. That is what we ought to do. Now that we have the opportunity we ought to show to the people of the United States that we consider their welfare in the future and the balance of power among the States as being of far greater consideration than the re-election of Mr. Harrison, for instance, to the Presidency.

But Arizona stays out. So far as I can see now, Arizona has no prospect of being admitted as a State into the Union. It seems that we want upon our Mexican border there a howling wilderness; that we want a place where smugglers can tramp across the line and Indians can come and invade us without resistance. It seems that we want a place down there that shall draw no trade from the great and rich resources of Northern Mexico, which is cut off from access to the sea, at least from access to the Atlantic coast entirely, and which will pour in its productions upon the great railroad that we have built through there and seek an exit at San Diego or at New Orleans.

It seems, sir, that we want everything in respect of these Territories to remain in statu quo until they can come into the Senate with a pledge of political support for the party that happens to be in power, whether it is Democratic or whether it is Republican. Any one of those Territories could be admitted here to-day by a Republican House and Senate or by a Democratic House and Senate when they would give a reasonable security to the Congress of the United States that their vote in the next Presidential election would be in accord with the prevailing sentiment of the party that might have the power in the Government.

Well, I deplore it. I think, Mr. President, that it is unworthy. I think there ought to be an indication on our part of a higher view of our duty than that. We tried to set a better precedent here in this body when we voted for the admission of four States into this Union, believing that every one of them would be Republican, and so it turned out. But you have selected now two States, Wyoming and Idaho, and the voting down of the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas of course means, as we know it is already decreed, that the Territory of Wyoming is to be admitted into the Union, so far as Congress is concerned, before nightfall. We understand that perfectly; and in trying to state objections to it I am merely calling attention to the desperate exigency which seems to pervade the majority party in the Senate to force them to vote against what I must believe are their personal convictions in many cases, in large numbers of cases, in order that they may get this measure through and get the political influence of this State in the next Presidential election.

The governor of the Territory of Wyoming has made a report here which I have looked through as carefully as I have had time to do, though I confess I have not read every word in it, and I may misstate some part of it. That report seems to be directed, not as an apology or plea for his interference with the affairs of the General Government and of other States in the American Union, but is an assertion on his part of a right by virtue of his being governor of that Territory to assemble his people in a convention to adopt a constitution and to make all necessary preparation for coming into the Union.

Now, there was a certain degree of immodesty and a certain degree of haste about that action which I think is very conspicuous and not at all creditable, when a Republican committee in the Senate had at the last Congress reported a bill to enable the Territory of Wyoming and other Territories to make all necessary preparation in legal form for the voting of the people upon a constitution to be submitted to the Congress of the United States for its ratification.

The governor would never have presented that petition perhaps to a Democratic Senate for the reason that he would have supposed, and very naturally, that we would have been averse to receiving it because of the politics of that Territory. To such a low degree have the politicians of this country, the leaders of the people, as they are termed, descended in their comprehension and their estimate of the rights and liberties of this country that a Republican Territory would perhaps not have presented this petition at all, founded upon this state of facts, to a Democratic Senate, and a Democratic Territory would not have presented it to a Republican Senate.

There has been a little doubt and controversy about the politics of New Mexico, for instance; probably some about the politics of Arizona, and some assertion in regard to the politics of Utah, that that is Democratic; and when those Territories, or any of them, come to a Republican Senate for the purpose of being admitted into the Union it is considered as somewhat presumptuous and a very adventurous act, to say the least, that they should come. Now, why is it that when the population of a Territory is Democratic or when it is Republican it feels that the frown of the Senate will be upon it if the political party in domination in the Senate is opposed to the politics of the Territory? Why is that? It is because the people of the United States feel that there is no use to address even the Senate of the United States upon a question of conscience and justice and right judgment when we have the behests and demands of their party to satisfy. Well, that is a deplorable state of public opinion, but still our people act upon it continually. And the conduct of the Senate justifies them.

Notwithstanding the Senate Committee on Territories had reported the bill, and notwithstanding he knew that at this session of Congress that bill would be reported again if he did not get here with his constitution, without any great agitating question being up there, like the slavery question, to be anticipated or to be avoided, without any question, indeed, to excite peculiar or enthusiastic action, the governor of that Territory, upon the invitation of the commissioners of the county court, and he says some of the people, although he does not give their names, concluded that he would issue a proclamation in which he would forestall the action of Congress. He would not wait for it. He was too impatient of statehood to delay in making the application; and he knew, or believed he knew, that he would meet in the two Houses of Congress politicians who were too impatient of increasing and accumulating their power in the electoral college to refuse to bring the Territory in, it made no difference what the irregularity might be.

Now, is there any occasion for a resort to irregular action upon this subject? Is there any occasion here presented why the Territories of Wyoming and Idaho might not as well wait for an enabling act as Washington and the two Dakotas and Montana had to wait, and were compelled to wait, for the action of Congress? Who can draw a distinction between the two cases based upon any other consideration or any other conclusion than the mere fact that a Presidential election is approaching? Of all the people in the United States who is so ignorant that he does not know that the action taken by the governor in this emergent form was intended merely to precipitate upon the Congress of the United States as a party question the admission of Wyoming into the Union?

Did those people expect to suffer materially by delay? Was there any human being in the Territory of Wyoming whose property interests or other interests were suffering by the delay that would have been consequent upon waiting for an enabling act, as the Dakotas did, and as Montana and Washington did? Nothing of that sort can be urged. There is no urgency or emergency to be provided for in the action we are taking upon this case. It is just a cool political maneuver, handling this great and serious question, the admission of a State into the Union, as a piece of political machinery, for the mere sake of getting three more votes in the electoral college in favor of a Republican for President. That is the whole of it.

The governor assembled his convention. He did not wait for the Territorial Legislature to authorize him to do it. With no more power than the president of a town meeting he essayed to do something that was not within the purview of his jurisdiction or capacity in any respect. The governor of a Territory has no more right to call a convention of the people for the purpose of gaining admission into the Union than he would have a right to call a convention of the people for the purpose of expressing their desire to leave the United States and to be annexed to Canada. It was a presumptuous violation of his duty, and the fact that he could sign his name as governor to a paper of that kind only showed that he was a man who would usurp powers that did not belong to him, who would violate laws that were binding upon him, who neglected and rejected also the judgment and proceeding and action of Congress, to throw in our faces a constitution; and who would say, "I, as governor, have proclaimed a convention, and we have ordained a constitution, and here it is; take it, and take us into the Union as a State."

I undertake to say that, in view of the fact that this Senate has been Republican for several years, that a Republican committee of this body had prepared and reported a bill providing for an election to be held according to law, where the penalties of the law could be brought to re-enforce its authority and its power, and to prevent men, or women either, from voting unless they were entitled to vote under the laws of the Territory, or the laws provided by Congress, and when Congress was diligent and active through its Republican Senate in making all necessary preparations for the regular bringing in of a State into the American Union through processes that should be satisfactory to everybody, for its governor to start out on the recommendation of the commissioners of the different counties, or several of them, and issue his proclamation calling a constitutional convention, was an act of assumption and usurpation on his part that ought not to receive the toleration of Congress, and certainly does not entitle him to the encomiums that have been loaded upon him in the report of this committee.

But he issued his proclamation and it is found in his report, in which he goes on to apologize for having exercised this authority, by saying that a good many of the people of Wyoming asked him to do it and the boards of county commissioners had asked him to do it. The apology is, in principle, as bad as the act of usurpation. No one ever made him a lawgiver, and any number of petitions could not confer such powers upon him. What have the county commissioners to do with organizing a State government? Why did he not call in the justices of the peace and the constables, the militia officers, and the members of the church, and the preachers? Why did he not unite all the forces, political, military, and moral, in boosting up this petition on which he bases his authority, his power, and his idea of duty in preparing the Territory for statehood? The election was to be held at a time appointed by him, and then, in order to get further assistance and the semblance of legal right, he associated with himself two other functionaries of the government, one the chief-justice, and the other, I believe, the auditor or the treasurer of the Territory.

A chief-justice of a Territory ought to have no more extrajudicial power or political influence than the Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. What would be thought of a Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States who would, in virtue of his high functions and powers and because he was petitioned by people from different wards or from different societies in Washington City, call a convention together to adopt for the District of Columbia a local government in which the people should be entitled to vote and in which they should have a Legislature to do that for them which we so often neglect to do for them in consequence either of inattention or for want of time?

Why could not the Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, as well as the chief-justice of the supreme court of Wyoming Territory, unite with the commissioners here or with some other functionaries in office, and prepare an apportionment of votes amongst the different wards of this city to elect delegates to a convention who, when they had assembled, would prepare a system of laws, if not exactly organic, yet approaching to it very closely, in which the negroes should be entitled to vote in the District of Columbia as they are entitled to vote in Alabama?

Why could they not do that? What respect would Congress pay to the ukase of a commissioner or of the Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States who might assemble a political body here to determine upon the rights of the people of the District of Columbia to vote at elections, or to have elections held and officers chosen by the voice of the people? Congress would spurn such conduct, and that Chief-Justice would be impeached for departing from the line of his authority, from the functions of his high office, and undertaking to influence or use his powers of office in a branch of government with which he is not connected, and in which, under the division of the powers of our Government, he is forbidden to participate.

We do not allow negroes to vote in Washington City, neither do we allow the white people to vote. A Republican Congress when it was two-thirds Republican in both branches disfranchised the negroes and disfranchised the whites in order to break down the negroes, and they broke up all civil government here, except that peculiarly despotic idea which now prevails, two-thirds civil and one-third military, under which these people are ruled. Congress broke up that government and destroyed it; they destroyed the city council of Washington City, a municipality which had gone on for many years, electing its mayor and common council and controlling the local affairs of this District which now has 240,000 population, fully three times as many as the State of Wyoming. They had gone on for many years in the exercise of local municipal authority and had thereby relieved the Congress of the United States from great responsibility and an enormous tax upon its time and energies.

The people here had a voice, like other free peoples in the United States, to say something about the choice of those who should guide and assist them in the administration of the laws in their midst. But because the negroes came in here from Maryland and Virginia after the war was over, and united with those who were here before, Congress destroyed suffrage out and out, and government out and out, except the mere despotic form we have got now, merely in order to keep the negroes from voting. If there had been no negroes in the District of Columbia, or if they had been in a large minority, this curious commentary would not have been presented which we exhibit to the world, of this little imperium in imperio, a despotic government here in the District of Columbia, under the shadow of our Capitol, where neither a negro nor a white man is allowed to vote or to have any voice in his government, and yet all around in every direction, in every Territory, and in every State the air is made resonant with the clamors of men for "a free ballot and a fair count."

Senators and Representatives in Congress and high functionaries in the United States Government own large property in the District of Columbia, and they are not willing to submit it to the control of negroes, either as to taxation or in any other respect. The Constitution denies to the people of the District of Columbia any of the rights of statehood, and Congress has denied to them any voice or right of participation in their own government. There is not a negro man in the South who has not more political power than the best qualified resident of this District.

We admit the doctrine of equality before the law of the negro with the white man everywhere in the United States except at the Capital. They tore down these rights here and trampled them under foot, and continued to do so, and will continue to do so as long as there is any important negro influence in this District; and so they destroyed the suffrage of the white and the black and destroyed every semblance of government republican in its form, and substituted for it a government here in this District that is no more republican in its form than the government of the Czar of Russia or the Sultan of Turkey is.

But the Chief-Justice of the United States, uniting with the head of the commission down here, concludes that he will hold a convention and rectify all this, and he will have a Legislature organized, and the people shall vote, that he will have a mayor elected and ready to take his office and everything ready and prepared to demand of Congress that his proceedings shall be accepted, ratified, and confirmed.

Our first attention is called to the Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, then to the commissioners of the District of Columbia who have been participating in this proceeding while Congress has been assiduously engaged in legislating for the District of Columbia. We naturally inquire, "Why do you wish to upturn and overturn and uproot this government that we are conducting here, and why do you, Mr. Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, leave your high position, mingle yourself in a political community, and apportion votes between the different wards of this District?" That was what was done in Wyoming. The chief-justice there came down from his awful perch with his toga around him, and went straggling out into the slums and purlieus of politics and so engaged himself in order to give something of mock dignity to the proceeding in the distribution and apportionment of votes that should be cast in the different counties of Wyoming that were to elect delegates to take their seats in a convention.

I think, Mr. President, if the laws of the country and the majesty of Congress and the fairness and integrity of the great committee of this body having the Territorial interests of this country in charge were ever insulted, it was by this voluntary act on the part of the governor and chief-justice and auditor, if that was the man who was associated with them, in hastening up this work in Wyoming.

Everybody knows that if that had been a Democratic State which had tried to come in here in that way it could not get in here; it would be an impossibility; and this act on the part of the governor and chief-justice and the auditor or treasurer would be denounced in this Senate and from one end of this country to the other, and it would be remarked upon as the most ridiculous and pretentious and absurd adventure that was ever made, that a set of men, 7,500, or something like that, out of 18,000 voters, who voted in the preceding election, should come here and say that they had ratified a constitution for those people, that one-third of the voters, and not all of them by two thousand, voting in favor of the constitution, had come and made that instrument obligatory upon the Government and people of that State and also of the United States! There is one point about that convention that I have never understood. I have not been able as yet to ascertain what the vote was or how many people voted in the election for delegates. Perhaps the chairman of the committee can tell me.

Mr. PLATT. I beg pardon; I did not hear the Senator's inquiry.

Mr. MORGAN. I say I have never been able to ascertain how many people voted in the election for the delegates to that convention.

Mr. PLATT. I do not know that there was any return.

Mr. MORGAN. Perhaps there were no returns. I do not know whether there were any or not. There must be some place where there would be a record kept of them if there were any.

Mr. PLATT. I have no doubt there was a record. The election was conducted according to the same rules which govern the election of Representatives, and the returns were made in the same way, but they have not been communicated to us.

Mr. MORGAN. That is what this governor says about it, I know. The Senator gets his information from the governor.

Mr. PLATT. I think the governor is a man to be relied upon to tell the truth.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no doubt you think so, but I should like very much to see the returns. Can any gentleman in the Senate point me out to the place where these returns are?

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator will get them if he will go out to Wyoming, I suppose.

Mr. MORGAN. What part of Wyoming?

Mr. CULLOM. In the capital.

Mr. MORGAN. In what office?

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Illinois does not know and I do not know. If I wanted to find those returns I would not find a path leading in that direction in any statute or regulation of law that I know of. They might just as well have been burned as any other way. There was no compulsion upon any person to make them. There was no certificate given by any officer that they were true. There was nobody authorized to issue a certificate of election to any man who received votes at the election.

There was no one to administer an oath to any man who went into that convention that he would obey and support the Constitution of the United States, and I do not suppose it was so. I do not see any evidence of it. We do not know how many men voted and how many women voted. We do not know how many Mormons voted and their frequent wives. We do not understand anything about it. That part of the record has been dropped out. It has been committed to sudden and awful darkness, and not one word has been ventured in all this debate and in all these reports and in all this examination about who it was that voted for delegates to that convention; and whether there were 3,000 of them or 13,000 of them nobody knows. We take it upon the character of the governor, says the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. CULLOM. The governor is a sworn officer.

Mr. MORGAN. The governor is a sworn officer, but there is not in his oath any allusion whatever to the fact that he is to call a convention, or that he will hold an honest one. He is no more sworn to do that than he swears that he will not rob a man, or swears that he will not violate any moral duty in the Decalogue. It is foreign to him. He can not be sworn to hold a convention. You might as well swear a Senator in this body to hold a convention as the governor of that Territory, because all that he did and could do in that matter lay entirely outside of the purview of his power. If he observed his oath to discharge the duties of his office faithfully and to obey the laws and Constitution of the United States he would not have held that convention.

You might as well ask the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], who was once our honored Secretary of the Treasury, and was remarkably successful in the discharge of the duties of that office—you might as well ask him, in virtue of his oath to support the Constitution of the United States, to leave his seat in this Chamber and go back and usurp the powers of Secretary of the Treasury as to ask that governor to make the obligations of his oath extend to a convention that he had no right to call, that was contrary to law when he called it. A man who had the obligation and duty resting upon him of exercising the functions of a Territorial governor had no right to throw himself into the face of Congress which was proceeding to prepare an act, and doing it with all reasonable diligence, to leave it to the people according to law whether they would come into this Union or not, to anticipate the action of the Senate and of Congress, and to patch up in his own way a State government that he would bring here and submit to us with the demand that we should receive it.

The constitution that they adopted on that occasion, Mr. President, is not a constitution that would have been adopted by any of the original thirteen States. It has some provisions in it which are entirely out of harmony with the provisions of every constitution of the original thirteen States, and entirely out of harmony with the Constitution of the United States. Now, whether we can waive that on this occasion or not, I will wait to see. This bill provides and declares:

That the constitution which the people of Wyoming have formed for themselves be, and the same is hereby, accepted, ratified, and confirmed.

That is a declaration that Congress never can withdraw. When the State comes in with that constitution, Congress by repealing or amending this act never can withdraw that declaration that "the same is hereby accepted, ratified, and confirmed."

I do not think that this is apt language to use in an act of Congress in admitting a State into the Union, for the Constitution says that we may admit States into the Union, but it does not say that we shall have the power to accept, ratify, and confirm their constitutions.

The leading proposition found in that constitution on the delicate subject of suffrage is one that meets the personal opposition of a number of Republican Senators on this floor whom I have heard express themselves on different occasions upon that question of female suffrage. It is a question in this country that never has had a purely political significance. We have not permitted it because gentlemen on both sides of the Chamber have divided in their opinions upon the policy of the rightfulness of female suffrage.

This constitution, as prepared by an assemblage called a convention, provides in section 1 of article 6, on the subject of suffrage:

SEC. 1. The rights of the citizens of the State of Wyoming to vote and hold office shall not be denied or abridged on account of sex. Both male and female citizens of this State shall equally enjoy all civil, political, and religious rights and privileges.

Congress says that this provision "is hereby accepted, ratified, and confirmed," so that we shall have, when Wyoming is admitted into the Union, the consent of two governments to that proposition in this constitution, and that consent will be given in such form that thereafter it can not be withdrawn by Congress.

Now, so far as the laws of Wyoming are concerned, when this constitution has been adopted a woman is eligible to any office in that State, and she has also a right to vote. She may be an elector for President, for that is peculiarly a State office—not only an office whose authority is to be derived directly from the State through State laws, and only through State laws, but it is an office whose functions must be discharged within the State and under the State laws. So a woman may be in the State of Wyoming after this an elector for President and Vice-President. Now, if an elector for President and Vice-President, why may she not be a member of Congress?

Mr. PAYNE. She can be.

Mr. MORGAN. No, she can not be as long as the Constitution of the United States stands; but we are permitting a State here to form for her own people and organize law that is directly in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, and that upon the great and delicate subject of suffrage.

The Constitution of the United States provides that—

The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature.

There is no doubt that a woman in Wyoming may be a senator in that State, and may be a member of the house; she may be a militia general, or a justice of the peace, or a judge of the supreme court, or an overseer of the roads, or any other thing. She is eligible to all offices, and no political distinction can be made on account of sex in that State. The State, having qualified her for holding an office, has the right, of course, to give her a commission to hold any office that can be elected by the people. She has a right to hold office, and therefore she has a right to run for an office, and having the right to run for an office and hold it, she has a right to a commission whenever she is chosen to an office, and it makes no difference to the State of Wyoming whether that office is to be exercised inside the State or outside of it. When she represents the State or any portion of the people of the State, and represents them upon certificates of the officers of the State, after having been elected to the position, then, of course, Wyoming has done all that it can do to give her the status that is necessary to enable her to represent that State in the electoral college, or in the House of Representatives, or in the Senate.

Under the law as it stood in the State of Washington, as decided in the case of Bloomer vs. Todd, which was read here by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], it was expressly decided that a woman could not vote at a general election, and that notwithstanding the qualifications conferred upon her by the Territorial Legislature, that vote was contrary to the Constitution of the United States. A woman brought an action against the managers of an election for refusing to receive her vote and put it in the ballot-box. It was decided in that court that it was a violation of the Constitution of the United States, which had been adopted by the common consent of the people upon the idea that masculinity was one of the qualifications for holding office and one of the qualifications for voting.

Now, when your female Representative comes into the House from the State of Wyoming, how will you get along with this provision after she is qualified and commissioned, as the constitution of Wyoming requires shall be done to an office to which she is eligible under the laws of that State, how will we get along with this:

No person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained the age of twenty-five years, and been seven years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen.

What are you going to do with that masculine pronoun when your female Representative comes here and demands a seat? You accept, ratify, and confirm what is in that constitution conferring upon women the right to hold office and the right of suffrage, and yet when they come here under your ratification and your permission and your invitation and go to the House of Representatives you will quote that part of the Constitution to show that in consequence she can not quite get a seat in that body.

No person shall be a Senator, who shall not have attained to the age of thirty years, and been nine years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of the State for which he shall be chosen.

It will be a source of unspeakable affliction to me, after some bright, splendid woman from Wyoming shall be elected to the Senate of the United States and shall come and claim to take the arm of the honorable Senator from Connecticut, who is chairman of this Committee on Territories, to be conducted to the President's desk if some churlish Senator should rise and ask the question whether the gentleman is qualified for the position that he wants to take an oath to to qualify him for in this body.

Mr. CULLOM. You would not ask it?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not think I would have the audacity to do it, but if I had the audacity to vote for this bill I think I would feel bound to do it. [Laughter.] I would do almost anything of that sort.

Again the Constitution provides that—

The Senate shall choose their other officers, and also a President pro tempore in the absence of the Vice-President, or when he shall exercise the office of the President of the United States.

I should dislike very much to see our magnificent looking Vice-President supplanted by the handsomest woman that might come even from Wyoming. We could not afford to give up the prestige of our sex upon a question so important as that. She could not be President, she could not be Vice-President of the United States, and equally she could not be President pro tempore of the Senate. That would be a great pity, because I know with what perfect joy and delight our very handsome and gallant President pro tempore of the Senate would yield his position to a splendid Senatoreess coming from Wyoming.

The Constitution further provides that—

No Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States, etc. Every bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the President of the United States; if he approve he shall sign it.

So the Constitution describes the President as being masculine in gender.

We now see how much we lost by that provision of the Constitution in preventing the people of the United States from exercising their power, which doubtless they would otherwise have done, in the election of a splendid woman to the Presidency when we had an opportunity six years ago. There stood a bar sinister, a real bar sinister, in the Constitution, to obstruct the way of our aspiring ladies to the Presidency of the United States. Wyoming qualifies the women, of lawful age, whatever that may be in feminine conception, to receive the votes of electors for President and Vice-President, but the Constitution of the United States, which is so out of line with the constitution of Wyoming, persists in the requirement that the President and Vice-President shall be men, that a woman could not discharge the duties of the office. Thus, the Constitution says that—

Every order, resolution, or vote to which the concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the same shall take effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two-thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives.

And further, when we come to some of the powers conferred upon the President by the Constitution. It says in section 3 of Article II:

He shall from time to time give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient; he may, on extraordinary occasions, convene both Houses, or either of them, and in case of disagreement between them, with respect to the time of adjournment he may adjourn them to such time as he shall think proper; he shall receive ambassadors and other public ministers; he shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed, and shall commission all the officers of the United States.

The delegates from every one of the original thirteen States were in the convention that framed the Federal Constitution, and they perfectly understood at that time the common agreement amongst the American people that women were not to vote, and certainly they were not to hold office. Now, if we admit the State of Wyoming we can not admit her upon a footing of equality with the other States, with this provision in her constitution. She can put it in her laws if she chooses to do it, and we have nothing to say about it, but when she comes with an organic law which we accept, ratify, and confirm, and it contains this broad distinction between Wyoming and the other States of the American Union, and especially the original thirteen, we find it is a matter of impossibility that she can come in on terms of equality with the other States.

Mr. PAYNE. If the Senator will allow me to ask a question, I should like to know whether, in his judgment, these little technical objections would not be more than overcome by the moral influence that a woman representative in this body from Wyoming might exert in our committee-rooms and in this Chamber during executive sessions? Would not a great many of those habits, smoking, chewing, etc., be remedied and corrected by the influence of a lady member from Wyoming? It might be embarrassing, I know, to the dignified Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], who is not present, in calling her his esteemed and honorable Mrs. or Miss somebody from Wyoming, and it might embarrass the Presiding Officer in addressing or calling to order the Honorable Mrs. or Miss from Wyoming. [Laughter.] But would not that be more than counterbalanced by the moral advantages arising from her presence?

Mr. MORGAN. That brings up to my mind a little more serious view of this question than the Senator expected to raise when he put his question. I have never objected to woman suffrage on the ground that women were not mentally competent to exercise the ballot, or mentally competent to frame laws. The wisest people that I have had the privilege of knowing in this world were women, and certainly the best. Those who give more of good counsel to the human family from the beginning of life to the end of it, and those who are most constant and assiduous in enforcing it upon mankind in all conditions and situations of life, and especially amongst those to whom they are nearly related, are the women of the world. There has been committed to them, in my judgment, by the hand of Divine Providence the most beautiful and sacred trust that was ever committed to mankind, not excepting the priests themselves who officiated at the altars and through whom were handed down Divine ordinances for dissemination and administration amongst the people of the earth.

The good influence of women, if it could be banished from society, or from politics, or from the state, or even from the savage armies that confront each other in battle, would strip all men engaged in public duty and public service of half their power to serve the country. The influence of women is the unseen power which thrills the human soul with an energy that is almost divine and puts in action all the vital forces and keeps them in action, as well as in restraint.

In my opinion, sir, when the great Creator intrusted them with these full powers in this imperial domain, when He intrusted women with this wide sweep of command over all the families of men, He not only imposed upon her the most important and delicate office that has ever been intrusted to the members of the human family, but He qualified her for this exalted station and made it the duty of man to see that she had a full and fair opportunity, without disturbance and without sharing the burden of his duties, to exercise that beautiful and holy office. Its duties are more than enough to break down and destroy with its burden and cares any man who ever lived.

It is not to be denied that a woman purifies and makes more moral any body of men engaged in any honest business that we can name than they would be without her assistance and counsel. The churches of this country would sink to nothing, they would be abandoned to the rats and the owls, if it were not for the sustaining hand of the women of the land. All the beautiful establishments of charity and love that bless mankind individually and collectively would perish from our history were it not for the sustaining hand and power of that delicate helpmate that God has given to us.

It is not the moral influence of the woman upon the ballot that I am objecting to, and it is not to get rid of that, or to silence or to destroy such influences that I oppose it, but it is the immoral influences of the ballot upon women that I deprecate and would avoid. I do not want to see her drawn in contact with the rude things of this world where the delicacy of her senses and sensibilities would be constantly wounded by the attrition with bad and desperate and foul politicians and men. Such is not her function and is not her office; and if we degrade her from the high station that God has placed her in to put her at the ballot-box, at political or other elections, we unman ourselves and refuse to do the duties that God has assigned to us.

I can say for myself and those who are dearest to me of all the objects in this life, that I would leave a country where it was necessary that my wife and daughters should go to the polls to protect my liberties. I would just as soon see them shoulder their guns and go like Amazons into the field and fight beneath the flag for my liberties as to see them muster on election day for such purposes. My duty is to preserve holy and untouched the stainless garments of these splendid ministers of God's love and mercy to mankind, and not to impose upon them the afflictions that men undergo, and many can scarcely endure, in the political controversies and strifes that are inseparably connected with our free governments.

Our Government, Mr. President, is a peculiar one in this respect, and it is an excellent one. We have 65,000,000 of people in the United States, and, so far, we have recorded but a little over 12,000,000 voters in the ballot-box in any Presidential election, so that about every fifth person in this country is endowed with the privilege of voting. This privilege of voting is a very great privilege, it is a very great power, its value is inestimable. But why do we select amongst all the intelligence of the United States, and amongst all its virtuous and good classes of people, and amongst all the vicious and ignorant people a man twenty-one years of age and upwards to exercise the voting power? What foundation is there for this regulation of the ballot? Is it a mere ancient tradition of the Anglo-American or Anglo-Saxon race that we pursue in giving to men, and only to men, this power? No, sir.

The family is an institution of which man is the head in this country, and that is the true factor, the true unit in the whole arrangement of our Government. This lies at the foundation of every principle we have adopted and of every organic act we have performed in building Government up for the benefit of the people. The United States Government, whether we consider it in respect of its application to States or to the Government at large, is based upon the family relation and upon nothing else.

The families of this country are considered to consist of about five members on an average. One voter represents five people, and he is not responsible, individually, for his opinions or for his vote to the people he represents absolutely. Their mouths are closed whether they are grown women or half-grown boys or young men nineteen or twenty years of age splendidly educated and perhaps more capable than the head of that family, the man who is over twenty-one, to vote. He is not responsible for his opinions to any member of the constituency that he represents. He is the only man in the United States who has a constituency assigned to him by law to which he is not in any sense responsible. They can not turn him off and they can not prevent his voting for them. A negro in Alabama, no matter how ignorant he may be, votes for five people. He may vote intelligently or he may vote otherwise; he may vote upon race prejudices or he may not, but that man is a representative, and you can not get rid of him as a representative of the other four people in the group.

The character of the voter, as a representative man, has nothing to do with his authority to rule by his vote the four other persons who are silent.

Whatever he may be, his acts are binding on the other four persons in the group he represents.

Mr. PLATT. I do not like to interrupt the Senator, but I think he will allow me to ask a question. Suppose the head of the family, the father, happens to have died and leaves the charge of the family on his wife.

Mr. MORGAN. In my State, when that occurs, there is a negro man found ready in the neighborhood to vote for them, and you compel him to represent them.

Mr. CULLOM. You will not let him vote?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, we let him vote if he is a pretty smart negro.

Mr. SPOONER. And if he votes the right ticket?

Mr. MORGAN. We let ten negroes vote in the South where you let one poor white man in your factories vote according to his will.

Mr. CULLOM. Not by any means.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir; and we shall be able to prove it, and will prove it to your satisfaction before long.

Mr. CULLOM. We shall show you the contrary.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. I sympathize very much with the sentiments which the Senator, with his characteristic eloquence, has uttered here; but I have always understood the question was, so far as the constitution of a proposed State was concerned, was mainly whether it was republican in form, not whether in all its phases and provisions it met the approval of Senators or was precisely what we would make if we were to frame it. Does the Senator from Alabama claim that there is anything in the constitution of Wyoming which takes it out from the category of a government which is republican in form?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not know that I should be able to answer otherwise than by reciting the constitutional history of the United States to show what sort of government is republican in form. If that expression had been used three hundred years ago, I think that nobody could have given a very distinct definition of it.

Mr. SPOONER. I suppose the Senator would not insist that a constitution in order to be republican in form must be precisely like the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. No.

Mr. SPOONER. I speak of the structure of it.

Mr. MORGAN. I make all due allowance for that idea, but three hundred years ago if that question had been put to an intelligent man it would have puzzled him to state what was a government republican in form. But at the time of the adoption of our Constitution we had thirteen States, each one of which was a republican State and with a republican form of government, and the constituent elements and powers of government, as they were recognized in those States, furnished the best criterion that I can possibly cite you to of what is a government republican in form. And then when we add to that fact and that definition—for that is a definition, really—the other proposition that the new States to be admitted into the Union must be admitted upon an equality with the original thirteen, we have another thought that we are obliged to pay attention to.

So I maintain that any State in the American Union that undertakes to confer upon any citizen powers that are not found, rights and liberties that are not found in the organic law of the United States as it has been understood for a hundred years down to the present time, that government, if its act has any effect at all upon any other human being, especially if it has an effect outside of its own limits, has done something which deprives that State of the possession and exercise of a government that is republican in form.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator will allow me. I have not been and I am not a convert to the doctrine of woman suffrage—

Mr. MORGAN. I understand the Senator is apologizing for his present attitude.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not apologizing at all. When I find occasion to apologize I will not do it in the Senator's time. But not only this provision but some others, if I were making a constitution, I would omit. I rose simply to call the attention of the Senator to what is asserted to be a fact by a gentleman who brings it to my notice, that in New Jersey under the Articles of Confederation women had the right of suffrage, and New Jersey became a State of the Union with woman suffrage, and women were not deprived of the right until 1807. So that, perhaps, has no merit of absolute novelty from the standpoint of the Senator's argument.

Mr. MORGAN. Did New Jersey's constitution provide that women shall vote and hold office?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know as to that.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion in the line of a question?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin in the proposition he lays down, that in the matter of the admission of a State which has framed a constitution in an orderly and proper and legal way, the best way being, in my own judgment, according to the provisions of an enabling act of Congress passed previously, the provisions of that constitution should not concern us, provided the framework be republican and that it makes a republican form of government.

But where a proposed State is claiming admission into the Union under the circumstances which surround this case and which have been portrayed by the Senator from Alabama, irregular in my opinion in many respects, the motive power that set the constitutional machinery in motion not having originated in Congress, not having originated in any of those regular ways which are consecrated by precedent and have commended themselves to the American people, but where there is a movement on the part of a portion only of a people to get up an instrument which they call a constitution for the whole people, and the act admitting them undertakes to say (because it was necessary to say it) that we approve, confirm, and ratify that constitution, then a very different question is presented to the Senate of the United States; and each individual Senator, I think, in duty is called upon to scrutinize that constitution in a way that he would not be called upon to scrutinize it if it had come to us as the result of an enabling act, and where we find a provision so eccentric, so unusual, so out of the path of American precedents as a provision that allows woman suffrage, then I think that is sufficient ground for a Senator who believes that woman suffrage is inimical to the best interests of the States to vote against the admission of that State into the Union, coming as it does and knocking at the door under the circumstances I have stated.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator from Alabama will permit me, the question which I put to the Senator from Alabama was not directed to the question discussed by the Senator from Delaware concerning the regularity or irregularity of the proceedings which led to the adoption or alleged adoption of this constitution, but it was a question calculated and intended to elicit from the Senator from Alabama an intelligent opinion, and I know of no one better able to give such an opinion, as to whether he thought the insertion of such a provision in the constitution interfered in any wise with its being a republican form of government.

I will put it differently. Suppose an enabling act were passed authorizing the formation or creation of a constitutional convention, and the President to issue a proclamation if he found the constitution republican in form, as in the case of the recently admitted States, to admit it into the Union, would the fact that under such circumstances a constitution had been adopted which provided for female suffrage or woman suffrage warrant the President in rejecting the constitution and declining to issue his proclamation, upon the grounds that that was in the instrument? That was the purpose of my question, and in that line I called attention to what seemed to be a precedent in the case of New Jersey.

Mr. MORGAN. My attention had never been called to the condition of the New Jersey law or constitution until the Senator from Wisconsin brought up the subject. I find in Article IV of the old constitution of 1664 and 1665 the following:

IV. That all inhabitants of this Colony, of full age, who are worth fifty pounds proclamation money, clear estate in the same, and have resided within the county in which they claim a vote for twelve months immediately preceding the election, shall be entitled to vote for representatives in council and assembly; and also for all other public officers that shall be elected by the people of the county at large.

That was a property qualification in which the word "inhabitants" was used to designate the people who might vote, after mentioning their age—"full age." It does not say what "full age" is, whether twenty-one or forty. It says nothing about that, but that is not a woman-suffrage clause, and if they interpreted the word "inhabitants" to include women and if they did vote, the precedent can hardly be quoted here because the constitution itself did not provide in terms that women should vote; but this constitution in Wyoming does, and whoever votes for this bill accepts and ratifies and confirms that provision, and ought to accept and ratify and confirm it in the District of Columbia or in any other Territory where we have legislative authority, because, if during all these years we have been doing wrong in excluding women from the polls, in God's name it is time we were doing right, and the quicker we get at it the better. If Senators are all convinced on the other side that woman suffrage is the right thing and something they must ratify and accept and confirm, I commend the zeal with which they seize the first opportunity of doing that thing; but after having done so do not say you are against woman suffrage.

Mr. President, woman suffrage in the Territories has not been to me a very agreeable thing in its outcome. The Mormons have permitted their women to vote always. That seems to be one of the cardinal principles of the Mormon faith, the Latter-Day Saints of Jesus Christ, that women should vote. They have held on to it through thick and through thin until the Gentiles got possession of the government and enacted laws of a different character, but still the women vote there; but now, when we speak of the morality of the voting of women, my mind is drawn irresistibly to some remarks that were made the other day by a Senator on this floor in regard to the impulsiveness of that sex, and their disposition to cohere with and obey, follow at least, the opinions if not the dictates of those who happen to be occupying marital relations toward them, whether legitimate or illegitimate.

Mormonism, Mr. President, has been sustained, propagated, and held on to in the Territory of Utah more by the women and their votes than by the men, strange as it may seem. I have been over there several times, and I have not been able to account for, from the appearance of society at least, the evil consequences.

I am disappointed when I go there, and have been frequently, in finding amongst those people more of peace and comfort, cleanliness and good behavior and intelligence by far than I expected to see amongst children and amongst grown people. They have always disappointed my calculations in that respect. I do not know whether it is the moral influence of women at the ballot-box. There is one thing certain, the Congress of the United States, after having denounced Mormonism in the very exacting terrible laws that we have enacted towards them and for which I have voted, can not reconcile itself logically or in any other respect to the idea that nothing but good can come from woman suffrage, for Mormonism certainly has to a very great extent been sustained in Utah by woman suffrage.

I would not make a voluntary statement of this kind in regard to the participation of women in the franchise unless it had become necessary by the demands of the occasion. But the truth ought to influence us here; we ought not to shut our eyes to the facts of history. We can not do it and do our people justice. So I deplore in that country the effect of woman suffrage. It is not slavishness, but it is subordination under the influence of impulses and affections which characterize the women to a much larger degree than the men, and which literally forces them to follow in the track marked out for them by those who do the work and fighting and thinking for the family.

Who can conceive of a more deplorable picture than to have a woman and her husband divided upon political questions, to have a canvasser coming and visiting from house to house to see the woman who is registered, as we are expected to do under some laws that are coming over to us; to invade the sanctum sanctorum to hunt up the registered voter; the mother in the quietness and seclusion of her family hunted up by a political thief, a vagabond, a dirty fellow, who would not be admitted inside the front gate if the law did not force him, and who would burglarize the decency of the family as he would burglarize a house if he had broken into it in the night with anger and chisel? Who wants to see a thing of that kind in this country, in which the women shall be interfered with in this way?

Here is a man who is a Republican, a candidate for office, and his wife is a Democrat, and she wants to vote for some other fellow, and when you ask her the reason for it she says: "Well, I know that man so well I can not afford to vote for him at all"—her own husband. There you array husband against wife; the very integrity of the family circle, which is the foundation of all our political institutions, is torn asunder by the greed of politicians. Suppose he is not married. His influence may be more potent, but vile. Who is to take care of those unfortunates of whom we are not permitted even to speak, when they shall sally forth and mix with the crowd, with your wives and daughters, to cast a suffrage equal to theirs in respectability because it counts the same?

I repeat, Mr. President, my opposition to woman suffrage is not because woman is not capable of casting her vote, but it is because the suffrage demoralizes and destroys the woman herself, unsexes her, and unfits her for the higher vocation for which God made her. So I can not be persuaded to take a step in that direction; least of all will I say by my vote that I hereby accept, ratify, and confirm that first article in the proposed constitution of Wyoming.

Sir, if that constitution had come here under the auspices of legislation on the part of the Congress of the United States and in a regular way, while I have no right to assert anything about it, I have a very strong belief that that feature would not have been presented. My opinion is that that feature was put into it in order to rally at the ballot-box, on the day that the ratification of the constitution was to take place, enough voters to give respectability to the movement which doubtless the people of Wyoming had not participated in with any zeal or with any confidence that it was a serious movement. That is proved by the fact that this vote for delegates has never appeared. We do not know anything about it. We can not hunt it up. We can not get an intimation of how many people voted. The people doubtless, as they had a right to do logically and legally and in every other sensible respect had a right to do, said that a governor, a supreme court justice, and a Territorial treasurer, or whoever he was, they would not obey or take any notice of that pretense that they had a right to organize a convention. "Wait until the Congress of the United States has passed on this; wait like those other four States did until Congress has enabled us to do it, and then we will come in right and we will be on hand to see what the people ought to see in respect to shaping a constitution and all else concerned in this State government." But in the manner in which that thing was put at the people they could not have any confidence in it. I do not wonder that they did not attend the polls on the ratification. They did not believe that it was a serious movement.

There is another thing here that struck me as being very peculiar. Section 12 of this suffrage article provides:

Sec. 12. No person qualified to be an elector of the State of Wyoming shall be allowed to vote at any general or special election hereafter to be held in the State until he or she shall have registered as a voter according to law, unless the failure to register is caused by sickness or absence, for which provision shall be made by law. The Legislature of the State shall enact such laws as will carry into effect the provisions of this section, which enactment shall be subject to amendment, but shall never be repealed; but this section shall not apply to the first election held under this constitution.

Who ever heard in a constitution of any State in the American Union that a law to be enacted by the Legislature—not yet enacted but to be enacted—should never be repealed? Why was that put in there? It was supposed to be an additional guaranty of the right of women to register and to vote. I suppose that was the reason of it. But now the Congress of the United States, according to the contemplation and interpretation of that instrument by a number of Senators, distinguished lawyers, I am told, gives to Congress the power to control the registration as a part of the manner of conducting an election. What are you going to do with that representative when you get your Lodge bill over here and you find that the State of Wyoming, under a constitution you have "accepted, ratified, and confirmed," has passed a law under this twelfth section of Article 6 of the Wyoming constitution fixing up a registration law just in the teeth of your act of Congress and declaring it shall not be repealed?

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator understand that the constitution of a State and a law are upon the same basis?

Mr. MORGAN. I understand that the constitution of any State that you admit into this Union upon your declaration that you hereby accept, ratify, and confirm what is in that constitution, forbids you after that passing a law in violation of it. That is what I understand. It is not only a breach of faith, but it is a usurpation of power to do it. You admit a State into the Union with that in its constitution, and then to undertake to assert afterwards that you have a power superior to that which you expressly state that you accept, ratify, and confirm, would be somewhat remarkable.

Mr. TELLER. Does the Senator think the United States Government has anything to do with the registration of voters in a State?

Mr. MORGAN. No, I do not, Mr. President; but how many Senators on that side will vote that way inside of fifteen or twenty days?

Mr. TELLER. I do not know about that. I wanted to know what the Senator thought about it.

Mr. MORGAN. I deny it. Especially do I deny that under this constitution, when it is made a part of the suffrage itself.

Mr. TELLER. But independent of that?

Mr. MORGAN. No, I do not believe it. At the same time, that is something to be confronted here, I have no doubt, very soon.

Mr. SPOONER. I suppose the Senator would not claim that if under the Constitution Congress had power to regulate this matter of registration in a State, that it could disable itself by contract, whether in the form of an act admitting a State or otherwise, from exercising that power if it saw fit. It could not abdicate by any means the power which the Constitution gave it.

Mr. MORGAN. No; but, Mr. President, when we say that we give to the constitution presented here by a State our sanction, and make it the constitution of the State by our vote, it would be a very great breach of honor to turn around and violate it. For instance, there was a period of about three years in the State of Alabama when we lived under a constitution which was rejected at the ballot-box by the votes of the people of that State, and was so certified to Congress—certified as having been rejected by the people, but Congress notwithstanding enacted that constitution over us. That is the history of it. We lived for about a period of three years under a constitution of that sort. Now, for Congress, after having enacted that constitution over us as a body of organic law, to turn round and deprive us of the protection it gave us would have been a violation of public faith that is inconceivable. I do not want my brother Senators of the Republican party to get themselves into such a category. There is no use of doing it. We had better let Wyoming wait a little than to do that.

But, Mr. President, this constitution of Wyoming is so utterly radical in the changes that it works in the general political system of the United States and the relations between the States that it is an unsafe thing to do to accept it, to ratify it, and to confirm it.

I regret very much that I have occupied so much time, but I had to make a good deal of my speech twice, because the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWKS] came in with his conference committee report that seemed to be almost interminable, and it broke the thread of my remarks so that I was obliged to repeat myself to some extent.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President—

Mr. PAYNE. Does the Senator from Connecticut propose to have the vote taken at 4 o'clock?

Mr. PLATT. If no one wishes to talk after 4 o'clock, I do. The agreement is that the vote is to be taken at 4; but if anybody desires to discuss it, it may be postponed and taken at half past 4. The consideration of the conference report consumed about three-quarters of an hour of the time that was to be devoted to this bill.

Mr. PAYNE. I wish to occupy some ten minutes.

Mr. PLATT. I am not going to occupy much time. We can not vote until 4 o'clock.

It may seem a little strange, perhaps, after listening to the argument made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], to the effect, by implication at least, that this proposed constitution of Wyoming is not republican in form because it permits woman suffrage, to learn that in 1874 the question was before the Supreme Court of the United States whether a State was republican in form that did not allow women to vote, and was seriously discussed.

Mr. MORGAN. How was it decided?

Mr. PLATT. It was decided that it was.

Mr. SPOONER. It was decided that it was too late to raise the question.

Mr. PLATT. As the Senator from Wisconsin says, it was decided that it was too late to raise the question, and that it was not true that a State was not republican in form because it did not allow women to vote.

Mr. MORGAN. I admit that.

Mr. PLATT. This point was raised:

If the right of suffrage is one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, then the constitution and laws of Missouri confining it to men are in violation of the Constitution of the United States, as amended, and consequently void.

Then they went on with a long discussion of the matter during which they adverted to the fact that in New Jersey, at the time of the admission of New Jersey into the Union as one of the original States, women had the right to vote, which was not taken from them until 1807; and the court used this language:

As has been seen, all the citizens of the States were not invested with the right of suffrage. In all, save, perhaps, New Jersey, this right was only bestowed upon men and not upon all of them. Under these circumstances it is certainly now too late to contend that a government is not republican, within the meaning of this guaranty of the Constitution, because women are not made voters.

I simply desire to say with regard to this matter that in voting to admit Wyoming with this constitution we in no way pass upon the question of woman suffrage. We simply pass upon the question whether there is anything in that constitution to come in conflict with the provision of the Constitution of the United States that the constitution of a State must be republican in form. I myself, like the Senator from Wisconsin, am not a convert to the doctrine of woman suffrage or the right of women to vote, but I should feel that I was not discharging my duty properly if I failed to vote to admit a State upon the sole ground that the people of the Territory in forming the constitution of that State had provided that women might have a right to vote in the State.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. President, I have no desire to make a speech in this case, and yet there are some points in it that I should like to understand rather better than I have been able to do thus far.

I have been honored with a membership in the Committee on Territories and I have there an association with a majority of six very enlightened, learned, and patriotic gentlemen, and yet I have not been able to satisfy my own mind that this clause as to female suffrage has merit in it. I am not troubled about some other points. To be sure, the origin of this constitution is wholly illegitimate. It was the offspring of illegitimate parentage.

It is said that this body at a former session meant to propose the plan of an enabling act, but it did not pass. There was no authority for a constitutional convention in Wyoming. But certain county commissioners in that Territory thought it would be a good plan to have a constitutional convention, and they induced the governor of the Territory to call it. I do not attach much importance to that because I believe by the law that in a case of illegitimate birth the bastard may be made good by subsequent adoption of the father. Therefore, if Congress shall provide for the ratification of this constitution, that is one of the prerequisites necessary to make it good.

Nor am I very much troubled by the objections made by my friend from Alabama as to the word "he" in defining the duties of various executive officers and in connection with Congress. I have fondly cherished the hope that if this constitution was adopted we should have a female representative in this body. I am not certain but that it is very desirable, and I am not certain but that it is inevitable.

The parties are pretty nearly equally divided in Wyoming and women out there are very smart. I think that is one of the most remarkable communities, and more powerful and strong-minded women are to be found in that Territory than are to be found anywhere else in the United States, and I am bound to say in justice to them that I think the men are the most weak-minded and effeminate and emasculated set of men that can be found anywhere in the United States. [Laughter.] I think it is no more than justice, therefore, that the women should unite with the Democrats and elect one Democratic Senator and then unite with the Republicans and elect one Republican Senator [laughter], and I should hope that they would both be women, and, though I shall not be here to witness it, yet I should read with a great deal of satisfaction and pleasure of the attention which would be given to a female representative in this body.

Then as to the word "he," which my friend from Alabama seems to think would be a serious obstacle, why, Mr. President, the caucus in this body can settle all questions of that kind. They can settle the question of the gender of the word "he," and they can include a "she" as well as a "he," and make it a common gender [laughter]; and if that should be the only difficulty to the admission of a female representative from Wyoming, I have no doubt the caucus rule can remove that inhibition. [Laughter.]

Then I am not quite so confident of the domestic infelicity which would ensue from that as my friend from Alabama is. We tried it provisionally, or it was tried, in Utah. Brigham Young had twenty wives, and no doubt they all went to the polls and voted, and we have had no historical account of a disagreement in the family [laughter], and I do not know why there should be necessarily now, except that in Wyoming the superiority of the women might control political matters as well as others. [Laughter.]

But these are not serious objections in my mind. I do desire, however, to call the attention of Senators, and especially members of the committee, to another more serious aspect of the case. What is the value of female suffrage? Is it an advantage or a disadvantage to a State? Is citizenship more or less valuable in consequence of female suffrage existing or being permitted in a community? Upon this subject my learned friends of the majority of the committee have given me no information. I doubt whether either of my friends here would vote for an amendment to the constitution of his own State allowing female suffrage. If I am mistaken I should like to be corrected. Would my honorable friend from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], from that "land of steady habits" and all sorts of good things, vote to-day, or would the respectable, cultured women of Connecticut vote to-day, for an amendment to the constitution of Connecticut to declare female suffrage?

Mr. PLATT. I will answer that with my present light I should not vote for an amendment to the constitution of my State which created or allowed woman suffrage, but if the people of the State of Connecticut should see fit to ingraft that in its constitution I would not move out of the State on that account.

Mr. PAYNE. I should want the Senator to withhold that conclusion until the case arose, and I am inclined to think he would move out of the State between Saturday night and Monday morning. I do not believe that a single member of this committee would vote for such an amendment.

Now, if it be an advantage, let it be understood. We are in ignorance of it. My own historical reading is perhaps limited, but I never have found yet the history of a single individual woman, from the creation of the world to the present day, in any civilized or half-civilized government, that has been permitted to exercise the right of suffrage. To be sure, Christ did not include women amongst his apostles, but that was an early day of civilization. We do not know what might happen now. [Laughter.] All through the history of England, from its earliest days to this time, it never has been proposed in either house of Parliament that a woman should be permitted to enter as a member, nor has a woman in England ever been permitted to exercise the elective franchise.

We have had some experience in our own country. Take New England, where we look for all manner of improvements. What has been the history of female suffrage in those States? Take the State of my honorable friend who sits near me from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES]. The ablest-minded women in those communities for more than fifty years have turned their battering rams upon the Legislature of Massachusetts to make some concession in the direction of female suffrage; only so late as this present session—for I believe the Legislature is in session yet—when they have brought all their energies to influence that Legislature, by a nearly unanimous vote the Republican members of the Legislature of Massachusetts refused to give women the right to vote in that old Commonwealth.

The movement, therefore, has made no progress there. We have had no experience in this country on this subject. Here are forty-two States in this Union that have had no experiment with female suffrage, and we have no reason to believe that any one of them to-day, unless perhaps South Dakota, is on the way to that advanced position, has any prospect of an amendment to its constitution to permit female suffrage. We are ignorant of the advantages of it and we ought not to be asked to sanction it anywhere.

Mr. President, we have in this body a very intelligent committee, all of whose duties are given to this one subject of female suffrage. I do not know that that committee has ever made a report, and as the Committee on Territories know nothing about it and are not able to give us any information in regard to its value or influence for good or evil, I think this bill ought to be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage, and I should be very glad to hear our respected friend from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE], who is chairman of that committee, give us the result of their research and investigation into the historical data and settle this question.

Is it desirable? Is there any community in the history of mankind that has ever been in favor of female suffrage, and if it has been tried anywhere what has been the effect of that trial?

Now, Mr. President, to make an application of this, I think we ought to determine, each for himself, whether female suffrage is an advantage or a disadvantage to a State. Is a State with female suffrage less or more desirable? I might ask the question whether any member of this body could be induced to go and emigrate to one of the new States, to go to Wyoming, for instance, because of female suffrage. Would he not pass by it at a considerable distance?

If, then, it is true—and I believe it to be true—that the citizenship of a State or Territory is disparaged or diminished by the existence of female suffrage, are we doing our duty, which we are required to perform when we admit a State, by allowing a community with such a feature in its organic law to be a member of the Union?

Under the ordinance of 1787 and by the Louisiana treaty and by the treaty with Mexico these Territories, on fulfilling certain conditions, are entitled to come into this Union upon an equality in all respects with the original States. Therefore, if this be injurious to them for any reason, it would be an inequality. Are we discharging our duty when we vote to admit a State with female suffrage?

It is not my purpose to dwell upon it, but I should like to have some information on this point, for, if female suffrage is a curse to the people, I do not want to be guilty of fastening or fixing it upon any community.

Mr. PLATT. If there was nothing said in this constitution about female suffrage and we admitted the State it could at the very next session of its Legislature extend the right of suffrage to females. We do not pass upon that question at all. We simply pass upon the question whether, having adopted this provision in its constitution, it thereby becomes a constitution which is not republican in form, and on that question there can be no discussion, as it seems to me.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the Senator allow me to say right there that no one of the forty-two States has ever done or proposed to do what Wyoming has done? No State where the men are men and exercise the duty and privileges of manhood has ever proposed that they shall change themselves into effeminate voters.

Mr. PLATT. Woman suffrage has existed in Wyoming for twenty years. It has not been repealed, and has proved satisfactory to the people of that Territory, so much so that they have incorporated it in their constitution. If the constitution had been silent upon the subject there is no reason to suppose that it would not, at the very next session of the Legislature, continue it as one of the institutions of the State after it should have been admitted. All this talk about whether it is in the constitution or not, and whether we thereby justify it or assent to it as a matter of principle, as it seems to me, has nothing whatever to do with this question.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, as I said a moment ago while the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] had the floor, this is not a question with me as to the right of a State about to be admitted to the Union framing its constitution with or without woman suffrage, for I quite agree with the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Wisconsin that the question of its being republican in form is not involved in the question whether it contains a provision in regard to woman suffrage or not. That is not the aspect of the case that controls my vote at all.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me to interrupt him for the purpose of making a statement about the vote?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. There are Senators here who supposed that the vote would be taken at 4 o'clock and who are not aware of the fact that, half or three-quarters of an hour having been consumed by the consideration of a conference report, it was agreed that if it was desired to discuss the bill until half past 4 the Senate would wait until half past 4 before the vote was taken. But if the discussion ends before that time the Senate will come to a vote, it is understood.

Mr. BLAIR. May I make a suggestion to the Senator? I hope it will not be taken that there is any objection to Senators remaining here for half an hour because the vote may not be taken until half past 4.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I have no desire or intention of consuming the fraction of time that the Senator from Connecticut has indicated remains for this debate if any other Senator wishes to engage in it.

I say it is not the aspect of the question referred to by the Senator from Connecticut just now that controls my vote in this regard, but believing that the right of suffrage conferred upon women in the constitution proposed for the State of Wyoming is inimical to the best interests of society, that being my best judgment, in which I differ from those for whose opinion I entertain entire respect, it controls my vote on this ground, that here we have the application for the admission of a State under the peculiar conditions which have already been sufficiently set forth to the Senate by the Senator from Alabama. To refer to them briefly, they are these:

The State of Wyoming is proposed to be admitted upon a constitution framed not in accordance with any enabling act passed by Congress, not upon the invitation of Congress that they should frame a constitution in order to invest themselves with statehood, but we have here this irregular movement of a portion of the citizens of that Territory acting without the sanction of a law either of Congress or of the Territory, upon the motion of certain boards of county commissioners calling upon the citizens of that Territory to elect delegates to a constitutional convention. Thereupon we have as a consequence of that invitation a vote upon the constitution so framed which discloses the fact that much less than a majority of the people cared to participate in that election at all, cared to engage in this important movement to invest their Territory and the people thereof with statehood. Eight thousand of its citizens, including, of course, the women who customarily vote in that Territory, out of a vote of 18,000, as recorded in the election immediately preceding, participated in this important and, as I think, very solemn movement on the part of the people of the Territory to clothe themselves with statehood and form an integral part of this Union of ours.

It is for that reason that I think it becomes doubly important upon us as Senators to scrutinize the framework of the government that they propose to us, and if we find in that constitution of government a provision which, in our judgment, is inimical to the interests of society, then there is nothing in the precedent action of the people of that Territory to constrain our vote in favor of the admission. If we had in the ordinary and customary way by an enabling act invited the people of that Territory in an orderly and proper manner to participate in a movement for creating a State, then we might well be bound by that moral obligation which rests on Senators under certain circumstances, if the constitution framed in a movement so originated was republican in form, to admit them into this Union upon an equality with all other States, as they must be admitted, if admitted at all, and with the full power to frame, or change, or alter their constitution of government that belongs to every other State in this Union.

Unquestionably the very moment they are admitted, whether with or without this provision in regard to woman suffrage, it may be incorporated, and there is no power in this Government to gainsay that power of the people of a State, no matter whether that State be a young State or an old State.

But under the conditions that surround this particular case, with the evidence before us that this movement for statehood was a movement by a minority, a confessed minority, of the people of that Territory, I do not think we are authorized to traverse the precedent that we have set to the people of these aspiring communities to the west of the Mississippi, by admitting this community as a State without the formality of an enabling act, and without setting in motion that original sovereignty of the people in the orderly way in which we proceeded in regard to the admission of the States that were admitted in the last Congress. The Congress of the United States in its wisdom passed an enabling act applicable to four Territories belonging to the United States, inviting their peoples to take the initial steps to create States, to form constitutions for themselves; and in obedience to that law those movements were had, those elections were held, those proceedings were taken, and in such shape and fashion that there was responsibility about the movement. There was the legal sanction of a solemn act of Congress. The people voted according to law and before election officers who were duly constituted, to whom oaths had been administered, and against whom for an infraction of their duty the penalties of the law could be denounced.

But what is the case here? In this Territory, with a population not sufficient to form the ratio for one Representative, spread over a territory as large, I believe, as one Senator said, as all the New England States put together, a movement was had, inspired by I know not whom, perhaps by some aspiring would-be Senators and Congressmen, ambitions worthy and honorable enough, but not a sufficient motive to do away and dispense with all those solemnities which have ordinarily in recent years attended the admission of a State. It was a movement inspired thus, as I say, bringing together a faction of the people to record their votes before officers unsworn, incapable of being sworn, upon whom no obligation of an oath could rest, with no sworn duty to perform, volunteers, and without any of the protection, without any of the sanctions, without any of the solemnities, that ought to attend the high and important transaction of creating a State.

Mr. President, those conditions being such attending the birth of this proposed State, I can not find that it is my duty as a Senator and a part of the legislative power of this Government to vote to sanction a proceeding so irregular, without further and better and stronger reasons than have been produced here.

What is the exigency that we should travel outside of the law, outside of the precedent that Congress set only a short year ago in conditions similar to these? We did not choose to include, the Senator from Connecticut, the chairman of the committee, did not choose to include, in the enabling act for Montana, Washington, and the two Dakotas, the Territory of Wyoming. Why was it left out? and, being left out, why should we dispense with those formalities now upon the suggestion of aspiring Senators and ambitious Congressmen, that we should in disregard of precedent, without law and without the formalities which were so sedulously placed around the admission of the four States which I have just named, seek to become participants in the political power of this Union and become factors in the legislation of this country?

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator will remember that the Senate passed a bill admitting those States without the formality of an enabling act and that the proposition for an enabling act came from the House of Representatives.

Mr. GRAY. I am aware of that fact.

Mr. SPOONER. The proposition of the other House was concurred in by the Senate because it was necessary to concur in the bill in that form or have no bill.

Mr. GRAY. I am aware of that fact.

Mr. SPOONER. And, if the Senator will permit me—

Mr. GRAY. I beg the Senator's pardon; I thought he had finished.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will permit me—

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. The House of Representatives took no step towards the admission of those Territories into the Union in any form until after the election and until after it was certain that a Republican Congress had been elected, which would admit them anyway, whether with an enabling act or without one.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I have not alluded to any partisan reason.

Mr. SPOONER. Well, it is the fact.

Mr. GRAY. I am discussing this question honestly and candidly, upon what I think very much higher ground than any partisan argument could possibly furnish to me. I have always believed, although I know there are precedents to the contrary, that there is no more solemn act that concerns this confederation of States than the admission of a new member into its privileges and to be made a participant in the political power that belongs to this Union of States. I believe that it is a high and important function of Congress to so regulate, and so guard, and so provide for the admission of these younger sisters of the Republic that there shall never be the opportunity of evil, much less of just criticism, that belongs, I think, obviously, to the conditions that surround this proposed admission of Wyoming.

It is not because I find a constitution that permits woman suffrage alone, but it is because, that constitution being such as it is and the conditions which surround the initial movements for statehood being such as I have described, I can find no obligation resting upon me such as might well have rested upon me in regard to the admission of the States of Washington, Montana, and the two Dakotas, to vote for the ratification of this constitution and the admission of the State of Wyoming.

Mr. President, why all this tumultuous haste to invest these sixty or seventy thousand people with all the privileges of statehood? What is the exigency? Where is the detriment to the interests or the happiness of that people in asking them that they shall wait so long that they may come in with a decent observance of the forms which have been prescribed for the admission of four States, each one of whom had twice or thrice the population that Wyoming has?

Why can they not wait the short space of a year or the short space of two sessions of Congress, until an enabling act can be framed by which the people in that Territory, enterprising and worthy as I have no doubt they are, can be invited to take the initial steps and form themselves into a political community worthy of admission into this Union, and having so proceeded and having acted under the forms of law come here and present their constitution, when there shall be no doubt about who participated in this sovereign act of the people of the community, when there shall be no doubt that an election, held and guarded as the elections in the Territories I have just named, voiced the real will and the real spirit and intention of the people of that Territory?

Mr. President, I can not find anything exceptional in the condition of Wyoming that obliges me as a Senator to vote under these irregular and exceptional circumstances for her admission now. I shall be glad to welcome her and her representatives to a seat on the floor of the Senate when she comes as these other States have come, in a way that does not violate and traverse all the best precedents, those precedents which, in my opinion at least, are the best that obtain in regard to the admission of States into the Union.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I think there was never such an instance in legislative history of careful and elaborate construction of a man of straw and then such fierce effort to knock down the man of straw so constructed as there has been in trying to prevent the admission of Wyoming into the Union; and the most labored effort having the least foundation behind it is the effort to make it appear that the wish of the people of Wyoming for admission into the Union is not hearty, unanimous, and earnest.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator from Connecticut what evidence there can be of that heartiness or unanimity except a vote of the people?

Mr. PLATT. There never has been a constitution submitted to a people to ratify prior to the admission of a State into the Union that received a larger affirmative vote in proportion to the votes cast than was given to this constitution in Wyoming. The reason there were no more votes cast was because there was a perfect unanimity of sentiment in the Territory for that constitution—

Mr. GRAY. The vote cast shows that that was not the case; that there were 2,000 out of 8,000 against it.

Mr. PLATT. I was about to finish the sentence. With the exception of the few hundred votes that were cast against it. That embraced all the opposition for one cause and another cause, because somebody did not like some provisions in the constitution and therefore voted against it. Well, it was last fall when that vote was cast. This matter has been a matter of public discussion. There has been no protest here from Wyoming. There has been no protest from any portion of its citizens, from any part of its citizens. There is no division of sentiment there in relation to this matter. There is no political division of sentiment there in relation to this matter. There never has been any political division there in reference to it. There was not in the constitutional convention. There was perfect harmony between both political parties and in each political party, and the people throughout the entire Territory belonging to the two political parties will rejoice together when Wyoming shall have been admitted into the Union.

Mr. SPOONER. Every newspaper but one is in favor of it.

Mr. PLATT. Every newspaper but one in the Territory is in favor of it. There never was a case in all my knowledge, both personal and historical, where there was so unanimous a desire among the people for admission under the constitution which had been framed.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow me to mention to him, what he has evidently forgotten, that the Legislature since elected has memorialized Congress also?

Mr. PLATT. The Legislature since elected has memorialized Congress to admit Wyoming under this constitution. It is a most labored effort to make it appear that this is not entirely satisfactory to the people, that there has been any irregularity about it, that there is any political feeling about it. It has no foundation on which to rest.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether there have been any protests from Wyoming.

Mr. PLATT. There has not been a protest. There has been just one letter written here against it, and when the attention of that gentleman was called to the matter which he spoke of in the constitution and he found he was mistaken he wrote a letter and said he was perfectly satisfied. This thing is entirely satisfactory to the people of Wyoming.

Mr. GRAY. It would seem that the Senator from Connecticut confesses that the charges of irregularity in regard to the conditions that surround this nascent, aspiring State made by me are true.

Mr. PLATT. Oh, I answered that yesterday, Mr. President.

Mr. GRAY. Now, the Senator from Connecticut, in the absence of any official information that a majority of the people of that Territory participated either in electing the delegates to the constitutional convention or in the vote on the constitution, seems to think it is sufficient that the newspapers in the Territory are unanimous in its favor, that there has been no protest here, and that there is what he declares upon his belief, no doubt a perfectly honest one, an entire unanimity of desire on the part of the people of that Territory to come in—a general declaration of what he believes to be the state of opinion in that Territory, and the votes of the newspapers substituted for those regular, orderly, American proceedings which I claim should always obtain in these bodies.

Mr. BLAIR. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. Taking the Senator's remarks as indicative that there was no legal expression or proper expression of the sentiment of the people, I should like to ask his opinion as to the legality of the election of the representation of the State of Georgia, for instance, in the other House of Congress, where with some 27,000 voters, if I remember correctly, out of 200,000 in the State, they elected ten Representatives. Does the Senator think that is a legal election, a proper expression of public sentiment that ought to be acted upon, and that ought to conclude the House of Congress to which they are alleged to be chosen, if this be not a proper, legal, binding expression of the sentiment of the people of Wyoming?

Mr. GRAY. The conditions that surround the proposed admission of the State of Wyoming are just about as regular and just about as pertinent as the question which the Senator from New Hampshire puts is to this debate. If it has anything to do with it, I can not understand how; and if the proceedings which have taken place in the Territory of Wyoming have anything to do with making a sufficient ground for the admission of that Territory as a State I can not understand how much.

Mr. PLATT. I hope we may now have a vote. It is within two minutes of half past 4.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair calls attention to the agreement reached yesterday afternoon by unanimous consent, and modified this morning, by which debate was to cease and the vote was to be taken at half-past 4 o'clock. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. MORGAN. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. KENNA (when Mr. FAULKNER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. FAULKNER] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. If my colleague were present, he would vote in favor of this amendment, and if a vote should come on the final passage of the bill he would vote "nay."

Mr. GRAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BUTLER (when Mr. HAMPTON's name was called). My colleague [Mr. HAMPTON] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. BATE (when the name of Mr. HARRIS was called). My colleague [Mr. HARRIS] is sick to-day and unable to be here. He is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MOREILL].

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT]. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR]. We have arranged a transfer of pairs, so that the Senator from Connecticut and I may vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE (when Mr. McMILLAN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. McMILLAN] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN], so that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] and myself can vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. PETTIGREW (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. FRYE (when Mr. PLUMB's name was called). The junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] is detained in the Committee on Appropriations and is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. If they were present, the Senator from Kansas would vote "nay" and the Senator from Missouri would vote "yea."

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SANDERS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES]. I should vote "nay" if I were not paired.

Mr. SAWYER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). The pair which I have with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN] I have transferred to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], and I am therefore at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO (when the name of Mr. VOORHEES was called). I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] is absent in consequence of sickness, and is paired. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. GORMAN (when the name of Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, was called). My colleague [Mr. WILSON, of Maryland] is paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. DAWES. My colleague [Mr. HOAR] is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If present, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], which will enable the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] and myself to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GRAY. I vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO. I wish to call attention to the fact that my colleague [Mr. CALL] is absent and is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], as already announced.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DOLPH. I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. If there is a quorum voting I will withhold my vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a quorum voting.

Mr. FRYE. My colleague [Mr. HALE] is detained from the Chamber on business of the Senate and is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM].

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—18.
Bate,	George,	McPherson,	Reagan,
Berry,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Vance,
Blackburn,	Gray,	Pasco,	Walthall.
Carlisle,	Jones of Arkansas,	Payne,
Coke,	Kenna,	Fugh,
NAYS—29.
Allen,	Evarts,	Manderson,	Spooner,
Blair,	Farwell,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Cass,	Frye,	Moody,	Stockbridge,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Morrill,	Teller,
Davis,	Higgins,	Pierce,	Washburn.
Dawes,	Hiscock,	Platt,
Dixon,	Ingalls,	Power,
Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Sherman,
ABSENT—37.
Aldrich,	Colquitt,	Hoar,	Stanford,
Allison,	Daniel,	McMillan,	Turpie,
Barbour,	Dolph,	Paddock,	Vest,
Blodgett,	Eustis,	Pettigrew,	Voorhees,
Brown,	Faulkner,	Plumb,	Wilson of Iowa,
Butler,	Gibson,	Quay,	Wilson of Md.,
Call,	Hale,	Ransom,	Wolcott.
Cameron,	Hampton,	Sanders,
Chandler,	Harris,	Sawyer,
Cockrell,	Hearst,	Squire,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I now move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the pending bill and insert what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert:

That the inhabitants of all that part of the area of the United States now constituting the Territory of Wyoming, as at present described, may become the State of Wyoming, as hereinafter provided.

Sec. 2. That all male persons who shall have resided within the limits of said proposed State for sixty days, and are otherwise qualified by the laws of said Territory to vote for representatives to the Legislative Assembly thereof, are hereby authorized to vote for and choose delegates to form a convention in said Territory; and the qualifications for delegates to such convention shall be such as, by the laws of said Territory, persons are required to possess to be eligible to the Legislative Assembly thereof; and the aforesaid delegates to form said convention shall be apportioned among the several counties within the limits of the proposed State in proportion to the aggregate number of votes in each of said counties for Delegate in Congress at the election held in said Territory on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, 1890.

One delegate shall be allowed for every 300 votes cast in each county, and one delegate for any fraction of 150 votes cast in each county. That said apportionment shall be made by the governor, the chief-justices, and the United States attorney of said Territory; and the governor of said Territory shall, by proclamation, order an election of the delegates aforesaid in said Territory to be held on the first Monday in August, 1890, which proclamation shall be issued within thirty days after the passage of this act; and such election shall be conducted, the returns made, the result ascertained, and the certificates to persons elected to such convention issued in the same manner as is prescribed by the laws of the said Territory regulating elections therein for Delegate to Congress. All male persons resident in said proposed State, who are qualified voters of said Territory as herein provided, shall be entitled to vote upon the election of delegates, and upon the ratification or rejection of the constitution, under such rules and regulation as said convention may prescribe, not in conflict with this act, but no educational qualification shall be required of voters at either of said elections.

Sec. 3. That the delegates to the convention thus elected shall meet at the seat of government of said Territory on the first Monday in September, 1890, and after organization shall declare, on behalf the people of said proposed State, that they adopt the Constitution of the United States; whereupon the said convention shall be, and is hereby, authorized to form a constitution and State government for said proposed State. The constitution shall be republican in form and make no distinction in civil or political rights on account of race or color, except as to Indians not taxed, and not be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of Independence. And said convention shall provide, by ordinance irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of said State:

First, that perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and that no inhabitant of said State shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship;

Second, that the people inhabiting said proposed State do agree and declare that they forever disclaim all right and title to the unappropriated public lands lying within the boundaries thereof, and to all lands lying within said limits owned or held by any Indian or Indian tribes; and that until the title thereto shall have been extinguished by the United States the same shall be and remain subject to the disposition of the United States, and said Indian lands shall remain under the absolute jurisdiction and control of the Congress of the United States; that the lands belonging to citizens of the United States residing without the State shall never be taxed at a higher rate than the lands belonging to residents thereof; that no taxes shall be imposed by the State on lands or property therein belonging to or which may hereafter be purchased by the United States or reserved for its use; but nothing herein, or in the ordinance provided for, shall preclude the said State from taxing, as other lands are taxed, any lands owned or held by any Indian who has severed his tribal relations, and has obtained from the United States or from any person a title thereto by patent or other grant, save and except such lands as have been or may be granted to any Indian or Indians under any act of Congress containing a provision exempting the lands thus granted from taxation; but said ordinance shall provide that all such lands shall be exempt from taxation by said State so long and to such extent as such act of Congress may prescribe;

Third, that the debts and liabilities of said Territory shall be assumed and paid by the said State; and

Fourth, that provision shall be made for the establishment and maintenance of a system of public schools, which shall be open to all the children of said State and free from sectarian control.

Sec. 4. That in case a constitution and State government shall be formed in compliance with the provisions of this act the convention forming the same shall provide by ordinance for submitting said constitution to the people of said State for their ratification or rejection, at an election to be held in said Territory on the Tuesday after the first Monday of November, 1890, at which election the qualified voters of said proposed State shall vote directly for or against the proposed constitution and for or against any provisions separately submitted. The returns of said election shall be made to the secretary of said Territory, who, with the governor and chief-justice thereof or any two of them, shall canvass the same; and if a majority of the legal votes cast on that question shall be for the constitution the governor shall certify the result to the President of the United States, together with a statement of the votes cast thereon and upon separate articles or propositions, and a copy of said constitution, articles, propositions, and ordinances. And if the constitution and government of said proposed State are republican in form and if all the provisions of this act have been complied with in the formation thereof, it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to issue his proclamation announcing the result of said election, and thereupon the proposed State of Wyoming shall be deemed admitted by Congress into the Union under and by virtue of this act on an equal footing with the original States from and after the date of said proclamation: Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall, in anywise, interfere with the right and ownership of the United States to the Yellowstone National Park reservation, and the exclusive control over the same by the United States.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. This is a proposition merely—

Mr. PLATT. I understood that we were to vote on amendments and on the bill without debate.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I only want to say that this is a proposition to have an enabling act simply for Wyoming; and there is a mistake in one date that I ask unanimous consent to change.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator has a right to modify his amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The word "June" is used where it should be "September." I want to make that change. There will be no objection to it, I presume.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. GRAY. Is it the same as the enabling act for the four States passed in the last Congress?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. This would be the same act that we adopted in the last Congress for those States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. GORMAN. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], and that will enable the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] and myself to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GRAY (when his name was called). As the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] has just stated, the pair I have with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] is transferred to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], and therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. DAWES (when Mr. HOAR's name was called). My colleague [Mr. HOAR] would, if present, vote "nay." He is paired as stated.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE (when Mr. McMILLAN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. McMILLAN] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). As I have already stated, I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]. I however transfer that pair to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN], in order that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] and myself may vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. PETTIGREW (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. INGALLS (when Mr. PLUMB's name was called). My colleague [Mr. PLUMB] is absent on service of the Senate and is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. SANDERS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] and withhold my vote.

Mr. SAWYER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MCPHERSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I wish to withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS].

Mr. BLAIR. My colleague [Mr. CHANDLER] is absent on account of ill-health and is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BLODGETT]. If present, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. DOLPH. If agreeable to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] to transfer his pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS] to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] we can both vote.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I have just arranged with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK] for a transfer of my pair to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS].

Mr. DOLPH. Then I will announce that I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PADDOCK. Under the transfer announced by the Senator from New Jersey I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. McPHERSON. I vote "yea."

Mr. DIXON. I announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON].

Mr. PADDOCK. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS].

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—18.
Bate,	George,	McPherson,	Reagan,
Berry,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Vance,
Blackburn,	Gray,	Pasco,	Walthall.
Carlisle,	Jones of Arkansas,	Payne,
Coke,	Kenna,	Pugh,
NAYS—29.
Allen,	Evarts,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Blair,	Farwell,	Moody,	Stewart,
Casey,	Frye,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Paddock,	Teller,
Davis,	Hiscock,	Pierce,	Washburn.
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Platt,
Dixon,	Jones of Nevada,	Power,
Edmunds,	Manderson,	Sherman,
ABSENT—37.
Aldrich,	Colquitt,	Higgins,	Stanford,
Allison,	Daniel,	Hoar,	Turpie,
Barbour,	Dolph,	McMillan,	Vest,
Blodgett,	Eustis,	Pettigrew,	Voorhees,
Brown,	Faulkner,	Plumb,	Wilson of Iowa,
Butler,	Gibson,	Quay,	Wilson of Md.,
Call,	Hale,	Ransom,	Wolcott.
Cameron,	Hampton,	Sanders,
Chandler,	Harris,	Sawyer,
Cockrell,	Hearst,	Squire,

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. PUGH. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIXON (when the name of Mr. ALDRICH was called). My colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON].

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], and that leaves the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] and myself at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DOLPH (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. DAWES (when Mr. HOAR's name was called). My colleague [Mr. HOAR] would vote "yea" if present. He is paired, as has already been stated, with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE (when Mr. McMILLAN's name was called). I again announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. McMILLAN] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN], and vote "yea."

Mr. PETTIGREW (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FRYE (when Mr. PLUMB's name was called). The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], if present, would vote "yea." He is detained from the Chamber on business of the Senate and is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. I should vote "nay" if I were not paired.

Mr. SANDERS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] and withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). As heretofore announced, I have been paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN], but I have transferred my pair to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], so that the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Michigan stand paired. I vote "nay."

Mr. GORMAN (when the name of Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, was called). My colleague [Mr. WILSON, of Maryland] is paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PADDOCK. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] on this vote is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS].

Mr. SAWYER. I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. ALLEN. My colleague [Mr. SQUIRE] is absent and is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—29.
Allen,	Evarts,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Blair,	Farwell,	Moody,	Stewart,
Casey,	Frye,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Paddock,	Teller,
Davis,	Hiscock,	Pierce,	Washburn.
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Platt,
Dixon,	Jones of Nevada,	Power,
Edmunds,	Manderson,	Sherman,
NAYS—18.
Bate,	George,	McPherson,	Reagan,
Berry,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Vance,
Blackburn,	Gray,	Pasco,	Walthall.
Carlisle,	Jones of Arkansas,	Payne,
Coke,	Kenna,	Pugh,
ABSENT—37.
Aldrich,	Colquitt,	Higgins,	Stanford,
Allison,	Daniel,	Hoar,	Turpie,
Barbour,	Dolph,	McMillan,	Vest,
Blodgett,	Eustis,	Pettigrew,	Voorhees,
Brown,	Faulkner,	Plumb,	Wilson of Iowa,
Butler,	Gibson,	Quay,	Wilson of Md.,
Call,	Hale,	Ransom,	Wolcott.
Cameron,	Hampton,	Sanders,
Chandler,	Harris,	Sawyer,
Cockrell,	Hearst,	Squire,

So the bill was passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the preamble.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment to the bill and ask a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PLATT, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. JONES of Arkansas were appointed.

Mr. PLATT. I move that the bill (S. 894) to provide for the admission of the State of Wyoming into the Union, and for other purposes be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

ADMISSION OF IDAHO.

Mr. PLATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 658) to provide for the admission of the State of Idaho into the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator does not expect to go on with this bill this evening?

Mr. PLATT. If Senators do not desire to have the bill pressed this evening I simply wish to have the bill remain as the unfinished business.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. DOLPH. I hope we shall have an executive session.

Mr. BUTLER. Very well. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is the Idaho bill before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been taken up and is the unfinished business.

Mr. PLATT. The bill has been taken up. I will say that I understand there is not perhaps an order, but what amounts to an agreement of the Senate that Saturday shall be devoted to the Calendar, and I shall respect that understanding of the Senate, and not press this bill to-morrow; but will expect it to go over and remain as the unfinished business for Monday morning.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE FOR POST-OFFICE EMPLOYEES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following resolution from the House of Representatives; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Senate is hereby requested to return to the House of Representatives the bill of the House (H. R. 10096) granting leaves of absence to clerks and employes in first and second class post-offices.

SUBMARINE CABLE IN NEW YORK HARBOR.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate for an appropriation of $2,000 for a submarine cable between Forts Hamilton and Wadsworth, New York Harbor; which was read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The communication, with the accompanying papers, will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and printed.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest that the communication ought to go to the Committee on Appropriations instead of the Committee on Military Affairs, so as to be acted on in connection with the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Committee on Military Affairs ought to know whether those two forts need a cable. I think the Military Committee in the first instance is the right one, and then the matter can go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GORMAN. It is an estimate of the Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the Committee on Military Affairs ought to consider it first.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is so referred.

Mr. GORMAN. Very well.

PAY OF LETTER-CARRIERS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. Res. 183) to provide for the unexpended balance, $99,439.07, for discharging claims of letter-carriers for extra compensation under the eight-hour law, approved May 24, 1888, and appropriated for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1888; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the joint resolution should go to the proper committee.

Mr. SAWYER. I wish to say that we passed one precisely like it last night, and at the same time the House of Representatives passed this one. I had the clerks hold the Senate joint resolution, so that I could have it indefinitely postponed and get the Senate to pass this one.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We ought to see what it is, really.

Mr. SAWYER. It has been reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and passed by the Senate. There is a letter from the Postmaster-General showing the necessity of it, which appears in to-day's RECORD.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator know from a personal inspection that the House measure is precisely like the one the Senate passed?

Mr. SAWYER. I do; I examined it to-day. It is precisely like it in every particular. I ask that the joint resolution be passed. As I stated we passed one last night in every particular just like it to the letter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read the second time at length for information.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it resolved, etc. That the unexpended balance of $99,439.07 of the appropriation for the free-delivery service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1888, be continued and made available to June 30, 1891, for discharging the claims of letter-carriers for compensation for extra time in the months of May and June, 1888, made under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to limit the hours that letter-carriers in cities shall be employed per day," approved May 24, 1888.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin what is the necessity of this legislation?

Mr. SAWYER. In 1888 we passed a law reducing the hours of labor of letter-carriers to eight hours a day. The Postmaster-General sent a communication to the Senate stating that the Department had not had clerical force enough to adjust the claims and asking to have this appropriation continued, as otherwise it would lapse the 1st day of July. The object is to settle this indebtedness that the Government owes the letter-carriers.

Mr. GORMAN. I see no objection to it on that statement.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SAWYER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution (S. R. 106) to continue the unexpended balance of appropriation for the free-delivery service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1888, and for other purposes was passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. SAWYER. I now move that the joint resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

FEES IN NEW MEXICO AND ARIZONA.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask the Chair whether the message of the House of Representatives in respect of the bill (H. R. 3940) to amend an act entitled "An act to extend the fees of certain officers over the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona" has been laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that it may now be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives; which was read:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, June 25, 1890.

Resolved, That the House agree to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3940) to amend an act entitled "An act to extend the fees of certain officers over the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I submit in this connection the report of the Senate conferees, being the duplicate of the other conference report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3940) to amend an act entitled "An act to extend the fees of certain officers over the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same.

GEO. F. EDMUNDS,

G. G. VEST,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

I. S. STRUBLE,

R. W. PERKINS,

C. B. KILGORE,

Managers on the part of the House of Representatives.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The other House having receded from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and agreed to the same, no action of the Senate is necessary, only to have it go into the record.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. DOLPH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened, and (at 5 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, June 28, 1890, at 12 o'clock m.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate June 26, 1890.

POSTMASTER.

Daniel F. Stewart, to be postmaster at Wilmington, in the county of New Castle and State of Delaware.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate June 27, 1890.

INDIAN AGENT.

Pernin P. Palmer, of Estelline, South Dakota, to be agent for the Indians of the Cheyenne River agency in South Dakota.

COLLECTORS OF CUSTOMS.

Rockey P. Earhart, of Oregon, to be collector of customs for the district of Willamette, in the State of Oregon.

Max Pracht, of Alaska, to be collector of customs for the district of Alaska, in the Territory of Alaska.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

Horatio P. Van Cleve, of Minnesota, formerly second lieutenant Fifth United States Infantry and late brigadier and brevet major general United States Volunteers, to be second lieutenant of infantry, United States Army.

Second Regiment of Cavalry.

First Lieut. Charles B. Schofield, to be captain.

Second Lieut. Herbert H. Sargent, to be first lieutenant.

Eighteenth Regiment of Infantry.

First Lieut. John Anderson, regimental quartermaster, to be captain.

Second Lieut. David C. Shanks, to be first lieutenant.

POSTMASTER.

Mrs. Minnie Washburne, to be postmaster at Eugene, in the county of Lane and State of Oregon.

Michael T. Nolan, to be postmaster at The Dalles, in the county of Wasco and State of Oregon.

Lewis V. Curry, to be postmaster at Fenton, in the county of Genesee and State of Michigan.

James Buckley, to be postmaster at Petoskey, in the county of Emmet and State of Michigan.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 27, 1890.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE TO POST-OFFICE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. DOCKERY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know whether it will be in order—I suppose, however, it will not—to move to reconsider the action of the House yesterday by which House bill 10088 was passed.

Mr. SAYERS. What is that bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. It is a bill called up by the gentleman from New York [Mr. KETCHAM] granting leaves of absence to clerks and employees in first and second class post-offices. When the matter was presented yesterday I propounded this inquiry:

Mr. DOCKERY. I will inquire of the gentleman from New York [Mr. KETCHAM] whether this bill carries an appropriation.

The reply was:

Mr. KETCHAM. It does not.

I find, however, upon examination and according to the best estimate that could be made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and myself—a hurried estimate—that the bill really involves an annual expenditure of probably $316,000.

The SPEAKER. The statement was made to the House that it did not increase the expense to the Government at all.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not like to ask any action in the absence of the gentleman from New York—

Mr. SAYERS. Why not make a motion to reconsider?

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman can enter that motion.

Mr. DOCKERY. But the motion to reconsider was made yesterday and laid on the table.

Mr. McMILLIN. At any rate it would be in order to ask unanimous consent that the motion be entered.

Mr. QUINN. I regret very much to find that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] has come to the conclusion that this bill involves an increase of expenditure. As I am informed, the granting of leaves of absence to post-office clerks in the city of New York has not that effect at all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the action taken yesterday on the bill could be reconsidered by unanimous consent.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would submit a request to that effect but for the absence of the gentleman from New York [Mr. KETCHAM].

Mr. CANNON. I think it fair that the motion to reconsider be entered. This matter was passed yesterday in my absence when I was engaged upon a committee of conference; and it seems to me the House did not understand it. Unanimous consent might now be given to set aside the action by which the motion to reconsider was yesterday laid on the table, so that the motion may now be pending.

Mr. McMILLIN. To be acted on when the gentleman from New York [Mr. KETCHAM] shall be present.

Mr. FLOWER. I object.

Mr. CANNON. The House evidently acted under a misapprehension.

Mr. HOLMAN. It appears to me very proper the action suggested should now be taken.

Mr. BLAND. The statement was made at the time the bill was passed that it would involve no additional appropriation. That was the understanding on which the House acted; and if that is an error the action then taken ought certainly to be set aside.

Mr. DOCKERY. I want to read what the gentleman from New York [Mr. FLOWER] said yesterday in reference to this bill.

I hope there will be no objection. The bill does not involve one dollar of expense to the Government.

Mr. FLOWER. How does it?

Mr. DOCKERY. Because the Government will be required to compensate the substitute clerks while the regular clerks are enjoying their leaves of absence.

Mr. McMILLIN. It seems perfectly proper that the motion to reconsider should be entered.

Mr. FLOWER. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. DOCKERY. I knew the gentleman would do so when he understood that the House had acted under a misapprehension.

Mr. QUINN. As I understand, the granting of leaves of absence to post-office clerks will not involve one dollar of extra appropriation because the clerks remaining in the office perform extra duty during the absence of their colleagues.

Mr. CANNON. This whole question can come up on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let the motion to reconsider be entered and lie over until the gentleman from New York returns.

Mr. PAYNE. My colleague [Mr. KETCHAM] would not have made the statement he did unless at the time he believed it to be true. If he were here now and the facts brought to his attention I have no doubt he would ask to have the matter reconsidered and the bill brought again before the House. I ask that gentlemen wait until my colleague comes in.

Mr. DOCKERY. There is no question as to the good faith of the gentleman from New York [Mr. KETCHAM].

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the course suggested by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] and other gentlemen will be pursued; otherwise it is very clear that action upon measures by unanimous consent will be put an end to entirely.

Mr. FLOWER. Let the motion to reconsider be pending, then, until my colleague [Mr. KETCHAM] returns.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent that a motion to reconsider be entered and that action upon it be deferred until the return of the gentleman from New York [Mr. KETCHAM].

Many MEMBERS. That is right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] asks unanimous consent that, notwithstanding a motion to reconsider was made yesterday and laid on the table, that motion may now be entered and considered pending. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Chair would suggest that it may also be necessary to recall the bill from the Senate.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask that such an order be made.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the Clerk will be directed to request the Senate to return the bill.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 833) providing for the erection of a public building at Paris, Tex.;

A bill (H. R. 4635) granting certain privileges to the Union Railway Company of Chattanooga, Tenn.; and

A bill (H. R. 6946) providing for the sale of navy-yard and United States naval-hospital lands in the city of Brooklyn, N. Y.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 1636) for the relief of certain officers on the retired-list of the Army;

A bill (S. 3139) to aid the State of South Dakota to support a school of mines;

A bill (S. 3460) to release certain church property in the District of Columbia from arrears of taxation; and

A bill (S. 3745) granting to the Northern Pacific and Yakima Irrigation Company a right of way through the Yakima Indian reservation in Washington.

The message further announced that the Senate further insisted upon its amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 34, 159, and 163 to the bill (H. R. 9066) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes, asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DAWES, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. GORMAN conferees on the part of the Senate.

LEAVE TO PRINT ON SILVER BILL.

Mr. CONGER. A number of gentlemen on both sides of the House desire to print remarks on the silver bill. I ask unanimous consent that leave for that purpose be granted, provided that the speeches are filed for printing within the next five days.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa.

A MEMBER. What is it?

The SPEAKER. That leave be granted to all members to print remarks in the RECORD on the silver bill, provided they be filed within five days.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I object.

FEDERAL ELECTION LAW.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order in view of the limited time allotted to the consideration of the special order by the House, the election bill. I do not think the time given to that ought to be consumed in any other way.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the further consideration of the special order; and the gentleman from Wisconsin is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HAUGEN. The discussion hereon yesterday is a fair illustration of the views, theories, and practices of the two great parties on the question of suffrage. The two gentlemen who have preceded me on this side of the Chamber have pleaded for the protection of the individual without regard to race or color. They have recognized no distinction, but placed all on an equality before the law. They have advocated universal suffrage as the corner-stone of our liberties.

The gentleman from South Carolina, opening the debate upon his side of the Chamber, has been equally as frank in enunciating the position of the opposition. He freely avows that white men must and will control in South Carolina. He throws the Constitution to the winds when it says—

The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

And he registers a solemn oath that he will violate the laws of his country rather than that the State of South Carolina shall be Republican through colored votes, although their majority may be undisputed. I do not want to misquote him; here is what he says:

We know we must either rule that country or leave it. Now, for myself, before the people of the United States and before God in all reverence, I swear we will not leave it.

And here his party associates signified their approval by applause. He continued:

It is the home of our fathers. There their bones lie buried. They bought it with their blood when Concord and Lexington were the battle-fields of this country.

They have handed it down to us unimpaired; and, gentlemen, are we not our fathers' sons? Shall the blood first turn back in our veins? Shall we transmit to coming generations a great and a noble State which has been overruled and dethroned by a race whom God never intended to rule over us?

Sir, it was not my good fortune to be born within the United States. Had I been consulted as to my birthplace there is no flag I should have preferred to that of the United States; but I should not have chosen the State of South Carolina. The gentleman may honor and love his State. It is, perhaps, right and natural that he should. But South Carolina, the mother of nullification and secession, has been the cause of more misery, the shedding of more blood, the cause of more anguish and of grosser injustice in this country than all other evils we have encountered. Not because her people are not humane, not because they love injustice rather than justice. There are, no doubt, as good, kind, and patriotic people in South Carolina as in any other State; but, cursed with slavery, her leaders early became advocates of the oligarchic idea of government. Their conceit made them assume that they alone were fit to govern and all who disagreed with them were only to obey. The gentleman's ideas would be subversive of popular government, for he announces his unwillingness to abide by the decision of the majority.

The gentleman from South Carolina is ably seconded by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER]. Being a Democrat, the gentleman is a constitutional lawyer, of course. He argues that this legislation would be unconstitutional. He admits, however, that a "very respectable tribunal has ruled otherwise." The Supreme Court of the United States will undoubtedly be as pleased at this compliment from my friend as they will be grieved at his inability to concur in their decision.

His obligations to the colored race the gentleman desires us to understand he fulfilled when at an early period of his existence he kindly condescended to receive the nourishment so essential to an infant statesman and constitutional lawyer from his dear colored nurse. It is not the first time that the "dear old black mammy" has been called into requisition on the other side of this Chamber. God only knows how many Democratic statesmen the dear old lady is responsible for. [Laughter on the Republican side.] We simply ask you, gentlemen, that you extend that same consideration to her brothers, her sons, and her uncles that you professedly and confessedly have for the "old mammy," her sisters, and her daughters, and her aunts.

You are simply befogging the issue with your sentimentality. The question before us is, Shall the majority rule in this country? and to that I will address myself.

Mr. Speaker, the opponents of this bill seem to take a special delight in calling it a partisan measure. They say it is legislation in favor of the Republican party. Perhaps it is. They evidently fear it is. Sir, if this bill favors the Republican party it is because honest elections favor the Republican party. If this bill interferes with the continued supremacy of Democracy in certain sections of this country, it must be because that party relies for success upon methods which will not bear the light of day. The very arguments against this bill afford the strongest reason why it should pass.

All that this bill endeavors to do is to guaranty to every citizen his right to cast an untrammelled ballot and, having cast it, to have it honestly counted. We are legislating in the line of popular government. We are the "Democrats" in the true sense of that much-abused word, while you, my Democratic friends, represent special classes and advocate the recognition of an oligarchy to take the place of your much-lamented slavery.

We believe that no Republican governmental structure can be enduring without giving to the masses of society a full and free opportunity to be heard, and yielding implicit obedience to the legally expressed will of the majority, while your every effort goes to deprive the honest laborer of his right to vote, or to juggle with his vote, if cast, and your position on this bill proves it. You can not deprive Southern labor of its manhood without, at the same time, striking a deadly blow at Northern labor, for, regardless of color, they are co-laborers in the same field and competitors in the same market. The law can not protect the one without benefiting the other. Nor can it withdraw its protection from the one without seriously affecting the other. This is fully appreciated by our labor organizations, and any one who has read the journals devoted to the welfare of the laboring classes can not fail to have noticed the interest with which they advocate ballot reform.

This is a question of manhood suffrage. It is nothing more, nothing less. The question is whether caste shall be recognized in this country, whether a select few, possessed of superior intelligence, coupled with a supreme contempt for law, shall be permitted to hold the majority by the throat and sustain themselves by daring lawlessness in the official positions they have stolen. Your fight on this bill, my Democratic friends, gives away your case. If you had the majorities in your respective districts behind you, if you felt that your elections were honest, you would welcome and not avoid light and publicity of your methods. Instead of that you cringingly whine about frauds at the North.

No one here defends or excuses fraud at the North. If there are any election frauds at the North which this bill does not aim a blow at, propose your amendments and I for one promise you my support; but do not—

Excuse the sins you are inclined to
By damning those you have no mind to.

Fraud ought to be condemned wherever found, and your cry of sectionalism is puerile and does not meet the issue.

The bill is carefully guarded so as not in any manner to infringe upon the rights of the States. Its provisions are strictly confined to Congressional elections, which affect the legislation of the whole country, and it does not in any manner undertake to regulate local or State elections. The committee has kept strictly within the provisions of section 4 of Article I of the Constitution, which reads:

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

The bill before us is also general in its application. It can be invoked as readily in Wisconsin as in Louisiana. One hundred electors in any one Congressional district may invoke it and put the machinery in motion for the whole district. Fifty voters in any one county or city may secure its operation as to their county or city. If its exercise is not invoked in any district it will be because there are not one hundred men in the district who believe elections are not honestly conducted, or, which can hardly be presumed, because there are not one hundred voters in the district who desire honest, fair elections. And still we are accused of aiming a direct blow at the South by proposing this bill. There never was such an insult offered to the South as is implied in that charge. If elections are honest in the South—and I doubt not that in many districts they are honest—this bill will be a vindication and prove it to the world. If not honest, your charge that it is sectional is an excuse and apology for and defense of crime.

I am free to admit that as far as my State is concerned there is not much necessity for this legislation. We have local self-government in Wisconsin, something unknown south of Mason and Dixon's line. Our towns and cities elect their own precinct election officers, the surest guaranty to my mind of honest elections.

There are many precincts in my district where every officer of election is a Democrat, but the honesty of the election is never questioned. Their returns command the same implicit respect and import the same absolute verity as where the board is made up wholly of Republicans or of both parties. This, I think, can be accounted for by the fact that our local election boards are elected by the same voters whose ballots they receive and whose will they register in their returns. They are the leading men of their respective towns or cities. The eyes of their neighbors, whose confidence and good opinion they very properly and naturally court, are upon them and they can ill afford to juggle with the suffrages of their neighbors. As a result I verily believe our elections are as fair and free from fraud as it is possible to make them. And I say it to the credit of Democrats and Republicans alike, for there is no difference in the confidence our local election boards enjoy.

This system of absolute home government in elections has been further supplemented in Wisconsin by the Australian ballot, making the corruption of the voter practically impossible. Were the system of local self-government in elections general throughout the country, I should not be in favor of the intervention of the General Government in this manner. I should in that event trust to the leaven of righteousness to be found in every community to work a safe and just solution of the question before us.

As a member of the Committee on Elections of the House, it has fallen to my lot to examine into the laws and methods of a number of States on this question, and it is astounding to a Northern man, accustomed to our local township government, to find how absolutely the people of the South have been robbed of every vestige of control of their own elections, at the same time that her political leaders have been shouting themselves hoarse, accusing the Republican party of centralization and infringement of "State rights."

"State rights" has served not only to clip the wings of the American eagle and cripple the Federal Government, but it has absorbed all the vital force and energy of every community within the State. If you honestly object to centralization consistency would suggest that that idea is as objectionable when lodged in a governor or State Legislature as when lodged in a President or United States Congress. I do not believe in it in either. I believe that all-enduring self-government must be like a pyramid, broad at the base, and that local self-government forms the foundation-stones supporting the whole.

But our Southern friends have inverted the pyramid and are now trying to support the tottering structure on its apex.

No foreigner studying our institutions, their origin and development, has viewed with a keener philosophy the question of local self-government and its beneficial influence upon the life and habits of our people than did the Frenchman De Tocqueville more than fifty years ago. In his Democracy in America, in discussing this question, he says:

It is man who makes monarchies and establishes republics, but the township seems to come directly from the hands of God.

There is certainly—

He says, referring to township government—

no nation on the continent of Europe which has experienced its advantages. Yet municipal institutions constitute the strength of free nations. Town meetings are to liberty what primary schools are to science: they bring it within the people's reach; they teach men how to use and how to enjoy it. A nation may establish a free government, but without municipal institutions it can not have the spirit of liberty.

In America not only do municipal bodies exist, but they are kept alive and supported by town spirit.

And referring especially to New England, where he finds the system of local self-government most fully developed, he continues:

The New Englander is attached to his township, not so much because he was born in it, but because it is a free and strong community, of which he is a member and which deserves the care spent in managing it. In Europe, the absence of local public spirit is a frequent subject of regret to those who are in power; every one agrees that there is no surer guaranty of order and tranquillity, and yet nothing is more difficult to create.

And he touches upon the spirit of patriotism, which is the natural result of this local system of self-government, as follows:

The native of New England is attached to his township because it is independent and free; his co-operation in its affairs insures his attachment to its interests; the well-being it affords him secures his affection, and its welfare is the aim of his ambition and of his future exertions. He takes a part in every occurrence in the place; he practices the art of government in the small sphere within his reach; he accustoms himself to those forms without which liberty can only advance by revolutions; he imbibes their spirit; he acquires a taste for order, comprehends the balance of powers, and collects clear, practical notions on the nature of his duties and the extent of his rights.

And in another place he says:

The township, at the center of the ordinary relations of life, serves as a field for the desire of public esteem, the want of exciting interest, and the taste for authority and popularity; and the passions which commonly embroil society change their character when they find a vent so near the domestic hearth and family circle.

Instead of smothering the budding ambition this system gives it vent and a safe escape. Our Southern friends are sitting on the safety-valve and depending upon their personal weight for security, at the same time that they recognize the increasing force of the elements and passions which they are endeavoring by main strength to control.

De Tocqueville is corroborated to-day by the fact that in those portions of the country where the township government is the least restricted there is no complaint of violence or fraud at elections. But even in his day, over fifty years ago, he recognizes differences in this respect in different sections of the country.

He says:

The farther we go toward the South, the less active does the business of the township or parish become.

And that consequently:

The power of the elected magistrats is augmented, and that of the voter diminished, whilst the public spirit of the local communities is less excited and less influential.

It is significant that this was written long before there was any "negro suffrage," and when that could not be given as an excuse or apology for suppressing the will of the voter. And still we find at that time this same tendency towards an oligarchic and aristocratic system of government in these States, which has reached more formidable proportions under the "Solid South" of later days. The cry of "negro supremacy" is a later invention, to cover the natural growth originating long before the enfranchisement of the colored race. It is a hollow pretense, used by the self-styled and self-appointed leaders to detract attention from their insidious attacks upon the rights of the common people to control and manage their own affairs.

There is no such school for intelligent citizenship and self-government as is found in our township system of the North. And at its very foundation lies the right to choose the officers to register the will of the community which they serve. Were this system general through the country all the evils which this measure is intended to remedy would gradually correct themselves.

There can be no greater crime against popular government than the suppression by force or fraud of the legally expressed will of the citizen at the ballot-box. It is treason to the sovereign and should be punished as such. If this bill shall check this evil and secure to the voter his right to cast a free ballot and have it counted as cast, the results upon the intelligence and patriotism of the future citizens of this country and upon the stability of our institutions will prove it one of the most important measures ever adopted by a self-governing people.

I have not examined the laws of all the States, but believe that the facts warrant me in saying that in none of the southern tier of States is the choice of election officers lodged in the community in which they are to serve. The citizen seems to be discredited at the very outset. He is insulted in your very legislative enactments with the implied charge that he is not fit for and can not safely be intrusted with the duties and responsibilities of self-government, but that some higher power, not emanating from himself, but coming down from the "State," must supervise and direct and control his action.

In good "Old Virginia" the Legislative Assembly appoints three electoral commissioners for each county. These in turn appoint the precinct judges. The precinct judges return members of the Legislative Assembly. It is a perfect wheel with the Legislative Assembly at the crank. There never was a more perfect invention for self-perpetuation in office than this. No people should be subjected to the temptations which it offers to designing and unscrupulous men. And the tendency in Democratic States is all towards this centralizing of power to permit a few officials in the State to control the elections.

In Maryland from the organization of the State—yes, from the very beginning of colonial government—down to the session of the last Legislature, the power of appointing local election boards was vested in the sheriff of the county. But some of the counties elected Republican sheriffs. The Democratic majority was dwindling away. And the late Democratic Legislature of Maryland took away even this slight approach to home government and removed the control of elections one step further away from the people by placing the power of appointing local election officers for the whole State in the hands of the governor.

That such tremendous power in the hands of one individual is dangerous to the free exercise of the elective franchise there can be no question.

In the State of Mississippi an electoral commission, consisting of the governor, lieutenant-governor, and secretary of state, forms the fountain-head from which flows all authority to supervise and conduct elections.

In Alabama the power is vested in the sheriff, county judge, and clerk of the court; in South Carolina it is in the State; likewise in Florida and North Carolina; in Arkansas, in the county judge.

In short, you may look all through the Southern States in vain for a discoverable trace of the home town or city government of the Northwest, inherited by us from New England. In Democratic States the tendency is all the time in the opposite direction, to rob the local community of the privilege of controlling its own affairs and to place at the head of the government the "State" instead of the people constituting the State.

We know why this is done. It grows out of the natural aristocratic tendency of the old slave system, aggravated by the change by which the labor you formerly owned became endowed with a legal status equal to your own. This hurts your pride, and, instead of assisting these new citizens with your advice and experience, you resort to any means, lawful or unlawful, to retain control and satisfy your vain selves that you are still the political superiors. You admit this in private. Your press admits it. The opposition to this bill admits it. It is admitted everywhere except "for the Record." The bar of this House forms the dividing line. Before it you are Jekylls; behind it you are Hydes. You are leading a double and unnatural and dishonest existence. Northern Democrats advise you that you must not be frank when discussing this measure upon this floor, as the truth confessed would hurt the party at the North. We all understand it and sympathize with you, for you are naturally a frank, open-hearted, truth-loving people, except when the interests of the Democratic party are at stake; and they are generally at stake when its history and methods are discussed. [Applause on the Republican side.] You resort to methods in elections at which civilization blushes. It is not a very noble and generous impulse which prompts an otherwise noble and generous people to see its own exaltation only in the oppression and degradation of others. It is a relic of barbarism, and not an evidence of civilization or Christianity.

It ought not to surprise us that the same sentiment which advocates and supports such legislation as that to which I have alluded should take the next step and advocate the disfranchisement of labor and of the unfortunate poor and ask legal recognition of a property qualification in the voter.

There is a call out for a constitutional convention in the State of Mississippi. A leading Democrat of that State, an eminent jurist, at present one of the judges of the supreme court of the State, and an exponent of the advanced thought of the Southern Democracy on the question of suffrage, Judge J. A. P. Campbell, has issued an address to the people of Mississippi advocating the requirement of a property qualification in the voter and suggesting that such a provision enacted into law would restore supremacy to the whites, who there are equivalent to the Democracy. He seems to admit that under present law the Republicans—he prefers to call them negroes—have an undisputed large majority, impliedly, at least, conceding that in some unlawful manner only can the present Democratic control of that State be sustained.

What an admission for a member of the highest judicial tribunal of a great State to make! The clear-headed judge sees objections to his plan. He recognizes the resistance naturally to be expected from those whose only safety to life and liberty is the very ballot of which he desires to deprive them, and, combating in advance some of these objections, he says:

There should be nothing startling in the proposition to confer additional votes on a prescribed basis. The practice is familiar in the business world. In every joint stock company men vote according to the number of shares they own. Why not modify this sound business principle so as to make it safe, and apply it to government in our exigency?

The "sound business principles" of joint stock companies in this country generally aids the large stockholders in freezing out and squeezing out the small ones. Apply this principle which the judge advocates to government and the result will be the same. Government would in a few years be entirely in the hands of the wealthy few, who would ride rough-shod, like an ancient baron, over us common mortals. It would be the first nail in the political coffin of labor and manhood suffrage.

The judge continues:

One of the great objects of government is the conservation of individual ownership of property. The prime object and function of government is to protect men in the enjoyment of life, liberty, and property. Why, then, shrink from making that fixed property, which is the subject of general ownership by the whites, as far as may be found necessary, a basis for augmenting the power of its owners?

The inconsistency of the last two sentences can only be explained by confining the word "men" to mean "white men." It was no doubt so intended. And further:

The right to vote is political, not natural—a privilege rather than a right. It belongs to every community to prescribe who shall vote and how many votes each person may cast, and this may be changed at pleasure. The people, in whom sovereignty resides, except as limited by the Constitution of the United States, may confer power to vote on whom they please and take it away when they wish to do so.

I know full well we can continue to govern this country. I have no fears as to that. But if we should have to resort to shotguns and Winchesters or to fraud, that would be too undemocratic for me, and it would be destructive of that "liberty, equality, and fraternity" so dear to us, and should be avoided if possible.

Now I do not feel like conceding that to a native citizen at least the elective franchise is "a privilege rather than a right." Such a doctrine may be true under a constitutional monarchy or under a government lately evolved from political guardianship, but it ought not to find sanction under our form of popular government, where—citizenship being established by birth or by adoption—manhood must be taken as evidence of political equality. The presumption is here in favor of the right, and the burden is upon him who challenges it.

"Resort to shotguns and Winchesters or to fraud," says Judge Campbell, should be avoided, "if possible." If possible to retain Democratic supremacy without them, of course. If the non-property-owner—generally the negro, but also the "poor white trash," for the judge makes no exception in his proposed legislation in favor of the "proud Caucasian," if the "proud Caucasian" does not possess the requisite wealth to command his respect and attention—will submissively lay down at the feet of his more fortunate and wealthier neighbor the elective franchise with which the laws of his country and its Constitution have endowed him, well and good. But, should he obstreperously refuse to do this, then the judge would, no doubt, turn his face to the wall, while his party friends proceeded, by violence or by fraud, to take away from him that which ought to give him a voice in enacting laws for the protection of his life, his liberty, his family, his all. The change advocated could never be made without, at the outset, depriving the legal voter of his right to be heard, but that does not, in the least, seem to shock the eminent judge.

Another Southern jurist, Judge Cate, of Arkansas, has spoken to this House upon this question. In his contest for a seat upon this floor he justified in his brief the outlawry by mob violence from the State of certain negroes of Crittenden County, Arkansas, some of whom had been elected and were at the time of their expulsion serving as county officers, upon the ground "that the whites own 98 per cent. of the property of the county." The fact that this property would be worthless without the labor does not suggest to these leaders of Southern thought the remotest idea that labor is entitled to any consideration. They proceed according to the doctrine that "whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that which he hath."

Mr. STOCKDALE. Before the gentleman leaves that branch of this question will he allow me to interrupt him—

Mr. HAUGEN. Not now.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I thought the gentleman would not be willing to yield on that point.

Mr. HAUGEN. Very well; I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I wanted to say that in the State convention of Mississippi that nominated delegates at large to the constitutional convention that plan was not indorsed, and that nearly all the counties have nominated such delegates, and not one county has indorsed the plan.

Mr. LEWIS. Only one.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Only one county has adopted or recommended the plan the gentleman speaks of.

Mr. HAUGEN. Very well, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has the benefit of his statement. I spoke of Judge Campbell as being a leading Democrat; does the gentleman deny it? The very fact that such arguments come from and are seriously discussed by leading men of the State shows an unhealthy state of public opinion on this question. I quote the statement of Judge Campbell for what it is worth.

It is a relief to a believer in popular government and manhood suffrage to turn from such plutocratic and narrow views to the broader, more humane, and more philanthropic ideas of the leaders and exponents of Republican thought.

The illustrious Speaker of this House, in a speech lately delivered at Pittsburgh, Pa., used the following language, in striking contrast to the expressions of the Southern gentlemen I have quoted. Mr. REED said:

Manhood, and not riches, manhood, and not learning, is the basis of our Government. We would like all our citizens to be learned, we wish they were all rich, but until they become both we will take the average of all of them as they are. Nothing less than that would be government "by the people."

Your laws may be bad, they may be sadly out of harmony with the ideas of home government or self-government, as we understand those terms, but this bill recognizes the State laws, such as they are, and only asks that all States, all communities, shall in good faith obey their own laws. And still we meet with objections. Our Democratic friends are not even satisfied with the enforcement of their own laws. We will take the most ingenious law you have devised to shut out voters and only ask you to honestly and openly enforce it. And still you object. You well know that district after district at the South would be Republican even with those laws honestly enforced. And you know that your party managers never hesitate at any unlawful act to set aside the lawfully expressed will of the majority, if that majority is not Democratic.

No stronger argument in favor of a national election law can be made than found in a letter written by the able gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] on December 28 last and published in the New York Tribune of March 24. The letter is addressed to a Mr. Seymour, who, I believe, is a member of the Democratic State committee of Mississippi. On the subject of a national election law and the effect of its passage Mr. CATCHINGS says:

You are mistaken, I think, in your idea that good would come of a general election law. In such an event I fear that many whites would leave us, destroying our solidity and cementing and making effective that of the negroes. I would regard it as a great calamity.

He speaks as a Democrat, I suppose.

If Cleveland had been elected the Republicans would have offered as a settlement of the question the repeal of the fifteenth amendment. Now they will not listen to anything, because they think they have satisfied the North and broken the solid South, and it looks as if they have done both. With a coercion election law nearly all of the Southern districts would soon be represented by white men largely elected by the negro vote and the negroes would be even more intense and aggressive than they are in Virginia, for they would be more numerous. We would have race collisions at first, but gradually they would be allowed to vote and would capture everything and this would cause them to organize in county and State elections also and give us additional trouble. I hope we will never have the law forced upon us.

There is plainly written between the lines the admission that the will of the majority does not at present find free expression in Mississippi, and that a national election law will effect that object; that the South is not honestly solid, and that under strict supervision, making fraud impossible or extremely difficult, the solidity of the South would melt away. It is not the negro as an office-holder that my friend General CATCHINGS fears, but the negro as a voter, for what he would consider a "great calamity" is that "whites largely elected by the negro vote" will represent Southern districts, "nearly all of the Southern districts," to use his words.

But we need go no further than to the official returns for evidence of unfairness to the North in the present election methods, and I desire to make a few comparisons by way of illustration between the official returns of Congressional elections in Georgia and like returns from Wisconsin. Other Southern States compared with other Northern States would show the same discrepancies, though perhaps less marked.

I turn to the election returns for 1886 and compare the figures returned by her own officers of election from Georgia with the official returns from Wisconsin. In 1886 there were 27,430 votes cast for members of Congress in Georgia. There were 283,590 votes cast for members of Congress at the same election in Wisconsin. The 27,430 votes in Georgia elected ten Congressmen. The 283,590 votes cast in Wisconsin elected nine Congressmen. If a voter in Wisconsin possessed the same power as a voter in Georgia, on this basis Wisconsin would elect 103 representatives instead of only nine. Or if the Georgia voter were reduced to an equality with the Wisconsin voter Georgia would have on this floor only one representative instead of ten. The Georgia voter is not numerous, but he wields a formidable ballot.

The average vote of a Congressional district in Georgia was 2,743. In Wisconsin it was 31,510. One vote cast in Georgia has the same influence upon National Government, upon questions of taxation, internal improvements, control of corporations, pensions, etc., as 11½ votes cast in Wisconsin. In Georgia 1,604 votes elected my friend Mr. CRISP. The lowest vote cast in any one district in Wisconsin was in the district of my Democratic colleague, Mr. BRICKNER, which cast 25,916 votes. Both districts are presumably Democratic. Comparing these two districts, the district in each State casting the lowest number of votes, we find that 1,604 votes elect a Representative in Georgia, while it takes 25,916 to accomplish the same thing in Wisconsin. In other words, one vote in Georgia, on this basis is equal to 16 votes in my colleague's Democratic district in Wisconsin.

In the district I have the honor to represent there were 35,744 votes cast in 1886, and the comparison between those two districts shows that 1 vote in the district of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] was equal to about 22 votes in the Eighth district of Wisconsin.

Twenty-seven thousand four hundred and thirty votes in Georgia elected ten members of Congress. Each one of the districts in Wisconsin, except that of my colleague, Mr. BRICKNER, cast a larger vote than was cast in all the ten districts of Georgia. The census of 1880 gave to Georgia a population of 1,539,048; to Wisconsin 1,315,480.

As our Georgia colleagues are legislating for Wisconsin as well as for Georgia, they will pardon us for insisting that in this common game, in which all the people of this country are interested, they shall not play with loaded dice. All we want is fair play. There will be more prosperity and happiness in our family circle if you accept the situation. Do not sulk and pull out of the game because you can not boss it. You have tried that, and recollect how the head of the family got after you and brought you back.

The North is asking nothing, it wants nothing, that it is not willing to grant. We simply say, let the majority rule and let every qualified voter freely cast his ballot. We are willing to submit to any scrutiny in our States to attain this.

The great difference in election methods in the North and in the South seems to be that in our campaigns every nerve is strained to get every voter to the polls, while in many portions of the South every device is resorted to to keep him away.

As a mere educational institution the ballot-box and the conduct of elections are invaluable. As De Tocqueville says, "Town-meetings are to liberty what primary schools are to science." But our Southern friends are proceeding upon Mrs. Partington's theory, that Ike must not go near the water until he has learned to swim.

The world is moving on towards a recognition of the common brotherhood of man. Ever since the first French revolution the tendency in all governments has been towards the recognition of the individual and the breaking down of distinctions based on accidental birth, wealth, social relations, or learning.

He who stakes his life and the happiness of himself and family for his country, that being his all, offers as great a sacrifice as he who tenders his millions. One has as much interest in the stability of his government as the other. The safety of the future depends upon maintaining the absolute political equality of all.

Whoever is unwilling to trust to the intelligence of the average of his countrymen, as given voice and life at the ballot-box, is not a believer in popular government. And when a great party takes the unpatriotic position that the majority can not be safely trusted and defends methods to defeat its expressed will, it is taking a position so grave, so ominous in its consequences as to make the most enthusiastic believer in popular government doubt whether after all man is fit to govern himself. [Applause on Republican side.]

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has fifteen minutes remaining.

Mr. COVERT. Mr. Speaker, I hazard nothing in saying that the most fervent and pronounced advocates of the measure now under discussion are the most impressive and declamatory in the enunciation of the often-quoted statement that this is "a Government of the people, by the people, and for the people."

I challenge all legislative history to produce any measure which shows greater distrust of the people, any proposed law which exhibits greater lack of faith in a Government by the people than the measure now under consideration.

This Republic had reached a century of its existence before a thought had been formulated looking to so sweeping a change in the fourth section of the first article of the Constitution regulating the manner of the election of Representatives to the Federal Congress. By common consent the work of the framers of the Constitution had been left substantially untouched in this regard, and the right of the Legislatures of the several States to prescribe the times, places, and manner of holding Congressional elections had never been seriously threatened, even by the most daring iconoclast.

Can any fair-minded man seriously believe that necessity exists for changing now a plan and policy that has stood the test of a century's trial?

Are we left in doubt as to the underlying motives for the passage of this bill? The history of the present Congress shows that the party in possession of the various branches of the Federal Government have deciphered the handwriting on the wall. By a reckless exercise of power they have sought and are now seeking to perpetuate their ascendancy, even if their acts demonstrate their utter lack of faith in the people who make the Government. There can be no doubt of the motives underlying the effort to make this measure the law of the land. Leading representatives of the dominant party have, with assumed frankness, expressed their reasons for urging the passage of this bill and for overturning conditions which have prevailed for a hundred years of time.

In the city of Pittsburgh there exists, it seems, an association known in contemporaneous history as the "Americus Club." To this club, a few weeks ago, went the present Speaker of this House. Whether or not the association in question is "a deliberative body" I do not know. [Laughter and applause.] Certain it is that the Speaker, while deprecating speech-making in this House and, according to current report, "thanking God that this House is no longer a deliberative body" [laughter], unbosomed himself of an address before the assembled wisdom of the Pittsburgh club, taking as his text this proposed measure of Federal interference with elections. The gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. HAUGEN] has read extracts from this speech, and I also desire to quote from it:

Mr. REED said:

I have not for years been one of those who have talked about the South. For the last eight years no man has heard me, in the House or in the campaign, discourse upon either outrages or wrongs, murders or shootings or hangings.

And then the Speaker of the House, after this solemn silence of long years, generalized about alleged ku-kluxism, midnight shootings and harryings, bulldozing, ballot-box-stuffing, and cheating in the counting of votes.

Why he should have kept silent on these topics for years on the floor of this House and then discharged the whole lurid accumulation upon the devoted members of the Pittsburgh club can only be accounted for upon the theory that the Speaker really believes this House has ceased to be a deliberative body and that the Americus Club is such, and upon the further theory that the time has come to again "fire the Northern heart," and that heroic treatment must be resorted to to accomplish this result.

For, said the Speaker—

Progress is of the essence of Republicanism. To have met great emergencies as they arose has been our history. To meet emergencies as they shall arise must be our daily walk and duty, or we cease to be.

And the Speaker of the House was right. To meet great emergencies as they arose has been his party's history.

They met a great emergency in 1880 by sending Dorsey to Indiana, where, by the lavish expenditure of their corruption fund, the State was saved to them. Do you deny it, gentlemen of the majority? They met another great emergency in 1888 by the raising and expenditure of another immense election fund, under the auspices of the immaculate QUAY and by the efforts of the sanctified Dudley, whose confidential letters to his henchmen will live forever in the annals of our political history.

Divide the floaters into blocks of five and put a trusted man with necessary funds in charge of these five, and make him responsible that none get away and that all vote our ticket.

This was the injunction of the treasurer of your national committee in 1888. Do you deny it, gentlemen? Can any one say that the injunction was not carried out?

These are the methods by which you met these emergencies—the lavish and corrupt expenditure of money—which the Federal supervisors to be appointed under this bill can not check or control and are not expected to check or control. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Discreetly silent as to the acts and utterances of the Dorseys, the Dudleys, the Quays, and the Fosters of his party, the Speaker, after generalizing about alleged outrages in the South, continued thus in his Pittsburgh speech:

What, then, is the remedy? I speak only for myself. What I say binds nobody but me, and not even me if the Republican party prefers another policy; but, speaking for myself, it seems to me that the only wise course is to take into Federal hands the Federal elections. Let us cut loose from the State elections, do our own registration, our own counting, and our own certification.

Here, then, is the underlying motive for the passage of this bill. Fearing that even the lavish expenditure of money will not be effective in meeting the emergency that confronts the party, it is necessary that the North should be alarmed and solidified by another recital of alleged Southern outrages, making this measure seemingly a measure of necessity for the South. It is not intended to be put in operation in the North. It is not intended for the district in Maine which sends the Speaker of this House to a membership here. It is not intended to be operative in the Massachusetts district represented by the author of the measure.

I firmly believe that the honest public sentiment of every Congressional district in the North would absolutely condemn the local enforcement of the law. But it is in the South and in the South alone, and to prevent by Federal intervention the freedom and fairness of elections there, that this bill is intended to be operative; and that this is the object and purpose is abundantly shown by the public utterances of the Speaker of this House.

If there be any one principle dearer than another to the mass of the American people, North as well as South, it is the principle of local self-government, the power of localities to establish regulations for their own guidance and government.

This principle more than any other in our whole governmental policy is distinctively American and appeals most strongly to the national heart. More than any other element entering into our system it fosters and strengthens this Government by and of the people. The advocates of this principle and supporters of this policy of local self-government have ever since the establishment of the Republic exhibited a generous confidence in the ability of the people to pass for themselves upon questions of governmental policy, in the ability of the people to govern themselves.

The old Federal party, from the very adoption of the Constitution, and the successors of that party, by whatever name known, have uniformly shown a distrust of the people and an indisposition to extend to them the privileges of self-government whenever and wherever this power could be abridged under color of law or of projected law.

I venture to say, sir, that since the old Federal party contended for a strongly centralized government, with the nearest possible approach to absolute power vested in the hands of Federal authorities, no more daring attempt to interfere with and weaken the power of the people in this matter of local self-government has been attempted than is sought to be consummated by the passage of this measure.

When the Federal Constitution came from the hands of its framers and was submitted to the various States for ratification insistence was most strongly made upon the principle that "all powers not expressly and particularly delegated by the Constitution are reserved to the several States, to be by them exercised."

I know that reliance is placed by the advocates of this measure upon the elastic phraseology of the concluding paragraph of Article IV, section 1, of the Constitution.

This is their "city of refuge," this the authority to which they turn when their power to make this serious innovation upon conditions long established is made the subject of challenge. Let me quote the section in its entirety:

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

Standing alone, with nothing to throw light upon the motives of the framers of the Constitution for the enactment of the concluding paragraph or of those who ratified it, it would seem that adequate power was intended to be given to Congress to alter at will any regulation established by State Legislatures for the regulation of Congressional elections.

No matter if a policy of non-intervention with this principle of local self-government had practically existed for a full century of the existence of the Republic; no matter if the several States, exercising within their own borders the powers conferred upon them by the Constitution, had successfully demonstrated their power to exercise with wisdom and with the best results the powers thus given to them; with no side-lights to show the impelling motive, it might be reasonably argued that the Federal Congress had the power to change at any time, at its own whim or caprice, a system and method affirmatively and directly provided and established by the fathers of the Republic.

Fortunately for those of us who are sincere in our desire to perpetuate this as a government of and by the people, we are not without light to show what was intended by the addition and retention of the concluding paragraph of the section just quoted. This very article regulating elections to the Federal Congress received deep and earnest attention when the several States were called upon to ratify the Constitution. Fears were even then—a hundred years ago—entertained by some of the wisest men who represented the States of the new Republic that grave dangers might follow the adoption of the section in its entirety. Even at that early day the specter of Federal intervention in the elections in the individual States alarmed those who had faith in the ability of the people to govern themselves. In the conventions of Massachusetts, South Carolina, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, and my own State of New York, words of earnest warning were spoken by far-seeing men against the retention of the concluding portion of the section.

How like the voice of prophecy are some of these utterances, coming down to us through the years that have gone. The lips that framed these utterances are cold and lifeless, but the words they framed, the protests they voiced, live and will live in reproach of those who, with impious hands, would seek to tear down the fabric which has existed almost untouched and unmolested since the very birth of the Republic. Let me seek to reproduce the echoes of some of these utterances, these notes of warning, and the arguments by which the fears of prudent and patriotic men, men who sincerely believed in a government by and of the people, were allayed.

When this section was under discussion in the State convention of Massachusetts in 1793, Mr. Bishop, one of the members of the convention, said:

By the fourth section Congress would be enabled to control the elections of Representatives. It has been said that this power was given in order that refractory States may be made to do their duty. But, if so, why was it not so mentioned? It has been said that the conduct of Rhode Island in recalling its delegates from Congress has demonstrated the necessity of such a power being lodged in Congress. If the States shall refuse to do their duty, then let the power be given to Congress to oblige them to do it. But if they do their duty Congress ought not to have the power to control elections. In an uncontrolled representation lies the security of freedom, and by this clause that freedom is sported with. In fact, the moment we give Congress this power the liberties of the yeomanry of this country are at an end.

Mr. Strong, speaking to the same question, said:

If the legislative bodies of the States, who must be supposed to know at what time and in what place and manner the elections can best be held, should so appoint them, it can not be supposed that Congress, by the power granted by this section, will alter them; but, if the Legislature of a State should refuse to make such regulations, the consequence will be that the Representatives will not be chosen and the General Government will be dissolved. In such case, can gentlemen say that a power to remedy the evil is not necessary to be lodged somewhere? And where can it be lodged but in Congress?

Mr. Jarvis said, speaking in the same connection:

If it was argued that Congress might abuse their power, and, by varying the places of election, distress the people, it can only be observed that such a wanton abuse can not be supposed, but if it could go to the annihilation of the right the people would not submit.

In the New York convention of the same year, in discussing the ratification of this section, Mr. Jones said, "he did not think it right that Congress should have the power of prescribing or altering the time, place, and manner of holding elections. He apprehended that the clause might be so construed as to deprive the States of an essential right, which, in the true design of the Constitution, was to be reserved to them."

Mr. Jay said:

Every government is imperfect unless it had the power of preserving itself. Suppose that, by design or accident, the States should neglect to appoint Representatives, certainly there should be some constitutional remedy for this evil.

The obvious meaning of the paragraph was that if this neglect should take place Congress should have power, by law to support the Government and prevent the dissolution of the Union. I believe this was the design of the Federal convention.

The New York convention only ratified the Constitution in full confidence that until amendments might be adopted—the Congress will not make or alter any regulation in the State respecting the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators or Representatives, unless the Legislature of this State shall neglect or refuse to make laws or regulations for the purpose or from any circumstance be incapable of making the same and that in those cases such power will only be exercised until the Legislature of the State shall make provision in the premises.

And the same direction in substance was made by the conventions of Massachusetts, South Carolina, New Hampshire, and Rhode Island.

Surely sufficient has been quoted from the debates and proceedings of the various State conventions called upon to ratify the then newly framed Constitution to establish the fact that grave fears were entertained relative to the large powers conferred upon Congress to unduly interfere with Congressional elections in the various States. Enough has been extracted to show that these fears were allayed by representations that these powers would be exercised only in the following emergencies:

Neglect on the part of the States to call elections, to prevent the dissolution of the Government by designing and refractory States, and to provide a remedy should any State by invasion or other cause not have it in its power to appoint a place where the citizens thereof might meet to choose their Federal Representatives.

No one has urged, and I challenge any gentleman on this floor to suggest, that any one of these emergencies has arisen or is likely to arise in any one of the States of the Union.

No, Mr. Speaker, it is through no fear of any emergency or condition which the framers of the Constitution imagined might occur, but through an idea—a mistaken one, it seems to me—that a perpetuation of power may follow affirmative action, that this measure is being pressed by those who favor its adoption.

And what is this proposed enactment which is to be the grand panacea for all imagined evils and which it is mistakenly supposed will continue indefinitely the power of its supporters?

Stripped of many superfluous words and needless repetitions, this bill of seventy-six pages embodies these provisions:

Chief supervisors of elections in judicial districts are charged with the execution of the law, which is to apply to Federal elections in cities of 20,000 inhabitants, or upward, and in entire Congressional districts exclusive of such cities, upon application to the supervisor of 100 voters, or in counties or parishes forming a part of a Congressional district upon application from 50 voters. The supervisors are to guard, scrutinize, and supervise registration and every act or incident connected with registration and plans for ascertaining who are legal voters. Upon notice from the chief supervisor, the United States circuit courts are required to open for the purpose of transacting registration and election matters.

The supervisors are to be appointed by the circuit courts, three in each election district or voting precinct, but two of whom are to be of the same political party. The supervisors are to attend all registrations in their districts, challenge persons, personally inspect and copy the original registration books and papers, attend elections, and detect and expose the improper or wrongful manipulation of the lists. In the case of failure of local election officers to put the statutory oath to a challenged voter and to pass at once upon his qualifications, then the supervisors are to apply the test and receive and deposit the vote, making a list of all such challenges. They are also to personally inspect ballot-boxes before elections, keep independent ballot-lists, and inclose rejected votes (indorsed with the name of the voter) in envelopes.

In addition to these duties the supervisors are required to make, in towns of twenty thousand people and upwards, a thorough house-to-house canvass before election, to inform voters upon inquiry where and in what box to deposit their ballots, and to scrutinize naturalizations. In canvassing the votes the State laws are to govern, except that all ballots are to be counted by tens, first by an inspector of election, and second by a supervisor, the local election officers and the supervisor keeping separate tally sheets, which are to be compared and the result publicly announced. Ballots deposited in the wrong box are to be counted.

Returns are to be made by the supervisors in duplicate to the clerks of the United States circuit courts and to the chief supervisor, who is to tabulate and refer them to the United States board of canvassers of the Congressional vote, which is to be appointed by the United States circuit court, and consisting of three citizens of the State and persons of good repute, no more than two of whom are to be of the same political party. The board is to convene on November 15 each even year, and is to declare and certify the result of the election, and send one return to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, one to the governor of the State, and one to the proper chief supervisor of elections.

The Clerk of the House is to place upon the roll of members-elect the names of the persons declared elected by the United States canvassers, in case there is a difference in the result reached by them and the State election officers. A penalty of between $1,000 and $5,000 is provided in case the Clerk neglects this duty. All boxes are to be clearly described, with its nature, and boxes are to be kept in plain sight and open to inspection. Bribery or attempted bribery of voters or election officers is made punishable by a fine of not more than $5,000, or imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

Like severe penalties are provided for false registration and voting, repeating, coercion of supervisors or voters, improper conduct of election officers, false canvassing, ballot-box-stuffing, fraudulent-ballot distribution, resistance to a supervisor's lawful commands, breach of the peace at registration or election, intimidation, and almost every known kind of election fraud.

It will be observed that, without any proof, or, indeed, any pretense of actual or suspected fraud or wrong, at the option of an irresponsible and insignificant minority, representing about 1 per cent. of the voters of the locality to be affected, all this elaborate and expensive machinery can be set in motion, and the law, with all the odious features it embodies, can be forced upon a possible unwilling majority of 99 per cent. in the localities to be affected by its operation.

I take as authority the carefully digested opinion of able and practical members of the committee that this bill may, if it becomes a law and its operations are extended over the whole country, give rise to the employment of 350,000 Federal-election officers at an estimated expense of $10,000,000 every year when the regular Congressional elections are held. But I am not discussing the matter of the possible expense entailed. I am discussing the utter uselessness of this bill, and I am endeavoring to analyze the motives which are behind it.

Under former acts but two supervisors were employed at any one precinct. This bill enlarges the number to three, two of whom may be of the same political party. The judges and clerks of the circuit courts are made agents in carrying out the provisions of the bill, subjecting these judicial officers to participation in possible plans for party supremacy.

The chief supervisor may send to the circuit court lists of persons whom he shall believe to be eligible for appointment as supervisors until the court shall have appointed such number as the chief supervisor shall believe to be sufficient to provide for the filling of all election districts. No publication of these lists is directed to be made and no opportunity is afforded to challenge or question the character or fitness of the persons thus recommended. After action upon the lists so presented is had by the court, the lists of eligible persons are directed to be filed, not in the office of the clerk of the county or district affected, where they would be open to the public, but in the office of the chief supervisor of elections, not for public inspection, but, as this bill vaguely puts it, "for future reference."

To make the law as obnoxious as possible to the principle of local self-government, power is given to the chief supervisor to transfer any subordinate from his home district to any other part of the Congressional district affected and for this subordinate to perform his duties among people whom he does not know and who do not know him. In cities or towns of 20,000 inhabitants this possible stranger may, under instructions from the chief supervisor, "make a thorough house-to-house canvass," and ascertain the name, age, nativity, term of residence in county, State, or district, "and other qualifications as a voter" of every male person therein residing, to make a list of all naturalized persons and the names of their witnesses.

The echoes of the protests of an indignant people over the inquisitorial character of the work of the present census have not yet died away; but I submit that these sections of the pending measure are infinitely more obnoxious than anything committed to the hands of the census enumerator and which provoked general and merited adverse criticism.

Mr. DUNNELL. Will my friend from New York yield for a question?

Mr. COVERT. Certainly, sir; though my time is limited.

Mr. DUNNELL. Is not the gentleman from New York aware of the fact that these questions which appear in the census blanks of this year are precisely similar to those which appear in the census blanks of England and of all the civilized nations of Europe?

Mr. COVERT. Possibly all this may be so. I do not challenge the statement of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] about that, but I want to remind my friend from Minnesota, and I want to remind gentlemen generally on the other side, that in the monarchical countries of Europe governments have for hundreds of years sported at will with the rights of the people and have treated these rights with contempt. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] I want to remind my friend from Minnesota that this is not an empire. [Renewed applause.] That we live to-day, thank God, in a free Republic. [Renewed applause.] I want to remind gentlemen on the other side that this Republic still lives, and that we live under it, despite the efforts that have been and are being made by you of the majority to weaken and destroy the virtues of Republican institutions. [Loud and continued applause.]

Mr. DUNNELL. Will the gentleman from New York allow me to ask him another question? I want to ask him one further question.

Mr. COVERT. I would be glad to answer now all questions if I could, but my time is limited. At the conclusion of my remarks I shall be glad to answer any question of my friend from Minnesota, but he must bear with me for the present. I have spoken, sir, of the distrust of the people shown by the promoters of this bill. This distrust evidently enters the opened doors of the temples of justice and extends to the very courts in session there.

The bill empowers the Federal supervisors "to observe and scrutinize the manner in which naturalizations are being made, and to aid the courts in the matter of preventing fraudulent naturalizations; and for these purposes to have at all times free access to all rooms where such proceedings are being conducted." The bill naively adds, however, that the provisions of this subdivision shall apply only to such "discreet or special supervisors" as shall be detailed by the chief supervisor, the inference being unavoidable that not all of the supervisors to be appointed are discreet or are to be safely intrusted with the difficult and delicate duties enjoined upon them by the proposed measure.

All through the bill these Federal supervisors, appointed over the heads of the citizens and voters of the several States, are given powers in the registration, reception, and counting of votes where Congressional elections are involved, equal in every respect to the powers devolved upon the tried and trusted inspectors elected by the people. The presence and voice of the Federal supervisor areas potential as those of the inspector, more potential perhaps because of the stronger Federal power behind the supervisor, and which will stand ready to sustain and uphold him in his official action. Surely it is not too much to say that the presence of these Federal supervisors at the polls, charged with the large, explicit, and discretionary powers given to them by this bill, will be the herald and the signal of the death of local self-government. It will be a shameful and humiliating confession that the citizen is no longer the sovereign and that a government of and by the people no longer exists. [Applause.]

But perhaps the most iniquitous features of this most extraordinary and unnecessary measure are the sections providing for the establishment of United States boards of canvassers. The members, appointed by the circuit courts, are to hold office "so long as they are faithful and capable;" they are to canvass the votes cast for Representatives in Congress in any State in which this Federal election law shall have been in operation and are to make certificate of the result of their canvass and return a copy of the same to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, who shall place upon the rolls of the House the names of those declared by these Federal boards of canvassers to have been elected.

Where, then, are the rights of the people in the individual States to conduct and certify elections for Congress held within the limits of their several States? Swept away, as the leaves are swept by a blast of the autumn wind!

Where, then, is the principle of local self-government? Throttled and sent to its death by the clutch of Federal authority!

Where, then, is this ideal government of and by the people? Existing only in an empty name and having no more actual being than a dream of the night! [Applause.]

The attempted passage of this measure; the projected presence of Federal supervisors at the polls, with the large powers here given them; the establishment of Federal boards of canvassers, with authority greater than that exercised by State boards, recall most vividly the history of the darkest days in the existence of the Republic. Not the days of the civil war, because, dark and gloomy as that period was, it was lightened and illumined by deeds of heroic valor performed by myriads of brave men on the field. It was lightened and glorified by the spectacle of a devoted people sacrificing without a murmur its best and truest blood for the preservation of the Republic and for the continuance of this Government of and for the people. [Loud applause.] The darkest days of the Republic, in the truest sense, were the times following the close of the war, the time known as the period of reconstruction, and extending up to the time of the completion of the Federal commission following the Presidential election of 1876.

Has the country forgotten the dark history of this period of less than fifteen years ago? Have the outrages perpetrated in the sacred name of law in the States of Florida and Louisiana faded from the recollection of intelligent men?

Bear with me while some of these incidents are briefly recalled. Nothing but the exigency of the time, nothing but the importance of the matter here discussed, induces me to invite attention to these occurrences, blots upon the fair pages of the Republic's history which every lover of his country would gladly forget if he could and would refuse to uncover and reveal unless at the stern command of duty.

During the Republican control of Florida the State had a returning board whose duties were to scrutinize the count and make an honest return of the votes actually cast. Their duty was to publicly canvass the vote as shown by the returns on file and to forward certificates to the secretary of state and governor. In 1870 the supreme court of Florida had decided that it was the duty of the State canvassers to determine whether the papers submitted to them were genuine returns, and, if so, to count and canvass them; and in 1876 the same court, of which a majority were Republicans, unanimously reaffirmed that decision.

On the face of the returns the State of Florida gave a majority for the Tilden electors. This result was overcome by the Republican board of canvassers by arbitrarily rejecting portions of the votes regularly and duly returned to them. By an unlawful exercise of discretionary power they excluded the entire return from Manatee County, which had given the Tilden electors 262 votes as against 28 votes for the Hayes electors. But the returning board, without having judicial power, threw out the whole vote of the county, because they said the board of registers had no clerk. It was known as a Democratic county, and Stearns, the Republican governor, had purposely refused to appoint any one as clerk. This was evidently a plan to steal the vote of that county, and the vote of that county determined the vote of the State.

Parts of the returns from the counties of Hamilton, Monroe, and Jackson were excluded for like unreasonable causes—the votes thus thrown out aggregating over 1,000—and thereby the State was counted for the Hayes electors.

And thereafter came the work of the Electoral Commission. By a strict party vote the commission refused to inquire into fraud in the appointment of electors, and refused to receive evidence thereof or to inquire into their title, and refused to recognize the vote cast by the electors appointed in accordance with the constitution and the laws of Florida, and which, upon the completion of the canvass directed by the Legislature, and conducted in accordance with the direction of the supreme court, had been verified as the only real appointment by Florida. Corrupt as the returning board may have been, let us see, apart from the action of the Electoral Commission, what was the effect of immediate Federal intervention so far as the certification of the vote of Florida was concerned.

Eight officials, prominently connected with the Federal Government, and three "visiting statesmen," standing very near to the then Administration, were in constant attendance upon the State board during its sessions, giving to the board the "moral support" of their presence and presumably their advice in canvassing. Can any sane man doubt that the presence of these accredited agents of the Federal Government tinged and shaded at least the action of the State board in reaching a conclusion? It is a significant fact that each of these three "visiting statesmen" at once upon the incoming of the Hayes Administration was rewarded with valuable office. Noyes was made minister to France, Kasson minister to Austria, and Wallace governor of New Mexico.

While the conditions in Florida during this dark period were most deplorable, the conditions existing in the State of Louisiana were, if possible, still worse. Her returning board was given power to possess itself of the returns and, if any protest accompanied them, to hear evidence as to the allegations contained in the protest and to decide thereon; and the law authorized them, in case they decided that the election at any poll had not been fair and free, to exclude the poll entirely, but not to purge or correct it. The only purpose of this provision seemingly was to disguise fraud, and this purpose was carried out to its fullest extent. But, notwithstanding all these partisan devices, as a result of the largest vote which had ever been cast in the State, the Tilden electors received a majority of over 6,000 votes, and the returns were unaccompanied by a single protest, except one, against Republican frauds in Concordia Parish.

The returning board had no power, in the absence of protests, except to canvass the votes and certify the result. But an emergency confronted them, and the emergency was promptly met. The Speaker of this House has told the country that it is the mission of his party to meet these emergencies. Supervisors of registration were induced, after the returns had been received, fraudulently to pretend that it was unsafe to make protests with their returns. Proof exists that supervisors who had certified to a perfectly free, full, and peaceable election were induced by party persuasion and promises of reward to make false and fraudulent protests, and all this after the returns had been submitted to the returning board.

As an instance of the methods practiced, it has been conclusively proven that a Republican conspiracy was concocted in the parishes of East and West Feliciana by which all or nearly all the Republican voters absented themselves from the polls, thereby affording a pretext for rejecting the vote of these localities, where there were large Democratic majorities, on the ground of alleged intimidation. The proof was that the election in both these parishes was perfectly fair and free from all intimidation or restraint; it further established that one Anderson, the supervisor of elections for one of these parishes, was urged to protest his parish; that he refused on the ground that there was no foundation for such a protest, but that he finally yielded upon promise of Federal reward, and thus it was arranged that over 1,000 votes were rejected from West Feliciana and more than 1,700 were thrown out from East Feliciana. Another instance of injustice was this: In Orleans one return showed 297 or 299 Democratic votes; because the last figure was so formed that it could not be clearly determined whether it was 7 or 9, they rejected the whole poll.

I have not the time, Mr. Speaker, though I have the notes before me, to show other instances of gross wrong and corruption in the canvassing and return of the vote of Louisiana at this election. By every arbitrary and unjust act enough Democratic votes were excluded to give the State to the Hayes electors and to Packard for governor.

And now as to Federal intervention in the bringing about of this result. How easy it is to discern "the trail of the serpent."

In this State, as in Florida, the managers had the support of leading members of their party, specially delegated by President Grant to attend the canvassing of the votes. They were there, as Assistant Postmaster-General Brady testified: "To represent the President, and to say to the witnesses that the Republican party and the authorities at Washington would stand by them."

Can any fair-minded man doubt that the presence of these "visiting statesmen," with all the authority that their presence implied, their tone and manner, coupled with the presence of Federal bayonets, the intervention of both the civil and military branches of the General Government, influenced and controlled the certification of the vote of Louisiana and gave that State to the Hayes electors, despite the large majority the Tilden electors had received?

These gross outrages upon the rights of the voters of Louisiana met the commendation and approval of the party in power, the party now clamoring for "purity in elections." This is shown in no uncertain way. Wells, president of the returning board, was made surveyor of the port of New Orleans; twelve others, connected with the same body, were given lucrative official positions, the various supervisors were likewise provided for, and, indeed, every one officially connected with the frauds and outrages practiced in the Louisiana election of 1876 was recognized and rewarded by appointment to Federal position.

To show the utter hollowness and insincerity of any claim that the vote of Louisiana was rightly certified by the returning board and approved by the Electoral Commission, it need only be stated that Packard for governor had received over 2,000 more votes in the State than the Hayes electors; and yet so soon as the new President was inducted into office he declined to recognize Packard as governor, withdrew the Federal troops from New Orleans, and Governor Nicholls, who from the first had claimed to be elected governor as the Democratic nominee, thenceforth continued to act and to be recognized as governor of the State.

The present Speaker of this House was a member of a committee appointed by the Forty-fifth Congress to inquire into the matter of these frauds and wrongs in Florida and Louisiana. He presumably heard the testimony offered before the committee. Is it any wonder that for long years he has stood absolutely mute upon this whole question of alleged Southern election outrages?

This, then, is the primal aim and object of this projected law. It is not intended to benefit the Southern Republicans so much as to "fire the Northern heart" and to induce the belief that gross wrongs are perpetrated upon the negro voter of the South, wrongs which will be remedied by the passage of this measure.

If current reports of discussions in the caucus which adopted this measure are to be credited, leading and influential Southern and Southwestern Republican members of the House utterly condemned this measure and protested against its enactment into law.

They denounced this bill as a sectional measure, productive of nothing but evil to the South. They declared that it would only intensify race prejudices and engender sectional hostility. They pointed out the fact that with all the talk of alleged frauds in North Carolina, Alabama, and other States of the South not a single indictment had yet been found, though judges and district attorneys were alike Republican. They asked, if fraud was rampant in these States as charged, why could not Republican officials enforce the laws now on the statute-books? They urged that what was needed in the South was for them to be let alone and that force bills and election bills would prove abortive and make Republican success in those sections absolutely impossible.

These were honest Republican utterances, coming from the very sections intended to be affected by the operations of this proposed law. They were words of sober truth and earnestness. The effect of this measure in its operation in the South can only be to "intensify race prejudices and engender sectional hostility." Under its provisions are afforded room and scope for just such practices as disgraced the political history of Florida and Louisiana during the period I have discussed.

Federal intervention worked untold evil with the elections in those States then. There is room and verge for the perpetration of greater wrongs in every State in the Union under the provisions of this bill if it becomes law.

The days of the returning boards and of the Electoral Commission have gone—the liberty-loving people of the whole land had fondly hoped never to return.

At once upon the breaking up of the infamous methods which had characterized the period of reconstruction a new era dawned upon the South, her people, and her interests. Honest methods, both in her elections and in the conduct of her public officers, took the place of false registration, corrupt manipulation of votes, and reckless and dishonest methods of conducting State affairs. The credit of the several States, absolutely broken and ruined during the reconstruction period, became fully restored.

Her people resolutely and manfully and honestly entered upon the work of building up their business interests and in developing the rich resources of the several States. Their efforts were crowned with an abundant, a marvelous success. The vast resources of the South were brought to the attention of the North, and a cordial invitation was extended to Northern people to migrate thither. In every section of the South warm hands greeted the men of the North and warm hearts gave them shelter. The question of party politics never affected the cordiality which awaited the stranger in the new-born South. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PETERS). The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. [Cries of "Go on!" "Go on!"] Mr. QUINN. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague [Mr. COVERT] be allowed to continue for ten minutes longer.

Mr. COVERT. I only ask five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to extending the time of the gentleman from New York as requested? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. COVERT. I thank the House for its courtesy and will not long trespass upon it. I was speaking of the migration of Northern people to Southern sections. Northern capital speedily found safe and profitable investment in Southern mines and Southern manufactures; these investments are there to-day, returning large and secure incomes to people having homes in nearly every section of the North. I ask gentlemen of the majority not to imperil by the passage of this bill the peaceful and prosperous conditions which prevail to-day in every State of the regenerated South, conditions affecting the peace and prosperity of every section of our common land. [Applause.]

Do not, gentlemen of the majority, seek to incite, or deepen, or strengthen a race prejudice fast dying out, even if it has not already ceased to exist. The rights and interests of the colored people of the South are amply conserved and protected under existing law; they are wage-workers and wage-earners; they have all the rights of citizens and voters; and, more than this and better than this, their children are being educated at State expense, and are thus being fitted for the better discharge of all the duties of citizenship. [Applause.] The problems that vexed the people of the South during the period of reconstruction have been substantially solved. If any yet remain their solution is being rapidly accomplished by natural and logical means.

I beg you, gentlemen, by negative votes upon the passage of this bill to again make assurance to all mankind that the civil war was ended over a quarter of a century ago. I ask you to give assurance again that no warfare is now being waged in or by the South except honorable battles for industrial supremacy and material prosperity. [Applause.] I ask you again to remember that the delvers in Southern mines are from the North as well as from the South and that they cast Republican as well as Democratic ballots; that smoke clouds ascend no longer from fields of carnage, but from the chimneys of factories conducted by men and means coming from the North and from the South alike; that cattle may be heard lowing upon the hillsides and in the valleys more than a quarter of a century ago devastated by the tread of contending armies; and that the observer, from an exceeding great height, looking down, can once again behold all the sons and daughters of America basking in the sunlight of a perfect peace! [Loud applause.]

It is our duty—it should be our mission—to make this peace a permanent peace, as enduring and as perpetual as the very life of this Republic. [Loud and long-continued applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FLOWER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], in his remarks yesterday, declined to be interrupted when he spoke about the election frauds in the city of New York in 1868. He went back twenty-two years to find fraud in that city and State. But, sir, since the legislation enacted by the Democrats and Republicans almost unanimously in the Legislature of 1870, we have had no election frauds in the city or State of New York, and since the bill passed last year embodying what is called the American ballot system, a bill voted for by every Democrat and every Republican in the New York Legislature, we have, as we believe, solved this question of an honest ballot without the intervention of a supervisor or any other Federal officer.

Mr. Speaker, if this House is ambitious to go down in history as the body that inaugurated a series of legislative acts having for its purpose the reversal of the policy that has received the sanction of the American people throughout a century of successful popular government, its efforts in that direction deserve and are well calculated to bring it a fair measure of gratified ambition.

It signalized its meeting by relying upon what some persons were pleased to denominate general parliamentary law, that is to say, upon the will of the presiding officer, for the integrity of its proceedings, and when forced by the demands of the minority and the strength of public opinion to adopt a system of rules, it enacted a code that is unprecedented in any free parliamentary body, and to which it has adhered only in so far as it could be made to serve the purpose of those to whom it owes its paternity, and from which it has invariably departed either by construction or the adoption of a special order whenever party exigency seemed to demand the pursuit of such a course.

ENACTMENT OF LAWS WITHOUT CONSIDERATION.

Under these pernicious methods of procedure, legislation the most far-reaching and radical has been enacted without consideration by the Representatives of the people; the Republican caucus has usurped the functions of the legislative department provided by the Constitution, and its dictates have been made the rule of action of at least this branch of Congress; that free and untrammelled debate which the Speaker of this House once very properly pronounced the normal state of a deliberative body has been abolished; amendment of measures of the utmost concern to the country has been made impossible, and the minority on this floor, representing a large majority of the people, has been silenced whenever, for partisan purposes, it has been desirable to rush through this body any pet scheme with its meaning unexposed. And now by these same dark-lantern proceedings it is sought to add the keystone to the arch of infamy by placing in our statute-books an unconsidered law intended to accomplish in the country what has been accomplished in this House as to the minority sitting here: to prevent the free expression of the will of the people and to secure by an ante-election decree a Republican majority in the Fifty-second Congress.

It is difficult, if not impossible, to satiate the ambition of the Republican party for power, and that party has taxed its ingenuity, trained in chicanery, without limit to devise methods of gratifying its appetite for spoils. Not satisfied with overthrowing the will and setting aside the choice of the people in this House by unseating their chosen Representatives by election, it now seeks to avoid this slight inconvenience of taking action in each case separately by the enactment before election of a measure that is intended to make a choice by the people impossible.

The consideration that the people will not long submit to have their rights thus trampled under foot takes nothing from the flagitious character of the attempt, and it remains to be seen whether or not the American voter is still sufficiently capable of self-government to place the seal of his condemnation on this attempt at the first opportunity that is afforded him.

It is not my purpose to undertake the discussion of the constitutional and purely legal questions involved in this legislation. This may well be left to those who have given more attention to the study of the law than I have. But, upon the policy of having the General Government invade the precincts of local administration and then set up its authority to dominate the people in their domestic affairs, my convictions are well settled in aversion, and I wish to give them expression upon some features of the pending bill.

ELECTIONS BY SUPERVISORS AND DEPUTY MARSHALS.

The whole measure is based on an unrepublican, an undemocratic, and an un-American distrust of the people and the officers selected by them, and is constructed upon the idea that a small Republican majority in Congress can better legislate for their interests and better administer the laws than they can themselves. It is a bill to provide for the selection of Representatives in Congress by supervisors and deputy marshals, and the people of various localities throughout the country know from experience the meaning of this way of conducting elections. It is not a bill to make a new system of regulations concerning elections, for it adopts in most particulars the systems of the States, but it is a bill to foist upon the people a horde of Federal officials responsible to no one who is able or inclined to compel them properly to discharge their duties. It employs the machinery of the States and utilizes the local officials to manipulate under the supervision of Federal officers the instrumentalities and returns of election. It is not the laws enacted by the States that the Republican party fears, but the free expression of a choice by the people of the local communities under those laws. It is, therefore, the object of this bill, not to repeal the laws, but to substitute for local officials the tools and subservient appointees of a Republican Federal Administration, under the immediate control of a chief supervisor with almost unlimited authority. The purpose of the measure is to get into the hands of the Republican party the whole election machinery of the States, and, in order to accomplish this design, there is manifested a willingness to degrade the Federal judiciary by dragging it into the filth of partisan politics and to make it the instrument of oppression to the people. Almost every circuit and district judge on the Federal bench belongs to the party that is attempting to drive this bill through Congress, and a more blindly partisan use of the judiciary of a country than will follow the enactment of this measure has never disgraced any people since the time of Jeffreys and the Star Chamber.

PROSTITUTING THE JUDICIARY.

No judicial system can be subjected to this abuse and retain the confidence and respect of the people; and any court that will lend itself to the execution of the corrupt purposes of a partisan clique and become the willing servant of an unscrupulous political oligarchy richly deserves the popular execration it is sure to receive.

The subjection of the circuit judge and the courts to the beck and call of the supervisor of elections to convene the courts at his pleasure, to execute his will, and to have its proceedings determined by the influence of a set of petty political corruptionists, bent upon installing in office the men who shall have been already elected by Republican conventions, can result only in unsettling the judicial system of the country and shaking that only sure foundation of our Government, the confidence of the people in Republican institutions.

It is provided that the circuit judge may assign any district judge within a State to the discharge of the duties devolved upon him whenever he is unable to discharge them himself and that the circuit judge may at any time revoke such assignment and make a new one or reassign the first district judge assigned. This is a wise provision in furtherance of the object of keeping the Republican forces well in hand, and it may be assumed that no district judge, once assigned to do the bidding of the supervisor, will prove recalcitrant. If he should become disagreeably free from the power of the supervisor, that august functionary need but to report him to his confederate, the circuit judge, and then have a more docile servant placed on the bench.

This autocrat of elections, the chief supervisor, has his powers well set out in the bill, though they are hardly as well limited and defined as ordinary precaution would require. About everything that is to be employed, everybody who is to employ them and everybody interested in their employment are to be "guarded, scrutinized, and supervised" by him and his minions. His presence and authority are to pervade the affairs of the people and his ipse dixit is to be the law, and any failure or refusal of the local authorities to conform to the discharge of the duties imposed upon them by their local laws to what he may be pleased to consider for the best interests of the Republican party is to be rebuked by their being hauled up, frequently many hundreds of miles from their homes and when they can not compel the attendance of their witnesses, before a partisan Federal court and a partisan jury summoned by a partisan marshal, to answer the complaint of a partisan supervisor or a partisan deputy marshal acting under the direction of a partisan chief autocrat of elections.

Sir, the history of political persecutions in some of our Federal courts is already rank with unscrupulous abuse of the law, and this measure, if passed, will add many a chapter to the story of judicial oppression. It makes crimes against the General Government many acts that are now punishable only by local law, and it reaches out to the private citizen and the public official alike, placing it within the power of a supervisor or deputy marshal to render impossible the discharge of public duties by those upon whom the States and local communities have imposed the obligation of their discharge.

CONFUSION OF AUTHORITY.

By the singular confusion of Federal and local authority the bill is calculated to bring about conflicts between the officers assigned to duty under the laws of the General Government and the States, and the most charitable view to the intelligence of the framers of the bill is that it is intended to produce these conflicts in order that tales of resistance to the laws of Congress may be told to influence those who are not acquainted with the conditions that produced the strife.

It is made the duty of the supervisors to supervise the registration and all proceedings pertaining to the registration of voters; to challenge voters and their right to registration; to watch over the adding to or taking from any registration-list and the transfer from one list to another of any name; to challenge the right of any name to remain on any list; to require any officer in charge to mark any name for challenge; to "inspect, scrutinize, and examine at any time" all books, rolls, or lists of specified registration systems; to make a copy of any documents pertaining to the registration of voters; when directed by the chief supervisor, to sign each page of the original registration papers "in such manner as will, in his judgment," serve the purpose for which he is directed to perform this duty. And all these things are to be done by him, notwithstanding the fact that such registration systems are established for the purpose of registering the voters in all elections for all officers, municipal, county, State, and Federal.

The supervisor must "personally examine and inspect," "before any ballot shall be deposited by an officer or elector in any box intended to receive any ballots for any officer whatsoever, the interior of each and every box" in which ballots are to be deposited at the election that day, to see that no Congressional ballots are there. And when, in the count, ballots for Representatives in Congress are found in any box intended exclusively for the deposit of ballots for other officers, it is the duty of the chairman or acting chairman of the inspectors of election to count such wrongly deposited ballots and to hand them to the chairman or acting chairman of supervisors. These things, with many, almost an infinity, more of a like kind, are to be done, and it may be safely said, sir, that never before in the history of this country has there been such a jumble of local and Federal functions in any law. Such a bungled mingling of duties of officers acting under separate authorities must inevitably involve the officials in conflicts and disturbances, and such an outrageous interference by Federal officers with the performance of their duties by the officials of the States will not be tolerated by a people who are devoted to the Constitution of the United States and who rely upon that Constitution for the preservation of their liberties; and the plea of party necessity will not prevail against their indignation.

What right, sir, has a Federal officer to be present at the counting of the ballots cast for the candidates for any local officer within a State? What right has he to examine, supervise, scrutinize, or inspect anything pertaining to that count? What right has he to take charge of or count any ballots found in the box used or intended exclusively for the receipt of ballots cast for local candidates? What right has he to interfere with the registration of voters who register to vote for local officers exclusively?

Sir, it does not require a great constitutional lawyer to answer these questions. He has no right, and his efforts to go beyond the warrant of the Constitution will be simply an outrage upon the rights of the people, an outrage which it is to be hoped will be met only by such resistance as the universal judgment of civilization will approve. A free people can not be expected to submit tamely to everything that party necessity may seem to require, but the American people can and will avoid becoming so exasperated as to resort to violence to resent an outrageous interference with their rights.

ELECTIONS HELD BY SUPERVISORS AND CERTIFIED BY LOCAL OFFICERS.

The bill provides that in case no polls are open at a polling place within one hour after the time fixed by law the supervisors shall open the polls and conduct the Congressional elections, making their returns to the local officers, who shall thereupon proceed as they would have been required to proceed had the election been conducted by the officers provided by local law, notwithstanding any provisions of such local law to the contrary. If the General Government may go into a State and direct the local officers in the performance of their duties, what, if any, limit is there to Federal authority? Why can the Federal Government not impose such duties upon these local officers as to destroy their usefulness to the State? Whence comes the authority of the Federal Government to compel a State officer to certify, under his oath of office, the correctness of any act of Federal officials who are entirely unknown to the jurisdiction to which he owes his official existence and who have usurped the powers of officers created by the laws of the State?

The power to make or alter the regulations prescribed by the States concerning the time, place, and manner of holding elections for Congress can hardly be invoked to cover up the load of duties that Congress might impose upon the officers of the States, with their consequent subjection to the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. If Congress can compel local officers to count and certify returns of Federal supervisors of elections under the provisions of State law, it can increase the duties of those local officers as to such returns; it can impose any duties pertaining to elections upon any officers of the State that it may choose to select for such service, impose upon them such duties as party necessity may suggest, enforce its regulations by mandamus and proceedings in contempt or otherwise, and thus utterly destroy the machinery of State government.

Mr. Speaker, it is not too much to say that the spirit of compromise in which the Constitution was framed and adopted did not contemplate the vesting in the General Government of the right to destroy the States. The attempt to control State officers in the discharge of their duties is a dangerous and threatening incursion into the domain of local self-government that no thirst for power can justify and no hypocritical pretense of a desire for a free ballot and a fair count can excuse.

DEPUTY MARSHALS INVADING THE HOME OF THE CITIZEN.

The framers of this bill are not, however, content to stop at a usurpation of the authority of the community, but extend their interference with the rights of the people to the individuals composing the community by providing for a house-to-house canvass, sending the supervisors and deputy marshals to force an entrance, if need be, into the houses of the people "to verify by proper inquiry and examination at the respective places of residence" of voters, the correctness of the registration books, and to make "a thorough and effective house-to-house canvass" of election districts to ascertain the qualifications of male voters residing there. The only commendable feature of this whole provision lies in the exemption, by the insertion of the word "male," of the female suffragists in Wyoming and elsewhere from the inquisitorial impudence of these eminently respectable Republican Federal office-holders in their endeavors to divide the floaters into blocks of five, with a trusted man with necessary funds in charge of each five, responsible that none get away, and that all vote the Republican ticket.

The legal maxim that a man's house is his castle, honored by the Anglo-Saxon race throughout time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, is to be eliminated from our system of law and in its place is to be substituted the provision that whenever it is suspected that the Republican party can purchase, intimidate, or otherwise influence a voter to its advantage then a supervisor and deputy marshal may go with all the power of the General Government at their backs. If this condition of affairs is permitted long to exist in this country, with men of the character of those who too frequently fill the positions of supervisors and deputy marshals to avail themselves of the opportunities thus open to them, the spirit of liberty is more patient and long-suffering than the history of our race will warrant us in believing it to be.

PROBABLE EFFECT ON STATE LAWS.

This bill proposes to repeal all laws and parts of laws enacted by any local authority that are inconsistent with its provisions, while leaving intact all that may then remain of any State's system of election laws, without regard to whether the parts that are left in force are consistent with each other or not. Nothing but experience can prove the effect of this heedless legislation. It may result in leaving among the statutes of the States parts of laws that will prove burdensome and useless if not offensive. It can not be said with certainty that the provisions of this bill will fit into these various systems as proper substitutes for the parts that it repeals so as to leave a harmonious and symmetrical whole. It is a thrust in the dark, an attempt to alter the regulations prescribed by the States without an intelligent inquiry into the status of the laws as they now exist. Of all the inconsiderate legislation of which this Congress has been and threatens to be guilty, this stands pre-eminent as a reckless and desperate measure to maintain a minority in power in the Government. Its purpose is to afford opportunity to fraud and to subject the elections, even in those cases in which the officers honestly endeavor to discharge their duties, to suspicion and uncertainty. The imperfect provisions for the administration of the act, the uncertain effect upon the laws of the States, the complicated and confused machinery of elections, the returns of defective ballots and of ballots deposited in the wrong boxes, together with the almost absolute control of the elections by Federal officials, all conspire to cast doubt upon the result and to give to a small majority appearing upon the rolls of the House at the beginning of a Congress some pretext to annul the action of the people and to defeat their choice; and we know from the experience of this session how slight a pretext will suffice to still the conscience of a small majority standing face to face with the defeat of its cherished schemes.

BALLOT-REFORM LEGISLATION BY THE STATES.

But, sir, of all times in our history the Republican party has chosen that which is most inappropriate to the enactment of a law that is intended to interfere with local control of elections. The last Presidential election, with its fat fryings, its blocks of five, its pay envelopes, its special committees to raise funds to be disbursed indirectly under the supervision of prospective Cabinet officers, and its multifarious methods of doubtful propriety aroused the people to a sense of the dangers that beset the elective franchise, and throughout the country the agitation for a reformed ballot has gone on until in many States the reformed ballot has been adopted and there is an encouraging prospect of its adoption in others. It is best to leave this subject to be dealt with by the public conscience in the several States. The system already enacted in some of the States is expensive to the people, it being estimated that the expense of the administration of the law newly enacted in New York, for a single election, will amount to $1,000,000 for ballots alone. The people who will subject themselves to this burdensome system in the interest of a fair ballot can as safely be relied upon to conduct fair elections as can a lot of irresponsible Federal officials who will reasonably expect their reward to bear a true proportion to their party services; and the addition to this burden of the expensive administration of this measure, with its pay of supervisors, deputy marshals, boards of canvassers, clerks, office hire, stationery, the routine business of the courts, the prosecutions for alleged offenses, and the hundreds of incidentals that will arise, is hardly to be compensated for by the possible ascendancy of the Republican party, and can not be properly characterized in parliamentary language.

The purpose of the reform laws in the States is to prevent bribery and intimidation at the polls by throwing around the voter all the safeguards that the State can control. The provision for voting booths and all the other provisions for a secret ballot are aimed at this evil and have been found to operate successfully. But this bill proposes to render nugatory all such provisions by the presence, supervision, and control of the Federal officials and by the bribery away from the polls of the voters in the districts by their appointment as supervisors and deputy marshals with greater compensation than the most of them would receive at their ordinary vocations, when they happen to have any avocation other than that of political strikers and election manipulators, which has not been very frequently the case heretofore.

BRIBERY OF DEPUTY MARSHALS AND ITS COST.

Supervisors are to receive pay at the rate of from $3 to $5 per day, except for election days, when they are to receive from $5 to $10, according to the population of, and whether or not there is a system of registration in, their districts, for from three to twelve days. Deputy marshals are allowed $5 per day for not exceeding eight days, and their number "shall be determined from time to time at conferences between the marshal and chief supervisor of elections." Thus the theater of action for the bribers is to be transferred from the polls to the conference chamber of the marshal and the autocrat of elections, where it will be determined how many bribe-takers it will be necessary to employ in order to obtain satisfactory results at the election. Sir, we are preparing to write the most shameful chapter in our political history, a chapter of bribery, corruption, and malfeasance in office, accompanied by the most flagrant outrages on the franchise and to the absolute demoralization of our people. The pecuniary cost of the law for a single year is a matter more of conjecture than calculation.

There is no means of telling even how many officers are to be appointed, how many deputy marshals are to be bribed to use their official positions to promote, by intimidation and the other methods with which they are so familiar, the interests of the Republican party. There are in the United States, in round numbers, 65,000 election districts, and it is safe to estimate that they will average at the very least $100 apiece for each election, making the total cost of officers appointed to defeat the popular will $6,500,000 for a single election. In the State of New York alone there are 3,566 districts, costing for such officers $356,600, which, added to the cost of administration of the State law, even if this act does not make its administration more expensive than it would otherwise be, will make the total cost in that State $1,356,000, not counting the cost for marshals, which may make it double or treble that sum; and it must be borne in mind that this great expense is, so far as the measure under consideration is concerned, exclusive of all outlays for matters other than the employment of officers appointed by the Republican administration to do the Republican party's "own registering, its own counting, and its own certification" in the interest of a free ballot and a fair count. The Republican party has become quite an expensive luxury and the people are rapidly educating themselves to do without it. The further along the educational process goes, the easier they will find it to dispense with the party.

WILL DEFEAT THE PURPOSE OF THE NEW YORK LAW.

Mr. Speaker, the last sentence of the seventeenth section of the new election law in New York reads:

There shall be but one ballot-box at each polling place for receiving all ballots cast for candidates for office.

The pending bill subjects the box in which the ballots for the Congressional candidates are to be deposited to the supervision, scrutiny, and substantially to the control of the Federal autocrats of elections, and in its thirty-fourth section provides very minutely for the position of the box and the time it shall remain in such position, and at the end of that section employs this language:

Nor shall it [the ballot-box] be removed from the room or from the place therein, which, under this act, it shall during the hours provided for the reception of ballots have occupied, at any time during the day or night of election until all ballots cast for a Representative or Delegate in Congress, in whatever box they may have been placed or found, shall have been fully ascertained, tallied, counted, and canvassed, and the statements and certificates therefor have been made out, signed, and sealed as provided herein.

Now, whatever may be the State law concerning the counting of the ballots cast for State officers, it must give way to the provisions of this act, and, the ballots all being on one slip or piece of paper, the vote for State officers must pass through the hands of the Federal officers before those whose duty it is to canvass and return it shall obtain possession of either the box or the ballots, even if they are permitted to obtain possession of them at all.

Just what effect all this will have on the legality of State elections is one of the things that experience alone can clear up, and experience is always a dear teacher; but to say that this provision for the handling of State and local ballots by a lot of Republican political strikers is dangerous in the extreme, is to indulge in the mildest expression that is in any degree appropriate to the situation.

But, to cap the climax, this bill provides in its tenth section that—

No certificate, statement, or return of the final result of the count and canvass of the votes cast for a Representative or Delegate in Congress shall be written upon, filed up, or signed by any officer, national, State, Territorial, or local, or by any person whomsoever until the final count of all ballots cast for every other officer than that of Representative or Delegate in Congress shall have been wholly completed by all persons authorized by law to count the same, and the certificates, statements, and returns of the result thereof shall have been wholly made out and completed.

Therefore, even if there were no other provisions requiring the presence at and participation of the Federal officers in the count for State and local officers, it will be necessary for the State officials to discharge all the duties required of them by State law in the presence of and under the scrutiny and supervision of the Federal election officers where the box is, in the place where it was during the hours of election, and then wait for the Federal officers to complete their statements, certificates, and returns before taking control of the box and the ballots, notwithstanding any requirements of State law that the officers shall perform their acts elsewhere and in another manner. In addition, there are provisions requiring the Federal officers to take possession, seal up, and carry away certain ballots, notwithstanding any provision of State law requiring their preservation for State purposes.

In some States no legal election for any office other than for Congress can be held under these provisions, and even the election to that office will be shrouded in doubt. Yet there are other provisions in this bill that are equally bad and that will further interfere with local elections, but my time is too limited for me to point them out.

Mr. Speaker, if this measure passes in its present form or in any form in which its friends will support it, it will, if sustained by the courts, revolutionize the Government and set up on the ruins of our free institutions a government by fear, force, and fraud. It means the inauguration of the state of affairs throughout the whole country that ruled for several years in a single section, with the substitution for the bayonet of the soldier of the club of the deputy marshal. Its immediate effect will be most harmful to the whole country, but the ultimate result will be that the people will drive from power in the Government the party that sought to profit by it before it can pull the whole temple down on their heads. [Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (during the delivery of the foregoing remarks of Mr. FLOWER) said: The hour allotted to that side of the House has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the time of the gentleman from New York may be extended, the additional time to be taken from this side of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what time is the extension asked?

Mr. FLOWER. I ask for ten minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. FLOWER resumed and concluded his remarks as above given.

Mr. SMYER. Mr. Speaker, it was my purpose to occupy my seat during this discussion and to say nothing on the measure now under consideration, and I assure the House I shall not take its time to any great extent.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not endeavor to make here and now a defense of the famous Electoral Commission of 1877 and its results. I would only beg of my friend of New York [Mr. COVERT] that he add by way of appendix to his remarks a few things in connection with that famous commission which seem to have escaped his attention. I suggest that in connection with his review of the frauds in Louisiana, Florida, and South Carolina he print in parallel columns an account of the attempts to steal the electoral vote of the State of Oregon. I suggest, further, that he print in parallel columns the order that came from South Carolina to Gramercy Park in New York to "saddle Blackstone at once;" and, further, the haggling about the price of Presidential electors in that State. Further (because it seems to me to make the argument of the gentleman complete), he ought to print as part of his speech the cipher telegrams that were unearthed after the result of that famous Electoral Commission was made known.

Mr. Speaker, the question that we ought to ask ourselves with reference to the bill under consideration is, is there any necessity for such legislation? If so, why? What is there in the condition of affairs that makes it necessary that we enter upon the consideration of the bill now before the House? I think, Mr. Speaker, that, so far as this side of the House is concerned and even so far as the other side of the House is concerned, it is agreed upon all hands that there is a condition of affairs that does call for the exercise of some power to correct the abuses and the wrongs against the honest voter throughout the land.

We feel on this side that there is a necessity for such legislation beyond cavil or controversy; and I do feel that no man who has been an observer of public events for the last fifteen years can be blind to the fact that there is a necessity for legislation somewhere to restrain and repress the wrongs and outrages that are committed against the ballot-box. So believing, your committee has seen proper to perfect and present to the House for its action the bill now under consideration.

What is this bill? What is the machinery provided for in the bill by which the object sought to be obtained may be accomplished?

We provide, Mr. Speaker, for the appointment of certain officers by the judiciary. I heartily indorse that feature of the bill, because if there is any one branch of the Government in which the people still have unlimited, unbounded confidence, it is the judiciary of the United States. The courts are vested with the power to make the appointment of these officers who are not to take charge, but to supervise, guard, scrutinize, and in only one contingency to make any certification whatever to this House of the results in their respective districts.

Who are the supervisors? From what has been said on the other side we would suspect that they are to be a pack of hoodlums, of hired heels, of hangmen-on, as my friend from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] terms them, who are to be rewarded for political service by appointment to these places. Why, sir, let me remind gentlemen that the bill itself provides the character of the men who are to be selected as supervisors. First, they must be persons of good character; they must be able to read and write the English language. They do not come from one political party only. They must be residents of the district in which they are called upon to exercise the functions of their office.

Now, if there is any necessity for legislation at all on this subject, if it is proper for this House to consider such a measure, I would ask what more carefully guarded body of men could be selected than is proposed in the bill now under consideration? We want men of good character; we want men who reside in the district; we want men who are able to read and write. Now, that is exactly what this bill proposes. And nowhere do these men take charge of the elections except in cases where it is conceded on all hands the elections are not free and fair—where the voter is kept from the ballot-box—where, if he is permitted to cast his ballot, that ballot is changed and another substituted. So the measure, I say, Mr. Speaker, is eminently wise, proper, and conservative.

Let me remind gentlemen that we are entering upon no new ground in the proposed legislation. It is no new experiment that we are trying. The experiment has been tried for nearly twenty years in New York; it has been tried for many years in Ohio; and although the distinguished gentleman [Mr. FLOWER] who preceded me may have been correct in saying that when the Legislature of New York provided a proper system of election laws the people there had honest elections, there is a strong suspicion that John Davenport and the United States law had something to do with honest elections so far as they have been had in the city of New York.

Take the case in my own State of Ohio. In the Forty-fifth Congress there were two members in this House who took their seats upon the other side who were no more entitled to seats as members of the House than I was, the only difference being that they were candidates at the polls and I was not a candidate. In 1878, when the election was held for Representatives in the Forty-sixth Congress, the people in the city of Cincinnati invoked the aid of the existing law, and the consequence was that there were returned to this House and seated here two members on this side, one of whom has continued to be returned year after year; I refer to my distinguished colleague, Hon. BENJAMIN BUTTERWORTH.

And when I say that the people invoked the aid of the existing law, let me ask gentlemen to remember that it is nowhere controverted in Ohio, it is nowhere controverted in the city of Cincinnati, that in the election of 1876 there was gross outrage and fraud, and that was proven, Mr. Speaker, by the indictment, the conviction, and the sentencing to the penitentiary of the ringleaders in that fraud.

Now, I say we are entering upon no new experiment. The existing law which has been enforced for some time has worked admirably and well. It has given satisfaction. It has deprived no man of his right to vote. It has protected all in their rights. Gentlemen can not go into the State of Ohio, they can not go into the county of Hamilton and find a solitary man to raise his voice and insinuate that, by reason of the fact that the Federal authority had been invoked in the election of 1878 and at elections subsequent thereto, any man who had a right to vote was deprived of the free exercise of that right. Now, we propose to extend simply the provisions of the existing law.

Why, gentlemen say this is sectional. Not so. That charge, or comment rather, Mr. Speaker, might well have been made against the existing law, because the existing law had its origin by reason of the frauds that had been committed in the State of New York. It was intended to be and was made applicable to the cities, but since that day, since twenty years have gone by, we find that frauds are committed elsewhere. We find that condition to exist in different sections.

Ay, Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned, you may say it is "sectional;" but I am here to say that my belief is and my people believe that now, after the years have passed, there exists in the State of South Carolina, in the State of Mississippi, in the State of Louisiana, and in other States a condition of affairs by which the honest voter has been deprived of his right to cast his vote and have that vote counted; and, as their representative here, I believe in extending over these sections the provisions of the existing law that has proved of such inestimable value to the people of New York and the people of Cincinnati and elsewhere.

What are some of the objections to the pending bill? The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] has complained of the great cost. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL], who opened the discussion on the other side, says that it means five hundred thousand or a million of marshals at the polls. The gentleman did not do himself justice in that statement; he did not do himself credit. The bill contemplates nothing of the kind. The bill does not propose to establish a marshal of the United States or an inspector at every voting precinct in the United States.

We have got no use for them in the district which I have the honor to represent. We have no use for them in nineteen of the districts of the State of Ohio. We have use for them in the First and Second districts of that State. But it is not contemplated by the law that everywhere there shall be inspectors and supervisors of the elections, because their presence is not necessary. It is only intended that where necessary, where the belief is that necessity exists, where the fifty or one hundred people believe, and by their petitions say, that a fair registration and a fair election can not, in their judgment, be had, there they shall have the right to invoke the provisions of the law, and it will only be invoked in such places where there is this danger that the election will not be fair and will not be free.

And, as I said, the gentleman from South Carolina does himself no credit to say that it means a million of marshals scattered around at the various voting precincts in the United States. That is not the purport of the bill; that is not its design or object; that is not its intention. No man on this side of the House ever for a moment entertained the idea that we are to plant at every voting place in the United States a marshal or a half dozen marshals and a half dozen supervisors of election.

So, Mr. Speaker, in that respect let me say the measure is conservative in its character. It takes a middle ground. For myself I believe in the National Government taking charge and control of national elections. I believe it to be the only way, or rather the better and the safer way, and the surer method of securing honest and fair elections and honest returns. But the judgment of the committee was otherwise, and in deference to that conservative spirit this bill is brought forth. It is not any radical measure, but it is a conservative one. Why, the very argument was then suggested that is now suggested: that there is no necessity for the application of this law in many districts in the United States. So the bill was drawn in the manner in which it is now presented, only to be invoked upon the petition of the residents of a district and when they have reason to believe that their registration and election will not be fair.

Then, and then only, and there and in such districts only, will the law as proposed be invoked. So that gentlemen on the other side are mistaken when they talk of the number of men to be planted around the polls.

Something has been said about the cost. God knows, Mr. Speaker, it is going to cost something. But it occurs to me that it is well worth the expenditure that a citizen, a man endowed with the rights of citizenship, a voter, should have the right to cast his vote and have that vote counted just as it was cast.

We are ready, if the rights of an American citizen are infringed by a foreign Government, with 60,000,000 people, with all of our treasury, to repair the wrong done to him. And yet, when people by the score are outraged at home, gentlemen say to us, "It is going to cost something." True, it will cost something; but, sir, if it is worth protecting the voter in his right to vote, it is worth the expenditure of all the treasure necessary to accomplish that result. [Applause on the Republican side.]

There is another thing to which I wish also to call your attention. I do not know whether it was in a moment of excitement or whether the gentleman from South Carolina understood the full meaning and import of his words when he said, in commenting upon that section which provides that the supervisors shall retain their offices for two months after the election. He used this language:

That the object of that provision of the law is to allow the officer who has robbed the people of their honest vote to escape punishment by flight.

Do you mean what you said? Do you mean what the language implies? Does the gentleman suppose that members on this side who come here under their oaths, having a regard for the responsibilities resting upon them, are actuated by no higher motives than to present to the members upon the floor of the House a measure which, if enacted into law, and by virtue of the provisions of which, shall furnish the machinery to shelter the rascal, the man who is robbing the people of their votes?

That is what the language means as used by the gentleman. Let me remind him that gentlemen on this side are actuated by as lofty motives, as noble purposes, as gentlemen on the other side, and he must pardon me if I say that we have a little more confidence in ourselves than we have in some on that side. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. Speaker, this remark undoubtedly escaped the gentleman in the heat of debate. We on this side are not a set of knaves. We are endeavoring to do our duty; we are endeavoring to respond to that sentiment which in 1888 resulted in transferring the power from that side of the Chamber to this. All over the North, yes, and in many parts of the South, this was one of the issues made.

Why, when we are told that the people of the North care nothing about this measure, let me remind the gentleman that in my own district, in my campaign in 1888, in discussing the tariff some intelligent men would say, "We are not with you on the subject of the tariff, we do not believe in the tariff doctrines as preached by you, but we stand by you and your party on another question that is of paramount importance. We stand with you in saying that every man, in any section of the country, black or white, rich or poor, ought to have the right to cast one ballot and have that ballot counted honestly and fairly, and for such legislation we propose to stand by you in your candidacy." It is one of the issues. Our people regard it as of more importance than anything else.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is said "all we ask in the South is to be let alone." That has been tried for fifteen years past. They have been let alone and let severely alone. They say they seek to work out their own salvation. You have had fifteen years of trial. I do not know whether you are any nearer the kingdom now than you were when you started. We do not object to your continuing to work out your salvation, but what we do object to is that you shall seek to work out our salvation on the same line.

Mr. McKINLEY. They have not reached the repentant period yet.

Mr. SMYSER. As suggested by my colleague from Ohio [Mr. McKINLEY] the repentant period is not yet reached. When reached, we will see whether or not the South is to be permitted to go on unintercepted as she has for the fifteen years gone by.

Mr. BAYNE. What more does a band of counterfeiters want than to be let alone?

Mr. SMYSER. As suggested by my friend here, what more does a band of counterfeiters want than to be let alone? I never yet have known a counterfeiter, or a man committing a crime of any kind whatever, but who said always to the grand jury and to the petit jury and to the court, "Please let me alone." It is universally the case.

Now, Mr. Speaker, will the bill under consideration accomplish the objects and purposes for which it is intended? A good deal depends upon the spirit and temper with which the measure is received if enacted into a law. If the people catch the spirit from the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. SPIKOLA] or the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] I apprehend and fear that the measure will not possibly accomplish the results intended. Why, let me read what the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. SPIKOLA] said on day before yesterday, when we were discussing the rule to consider the measure now pending before the House. He said:

I only want to tell you what we will do in New York, as we did in years gone by: That we will send your hirelings away from the ballot-box and not permit them to go there and control our affairs by any authority you can establish, military authority or otherwise; just as twenty years ago, when you sent them there, they were compelled to withdraw.

And as the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] says:

The negro can not have his rights and mine, too.

No, not his rights and yours, too; but you want your rights and the negro's too; and, by the Eternal, you shall not have them as long as there is a Republican majority in this House. [Applause on the Republican side.] We purpose to accord to every man entitled to vote the right to exercise that right and have that vote registered as cast and returned accordingly. What they mean on the other side when they ask to be let alone is to accord to the negro, as they say, no right, but to take the negro's right and appropriate that right to themselves; and against that, Mr. Speaker, I most earnestly protest. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, as I said when I started out, Mr. Speaker, that I would not detain the House, I will not do so. Our friends on the other side seem to think that in urging this measure for consideration, in arguing it, in presenting it to the House, in asking for its enactment into law we are actuated by some malevolent feeling, some feeling of hatred or of ill-will towards the South. Why, it is not so. Let me remind you on that side that whenever the South is devastated by flood or fire or pestilence, on every occasion with generous heart and open hand the North responds to the cry of your suffering.

When the great Father of Waters burst his banks and spread devastation among the people of the Mississippi Valley, who responded more generously than the people of the North? When the pestilence struck Florida, who responded more generously to the appeal of the people of her stricken city than the people of the North? In our midst your fleeing and your flying found homes and shelter. When God in his providence saw fit to disturb the elements, and the earth upon which stood the city of Charleston rocked until her buildings crumbled and fell, and the Chief Executive of the United States stood powerless, shackled and fettered by technicalities and legal obstacles, so that he was unable to render any help, who was it but the governor of the State of Ohio, a Northern State, that within twenty-four hours had the tents and blankets of Ohio upon the ground to shelter and comfort the homeless and shelterless people of the city of Charleston?

We love the people of the South. We have been contributing year by year of our population and of our capital to build up your waste places, to develop your resources, to start and keep you on the road to progress, that you have already entered. No! no! It is not that we have any hatred or ill-will for the South that we urge the passage of this measure; but it is because we have been led to believe, we have been educated to believe—we fought for the doctrine, we fight for it to-day; we have agitated, we will continue to agitate the doctrine—that every male citizen of the United States has a right to cast his one ballot fairly and freely and have that counted and have a certification of it honestly and fairly made; and because there is a well grounded suspicion in our minds, which has come to be a conviction, that such is not the case at this time, we are urging the passage of this measure.

We believe that it is wise and proper; we hope that it will accomplish the result intended. We seek to deprive no man of his right, and, if that be true, I can not understand why gentlemen on the other side declaim against the enactment of this bill into law. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. VAUX. Mr. Speaker, it is recorded in an authority that probably will be recognized all over this House that when a certain man found himself in a very uncomfortable place he asked that somebody might be sent to warn his five brothers lest they should come to so unhappy a condition as he was in. He was informed that those five brothers had Moses and the Prophets, and, if they would not believe them, even if one rose from the dead it would be of no avail.

I am just in the position now of calling to mind a question for consideration by this House on a subject that seems to have been, I am sorry to think, almost entirely forgotten of these late years by our Republican friends. Though one rose from the dead he could not revive their faith in the Constitution. The Constitution of the United States, I believe, is to be found in the Patent Office or some other place [laughter], and those who want to understand what it means must go to a glass case to look at a somewhat pale parchment; and having tried to ascertain what it is, for a moment, having made an inspection, they turn away saying, "Oh, the Constitution; that is a forgotten subject." And yet, Mr. Speaker, this House to-day is asked to legislate by enacting a bill which strikes out the very life of that Constitution. Whatever it has of life, enough of it is left yet to assert the proposition which I desire now to call to the attention of gentlemen on this floor.

I assert that this bill, as I have read it and as I have heard it discussed on this floor by my esteemed friends on the other side of this House, is virtually an overturning of the Constitution of the United States and destroying our form of government. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is the proposition I desire to present to this House, not by way of a superficial or momentary consideration of this question, but because I am solemnly impressed that the duty that belongs to every man who believes in this Constitution and in the Government founded upon it should now seek to save both from destruction, especially now when so few people, and especially the young men of the country, have any opportunity to be taught what are the principles and provisions of this Constitution.

I do not intend to occupy more than twenty-five minutes of the time of this House, and that has been kindly yielded to me by my friend from New Jersey [Mr. McADOO].

This act proposes to change the Federal Constitution. Now, Mr. Speaker, pray show me anywhere any authority in this Congress or any other, by an act to change the Federal Constitution. No such power was ever delegated to any Congress. The mode of changing the Constitution is provided in the instrument itself. No provision is given to Congress by an act, the power or authority to change or alter it. If this bill is enacted into law it is an usurpation pure and simple; an usurpation of the rights of the States absolutely and positively. There is no intermediate ground upon which the friends of the bill and those against it can stand. It is an usurpation of the rights of the States. Section 2 of Article I provides that—

The House of Representatives—
That is this body—shall be composed—
Of what and of whom composed?— of members chosen every second year—

By marshals and supervisors and prostituted partisan Federal courts or paid agents of the Federal Government? No. That is the bill. [Applause.] chosen by the people of the United States.

And the electors are the people who choose. They have certain qualifications. The people who elect members of Congress are thus described:

Shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature.

Therefore those who choose the electors, who elect members of Congress, in whom the power is vested with this qualification, are those people who are designated by the Constitution as a class. They are the men who have the same qualifications as those who elect the Legislatures of the States. Now, these elections must be conducted by State law. The primary proposition of the article gives to the States the power first to make the laws to regulate the elections and then the power to say who shall be those electors. Therefore, all the proceedings of the election must be under State authority, nowhere else. The friends of this bill can not direct us to any construction which takes away that eternal principle so long as this Government lasts. This act relies for power to enact and enforce it on the fourth article of the first section of Article I of the Constitution.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have shown three propositions: First, who are the electors; second, what constitutes their quality; and, third, that the people of the States are these electors and shall elect members of Congress, and no other persons. I do not suppose any gentleman will deny these primary propositions. But with reference to the article of the Constitution upon which this act purports to be based, I desire to call the attention of those gentlemen who take enough interest in the subject to listen to the singular wording of this article, which, so far as I have heard, has not been touched upon by any of the distinguished gentlemen who have discussed this bill. This article provides for what? First, the times; second, the places; and, third, the "manner of holding" elections.

Now, there are three things which this article sets out—the time, the places, and the manner; and if this bill goes beyond that limit it is unconstitutional and vicious. The time, the places, and the manner of what? Holding elections. Elections for whom? For Senators and Representatives. The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof. The Legislatures of the States are to prescribe the time, places, and manner—not the election, but the manner of holding—a primary condition before the election begins. The election itself is another thing. This applies to the manner of holding the election. But the Congress may do something. Now, what has Congress the right to do under this proviso on which this bill rests? "But the Congress may at any time by law make or alter"—make or alter what? "Such regulations." What regulations? Such regulations as to the time, place, and manner of holding the elections, and beyond that Congress is as powerless as the vane on the top of a steeple. Congress can not go beyond those three regulations as to the times, places, and manner of holding elections, but there is a condition, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as to the time of holding elections I suppose there is no doubt. As to the place of holding elections there is no question. Therefore those two subjects are eliminated from the consideration of this bill, and we come now to the manner.

If manner is the usual and accustomed mode, Congress may make or alter the form of this mode, provided it does not establish by law any form which is not elemental in the usual and accorded mode. Congress may properly alter visa voce to ballot or ballot to visa voce, for that is altering one form for another or making one of those forms the manner of holding the election.

When the Constitution declares the power to legislate, to carry out the power delegated, the power must be explicit and perfect in itself, as well as the auxiliary power to execute it.

The doctrine of implied powers is not recognized in the Constitution. This was a scheme to add to the power granted, not within the intentment of the grant.

That word "manner" is a very pregnant word in this article of the Constitution, and I desire to be informed where there is any constitutional interpretation of it to be found. You can not judge of it in its constitutional application by the definition of the lexicographer. You can not judge of it in its application here by any scientific definition or interpretation. It is not a philological problem. You must take it in the accustomed sense. You must take it as the word "manner" has always been understood from time immemorial—the manner of holding an election. Now the manner of holding—I do not think the word "holding" has very much to do with it, but "manner" is the crucial test of the interpretation of both words—the "manner" of holding involves what is habitual and accustomed, the habitual and accustomed manner or mode. If it is outside of that, then it is not the manner; and if it is not the manner then Congress has no control over it.

Now, how did this word "manner" come to be applied to the question of holding elections? There are three modes of voting or electing which can be comprised under the term "manner" as used in this provision of the Constitution. There can be a vote by ballot; that is one manner of holding an election. There can be a vote visa voce; that is another manner. There can be a vote by show of hands; that is a third manner. These three "manners" have been a part of the system of holding elections in this country ever since it was a country. In the State from which the author of the majority report on this bill comes, Massachusetts, the town court legislated in early days and voted. Even in Russia, that most abused country according to some of the modern patent philanthropists who go around meddling with everybody's business but their own and finding fault with everybody because they are so vulnerable themselves [laughter]—even in Russia, in a large part of the territory of that empire, the people assemble in public meetings and legislate and vote for their own interests so far as their different localities are concerned.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I hold that the word "manner" as used in this provision of the Constitution, applies to one of these three modes or manners of holding an election. We hear a good deal now about the Australian system, which, they say, is becoming very popular. I hope so. I do not know what it is, but I hope it will be adopted so as to save the consciences of the majority of this committee. But this Australian system is a "manner" of holding an election, just as the show of hands is a manner, or as the vote by ballot is a manner, or as the visa voce vote is a manner; and it is in this sense that this article of the Constitution refers to the "manner" of holding elections. Congress has the right to determine the manner, and nothing beyond this. Possibly a condition of things might arise in a State—I deny it, but possibly you could find some four or five gentlemen in black who sit here somewhere in the District of Columbia and give out admirable stump speeches on the Constitution and call them "decisions" of their court—possibly, I say, you could get an opinion from them that the power of Congress can go beyond this. But, Mr. Speaker, I am not one of those who believe that iconoclasm is a vice. [Laughter.]

As able a jurist as there is anywhere in this country has passed upon the meaning of this word "manner." In a decision of the supreme court in my own State of Pennsylvania the chief justice of that court, in deciding a question in which this word "manner" was involved, made use of this language:

The manner can not exceed the subject it qualifies or belongs to.

Now, if the manner can not be anything further than the mere formal expression of one or more of these "accustomed modes" of holding elections, then this bill as proposed here is utterly unconstitutional.

Having now determined, as I think conclusively that the "manner" has nothing to do with the election, I propose for a moment to call attention to what follows the "manner." After the "manner" has been determined—and it is by ballot—then comes the election. Now, do my learned friends on the other side of the House undertake to tell me that under this interpretation of that word "manner" they can by a Federal law go into every district of the United States, and that under the power which they claim is granted in that word "manner" Federal officers can assume to be, not the officers of the election, but the electors? Because if this bill means anything it means that the Federal officers who are to be sent into the various districts are to be electors. If it is claimed that through the power implied in this word "manner" we here can go into the subject and can send the Federal officers to these election districts to do what this bill proposes they shall do, then they become electors, and what becomes of that provision of the Constitution I have just read providing that the electors and their qualifications shall be such as the State prescribes?

The Constitution vests in the people the power to choose; and that power to choose is no emanation from the word "manner." It is the subject; and over this subject Congress has no control. This bill is unconstitutional the moment that it attempts to touch the subject. The moment that Congress undertakes to touch the election itself, it goes beyond the power conferred by the Constitution.

Now, how are we further to get at the interpretation of the word "manner"? Because I hold, according to my limited capacity to judge of this question, that the turning point as to the constitutionality or unconstitutionality of this act rests solely on the word "manner." There is nothing else anywhere in the Constitution by which such legislation as this can be justified, much less successfully defended. The power of Congress in this matter must rest on the word "manner." Have we no process by which we can find a constitutional or a legal interpretation of this word "manner" as used in this section of the Constitution? I assert—and I think it is beyond controversy—that the construction of this provision of the Constitution can not be affected by implication. You can not by interpretation inject into this word "manner" any power which will give Congress the right to legislate over the subject.

We know that implication is always against a granted power, so in this instance implication is against the limitless interpretation of this constitutional language. The implication is for a strict construction, and when we have a question like this, resting upon such terms as these words, "Manner of holding," you can not for a moment by interpretation change the meaning of that language so as to cover the holding of the election itself. It is against all common sense. It is against the consensus of opinion on historical teaching on this subject for six hundred years. It is against the opinion of men who have studied this question and performed their duties under the interpretation of this word "manner," this opinion having constantly been that the word belongs exclusively outside the subject and has nothing whatever to do with the subject itself.

Now, this section gives no power to hold an election. It refers only to the manner of holding; and when the "manner" is disposed of the whole subject is disposed of. The election, when you come to that, belongs to the people of the State. Therefore, after determining the "manner" of holding, the power of Congress ceases. After that the choosing begins; and the voters only can by State authority carry on this choosing. The manner has been disposed of; it is by ballot; then the provision of the Constitution with reference to "manner" is at an end. How comes the subject? The subject is the choosing of members of this House; and that choosing devolves on the people—nowhere else.

Now the "manner" to which I have called your attention—this "accustomed mode"—has been understood and adopted since when? Understood and adopted since the statute of Carlyle, which was enacted about six hundred years ago. What was that statute of Carlyle. I will in a moment give you a synopsis of it. It will be found in the books that treat of this very subject that we are discussing—legislation over manner and subject. "What shall be a good act of Parliament in respect of manner?" Then we find described what shall be an act of Parliament as to the manner. It is required that the lords, commons, and bishops shall be convened to constitute a Parliament.

On the occasion in question the bishops were not present, and it was contended that the organization of Parliament was void because the "manner" had not been followed out, because the bishops had not been present, the "manner" requiring that all those parties—the lords, commons, and bishops—should be present. It was a grave subject, and I suppose occupied the attention of the great lawyers of that day. And what was decided? It is a very interesting subject to any gentleman who wants to discuss this question with some degree of thoughtfulness, without partisan feeling. It was decided that the "manner" had nothing to do with the subject; that when that Parliament met, whether the bishops were there or not, the subject of legislation was only involved, and the law in question had nothing to do with that, because it only construed the "manner." It was determined, therefore, that the act of that Parliament was good.

I quote as follows:

"(A) What shall be a good act of Parliament [in respect of the manner]?" In the statute of Carlyle, 35 Edward I, the prelates were omitted, and the statutes were made by the king, the nobles, and the commonalty. It was therefore objected that this was no act of Parliament. The law is that (1) the bishops ought to be called to a Parliament; (2) but that, if they absent themselves voluntarily, the king, nobles, and commonalty may make an act of Parliament. As the statute was held to be a good act, the bishops must have been summoned and not have attended. The manner of making an act of Parliament, therefore, requires that the bishops must be summoned, but, if they do not attend, it is good manner to proceed without them.

"(A 2) What shall be a good act of Parliament, in respect of the matter?" Statutes are void which misrecite things in referring to them, and no persons are concluded by them. An act of Parliament can not do anything out of the limits of the power of Parliament, as, for example, to make a man capable of inheriting land in France.

These are examples of acts of Parliament that are void as to matter, but not as to manner.

The manner of holding a Parliament can not, by any power, have control of the legislation by Parliament.

Neither can the manner of holding an election have any relations to the voting, which is the election.

Under our Constitution this bill is void, revolutionary, and if enacted into a law must overthrow a system of government. It is unworthy the legislators of a great country that has been spoken of all around this Hall in such glowing language as we have heard to-day.

The Constitution in every article delegating to Congress legislative function uses the phrase, "Congress shall have power." This demonstrates that the States hold the exclusive right in and by the Constitution to give to Congress the power to legislate. It demonstrates also that the power was derived from the Constitution. "Shall have power" made Congress the attorney in fact for the Constitution. It is power that is delegated, power full, complete, and defined, not power by intendment or implication.

If you can inject into the word "manner" a power claimed by our friends on the other side of the House who advocate the bill, there is no word of limitation in the language that can be used to stop their devices—

Mr. HILL. Will it interrupt the gentleman to permit a question at this point?

Mr. VAUX. Not the slightest.

Mr. HILL. I understand the gentleman states that under that provision of the Constitution to which he has been referring Congress has the power to regulate the manner of holding elections.

Mr. VAUX. Only if the States do not. In that event, yes.

Mr. HILL. And also that Congress may prescribe that the election shall be held by ballot as ordinarily used, or under the Australian system, or under a vice versa system. Do I understand you to say that that simply prescribes that it shall be by ballot, and that the United States Congress can not go further—

Mr. VAUX. Not a step. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HILL. Let me complete my question. That Congress can not go farther and provide the necessary machinery?

Mr. VAUX. No, sir; no more than Congress can provide machinery for the State, as I shall show directly, to carry on its own constitutional duties.

Mr. HILL. But the gentleman says that they may adopt the "manner," that they may devise the manner of doing it.

Mr. VAUX. I say that the States have the right to determine the times, places, and manner of choosing their Representatives. Now, if the State does not do it, if the State is derelict in that duty, then another question is raised. If the State does not perform the duty, if a hiatus shall exist and any public necessity arises for the exercise of the power, then probably in that event, and in that event only, Congress can legislate only on the manner of performing the neglected duty. [Applause.]

Does not the gentleman know the fact that when George Washington was elected President of the United States New York did not vote for him at all? Why? Because the Legislature of that great State had not formulated the system of the electoral college. Why had they not done so? Because, as I read the history of those times, one branch of the legislative body belonged to the control of one party and the other branch was under the control of the opposite party, and they could not agree as to the "manner;" and because of that fact the voice of the people of New York on that subject was silent in that election.

Mr. HILL. Permit me one further question. I understand you to concede that Congress has the right to prescribe the Australian system?

Mr. VAUX. No, sir; I did not say so.

Mr. HILL. I so understood you.

Mr. VAUX. No; I merely cited the Australian system as an evidence of what might be a "manner." Under the Constitution Congress is absolutely powerless; and if my learned friend will allow me, if my argument has any bearing, if it means anything at all, if I have succeeded in making myself clear, it is to show that the power of Congress is limited in the strictest terms; and to show that these terms are to be used in the common-sense construction of questions that necessarily arise from a study of the meaning of the specific terms used, the manner of holding, the times and places for elections. [Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PETERS). Did the Chair understand the gentleman desired to be notified when he had exhausted twenty-five minutes?

Mr. VAUX. I desire to be called, Mr. Speaker, whenever obtruding upon the time of the House. [Cries of "Go on!"]

Mr. HILL. I would like to put one other question, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will permit, before he takes his seat.

I understand him to say that the Australian system is a manner of voting?

Mr. VAUX. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. Then, why can not Congress prescribe that system as one to be applied?

Mr. VAUX. Because it applies to the States absolutely and primarily, and Congress has nothing whatever to do with it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is the reason why Congress can not prescribe it or any other system. Congress can not prescribe it unless there is necessity, to which I referred a moment ago, and that necessity arises by reason of negligence or unwillingness on the part of the State to regulate the subject; then Congress can act.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a step further on that subject. This proposition that I am discussing is to the manner of holding elections for Representatives in Congress. Our learned friends on the other side claim, under the term "manner," that they have power over the elections in the States. They claim further that you can send the paid officers of the Government of one political party in hordes to any extent you may find necessary—to do what? To control elections in the States. [Applause.] Well, gentlemen, if so, then there is no necessity to send anybody to New York with "boodle," for you will have plenty of boodle all over the cities of the country, wherever these men are appointed in numbers sufficient, at ten, fifteen, twenty and thirty dollars a day to carry any election and to control any result you please. It will not be necessary to delegate your rights to anybody else.

But if we accept the proposition that comes to us by common rumor, that after we have acted upon this proposition now pending, after we have considered it, amended it, and adopted it, the majority of the committee on that side of the House may get ready their substitute and bring it in for our action, with no chance for discussion, no opportunity for examination, but compel us to come to a direct vote upon it; and suppose they inject into that substitute these words:

That this act shall also comprise the election of Senators in Congress.

What is to prevent it? If you can control by means of your election machinery the election of Representatives on this floor, why can you not go a step further and go to Harrisburg when the Legislature of my State is in session, with your supervisors and your deputy marshals and your judges and your wonderful chief supervisor, who is elected by nobody, who is responsible to nobody, who can not be punished by anybody, providing he is acting under the provisions of your proposed legislation; and he shall walk in while the Legislature is holding its session and say: "Sir, you are a member of the Legislature of Pennsylvania?" "Yes, sir." "Then walk out!" [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] "Walk out; there was not a fair and free vote in your county when you were elected." [Renewed applause.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Strike his name off the list.

Mr. VAUX. Yes, strike his name off the list, and in that way, always being sure, if it is a Republican that is to be elected, to pick out a Democrat. It is sometimes a fashionable idea that the only villains in the country are Democrats. [Laughter.] I want to know what is to prevent them from taking out of the house of representatives and the senate of Pennsylvania Democratic members under this pretext that they have a right to supervise the election. If they can supervise the election of my friend, Judge HOLMAN, for Congress, they can supervise the election of my friend, Mr. CAMERON, to the Senate. They can go into the senate of Pennsylvania and do the same thing. And if there are any distinguished gentlemen in this House upon the other side of the chamber who are looking forward to being United States Senators, I caution them lest, when they have made all their primary arrangements as to the manner of holding the election, it may turn out to be not so very pleasant as they expect under the law that they are now trying to give to the people of the United States; it may operate more powerfully than they intended. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

Now, I can not go any further with this because I know my friend is impatient. [Cries of "No!" and "Go on!"] I can not go on any further because I want to say one word as to the mode of the construction of this proviso. I was amazed when I heard the majority report claim that it was put upon this proposition, that the manner of holding elections was in the purview of Congress, and upon which it was the power of Congress to legislate. Now what does that report say. It quotes the section:

The time, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

Now see what the report asserts. I doubt if some gentlemen here have read this carefully. It has amazed me. I frankly confess that, after some few years spent in looking after questions that required careful analysis, I am astonished and horrified at the manner in which this majority report construes that section.

The language employed in this section—

Says the report—

is so plain—

I agree to that—

that it seems almost superfluous to enter into argument or discussion as to its meaning.

I say amen. There is no necessity for it except the exigencies of partisan necessity.

If words mean anything—

I supposed they did; I agree with that—

If words mean anything, those just quoted mean that the power of Congress over the conduct of elections of members of this body is absolute and complete.

But read the report.

Notwithstanding it is absolutely the power of the State Legislature to regulate the holding of elections, notwithstanding it is only the "manner" which Congress has any right to legislate upon, yet this report justifies this bill by a construction that I believe is without a parallel in forced construction.

Read it:

In connection with this bill, as it seems to your committee, there are two points to be chiefly considered: First, the power of Congress to enact such legislation and, second, the expediency of doing so.

This necessary power is found in section 4, Article I, of the Constitution of the United States, which is as follows:

"The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators."

The language employed in this section is so plain that it would seem almost superfluous to enter into argument or discussion as to its meaning. If words mean anything those just quoted mean that the power of Congress over the conduct of elections of members of this body is absolute and complete. The Constitution says that Congress may make all regulations in regard to the election of Representatives, and the power to "make regulations" thus conferred is in terms exclusive and paramount. But out of abundance of caution the framers of the Constitution went further and added to the word "make" the words "to alter"; that is, under the Constitution, Congress has power to assume complete control of elections of its members and conduct them at such times and places and through such officers and under such rules as it may see fit. On the other hand, Congress may under this clause leave the entire regulation of the election of Representatives to the States, or it may take a partial control of a part of the necessary procedure and leave what remains to the State, or it may alter and amend the State regulations and supervise and enforce their execution.

There is one other instance where five of the nine gentlemen in black make constitutional law, and it is thus made as we see to subserve political partisan schemes.

I believe my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is as old as I am, and he is a member of the bar and a lawyer. I have been for fifty years a member of the bar, and I believe, upon my word, that such a construction as that would not have been tolerated in days gone by by anybody who considered himself entitled to respect as a constitutional lawyer. Think of it—that the power of Congress over the conduct of elections of members of this body is absolute and complete.

Absolute and complete, by reason of the power to regulate the manner of holding elections. That is what this report says. Then it goes further:

The Constitution says that Congress may make all regulations in regard to the election of Representatives.

It says no such thing. You can not with a railroad engine drag that into the sentence. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

And the power to "make regulations" thus conferred is in terms exclusive and paramount.

Think of it! "Exclusive and paramount," when the language is that it shall be done by the Legislatures of the States!

But out of abundance of caution—

I am so glad that my learned friends on the other side have a little caution—

But out of the abundance of caution the framers of the Constitution went further and added to the word "make" the words "to alter." That is, under the Constitution Congress has power to assume complete control of elections of its members and can direct them as it sees fit.

Well, upon my word, I have heard of a great many things in the English language and I believe some books have been written to show what can be said by words that are called English words; but, if there is a greater power to "alter" than to "make," then I would like to know where that difference exists. [Laughter.]

I have heard it said in olden time that there is in certain agricultural communities a surgical operation that is sometimes performed in the neighborhood of farms where alteration makes one thing, but does not make an animal. [Laughter.]

Now, sir, to justify that opinion as I have quoted it, for I will dignify it with the term "opinion," they quote a decision of five of the nine "gentlemen in black." Five of the nine "gentlemen in black" have a right to make a decision under rules of law and by construction of the Constitution; but there is no law of Congress under the Constitution which gives to those "five gentlemen in black" the power to make a constitutional law. [Applause.] That belongs to a power we have not undertaken to alter.

And, sir, I see that since this Congress began there have been two decisions, for such they call them, two utterances of those gentlemen that have evoked the strongest condemnation from some constitutional lawyers. Mr. Speaker, unless I am very much misinformed, one is now going through the ordeal of legislative enactment to make it legal. [Laughter.] Therefore, when these learned gentlemen who comprise the majority of this committee give citations of decisions of a court, let me say to them that it has been said very lately, in the presence of as intelligent a body of men as could be gathered anywhere, that "decisions may be made by courts, without law;" and I wish to affirm that position by calling attention to the two decisions made since Congress met.

Now, I have shown the "manner" of these elections, and under this reference to the term "manner" there is no construction of the courts of law on it.

Then we come to another proposition that is involved in the Constitution. The electors are the voters. The voters, gentlemen, are to hold these elections. It is not an election controlled by officers of Federal courts or partisan head Federal officials. The people hold elections.

Now, a great deal has been said about this bill. I do not propose to discuss it. Abler men, far more able to discuss it than I, have already told you something of its faults; but I will tell you this: By this bill the right to choose the Representatives and United States Senators, if this bill becomes a law, will no longer be vested in the people. It will be vested in Federal officers, paid by the day, to do the bidding of those who appoint them, who have no color of responsibility under the terms of the act, which provides that the circuit judges shall do it.

Are we to bring the circuit judges of the United States and other Federal judicial tribunals into the mud and dirt of partisan political schemes? Who appoints the judge? He is there for life. He appoints the supervisors. Those duties imposed on the courts by this bill are extra-judicial. If judges agree to voluntarily perform them, they take from the judiciary its high character. The judge is there without any power to direct and compel his action. The supervisor is amenable to nobody, and it is not possible, Mr. Speaker, if this becomes a law, to bring him to account for whatever he may do, however wrong it may be, however directly against the law it may be. There is no power to bring him up before a court and question the authority of his act. The moment you do this the man who does it is brought up before the same court, because he complains of injustice and illegality in the supervisor, and he is put in prison by the jury. Who chooses the jury? The supervisor or his marshal; and the man who has done the wrong goes free. A man can not step in and interfere, or he may be "subject to arrest." This supervisor or the marshal, who are without responsibility, may go to the polls, may make a house-to-house inspection, may see to the registering, go into the election room, count the ballots, mark the ballots, and having done that may certify to the Clerk of this House the Congressional vote.

A supervisor without responsibility, a supervisor amenable to no law, may make a report to the Clerk of this House and the name goes on the list, it matters not whether 5, or 500, or 5,000 votes were cast against the returned candidate. No power is reserved anywhere to regulate it except by a contest in this House, and then this man who has got the certificate votes against the contestant and prevents you from turning him out. You call that legislating on the "manner" of holding elections. The Clerk of the House, poor fellow, must put his name on the list of members or pay a fine of $1,000 and be sent to prison.

One moment longer. I have been told that, while it may be doubtful about this constitutional provision, there is something above that, and one learned gentleman on the other side says, "We must pass this law; we must have a pure and honest election; we must have a free vote, and we must have the vote counted. That is the reason we want it passed." Why? "Because there are frauds." Frauds where? Ah, well; we do not pretend to say. We do not want to hurt the feelings of our Southern friends; but we want to get down South in order that we can elect members; and by the means referred to we seek to elect them notwithstanding how many people may have voted against them. Frauds! Am I told, Mr. Speaker, in this day if a fraud exists, it can impart to Congress the power to destroy the Constitution, power to give courts the right to legislate? Frauds exist all over the country. Frauds! Do they impart to Congress the authority to give an interpretation to the word "manner?" Well, yes, of course there are frauds.

"Oh," they say, "we do not propose to administer this law over the United States." Oh, no, that is not intended. But they take good care to say as my friend said who took his seat awhile ago that they do not propose to administer this law all over the United States. He did not put his argument in that way, but the implication was this: "In a good Republican district where we have a majority we do not want this law; but in Democratic districts where we have not a majority we intend to apply it." [Laughter.] I want to tell you gentlemen upon the other side that if this bill becomes a law the first place, or one of the first places, where will it be put in operation will be the State of Maine. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] The Democrats of the North will see that Maine is one of the first places to test the operation of this law, and then we shall see what the condition will be. I would like them to see the distinguished gentleman [the SPEAKER] rise and say, "Let the galled jade wince; my withers are unwrung." [Laughter.]

Gentlemen, if you intend to apply this law wherever a Democratic majority exists and to withhold the application of it where no Democratic majority exists, then I tell you that it will be made of universal application, and if it costs $15,000,000 a year of the public money to carry out this law and if these fifteen millions are wrung from the sweat of the farmers and the working people of the country let it come, because every drop of sweat that they expend is earning the money to pay those fifteen millions will fertilize the soil for the growth of anti-Republican votes. [Applause on the Democratic side.] There is some intelligence left yet in the Democratic party; they have some knowledge of fair play; and if this bill is intended to operate upon the Democracy and upon them alone, I tell gentlemen upon the other side that the Democracy will see to it that it is applied to their opponents as well.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I feel that I have already occupied too much time. I do not desire to take advantage of the courtesy of the House to obtrude myself upon it at too great length. [Cries of "Go on!" "Go on!"]

One word more about the meaning of the word "manner" in this clause of the Constitution. I am contending that the power given is as to the "manner" and nothing else, and that the "manner" I regard as the most important question involved in this legislation. It is distinct from subject altogether. Let me illustrate. I have been long enough sitting in this Hall to discover that there is a body of men somewhere about here, hidden or exposed—I have never seen their abiding-place, but I know they are called the Committee on Rules. [Great laughter.] Those gentlemen are as effective agents of legislation as the supervisor and his marshals under this bill would be effective in elections. [Laughter.] They belong, too, to the same category of Federal agents; and if the one agency does its work as well as the other, then I pity the Democratic constituencies. [Laughter.] Now, as to the meaning of the word "manner" when applied to the holding of elections, I ask gentlemen to consider this proposition. This Committee on Rules came in here the other day with a report fixing the "manner" of holding this debate.

The manner of holding this debate does not control the debate. It limits the time and refuses to permit the representatives of the people to have full discussion of the bill, but as yet has not directed what is to be uttered or suppressed what has been spoken. The rule may thus legislate on the manner, but not the subject. And again by the rules of the House—

Reports and communications from the heads of Departments and other communications addressed to the House, and bills, resolutions, and messages from the Senate may be referred to the appropriate committees in the same manner and with the same right of correction as public bills presented by members.

See Rule of the House No. XXIV, page 256.

This is an authority of the House on "manner."

But are we to be told by gentlemen on the other side that that manner of holding this debate, which was so prescribed, extended through the manner to the subject-matter, and that the Committee on Rules has the right to say such and such men shall speak and others shall not speak; "You shall discuss this question, not that question;" "You shall not undertake to impute fraud to the Republican party, while they may impute it freely to you?" These are the subject-matters of debate, not the manner, and the committee has nothing to do with them. Therefore, in prescribing the manner of holding the debate they confine themselves to limiting the time and parceling it out. It is decided that Mr. Smith shall have ten minutes, and Mr. Brown three minutes, and Mr. Somebody else one hour, and the Speaker, with an impartiality which does him great honor, brings down his gavel exactly as the time expires. [Laughter.]

Oh, gentlemen representing the men of America, dealing with this great question which strikes at the very vitals of your form of government, which overturns the Constitution, which makes us slaves of an irresponsible body of Federal officers, men who can not be controlled or called to account, gentlemen representing the men of America, in this nineteenth century, in this country which is called a country of law, of liberty, of freedom, has it come to this, that you are dividing the time for deliberation in this House by a clock, by the minute, when this momentous question is under consideration? Mr. Speaker, when our forefathers brought on the Revolutionary war and these colonies separated themselves from the British Crown and became separate, sovereign, and independent States, they did it upon the principle that they would not endure taxation without representation.

Let me say, with the most profound respect for this House, that the time may come when rules of legislation depriving the people of representation will drive those people to the same position which their forefathers took when the mother country undertook to tax them without giving them representation. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the House will indulge me a moment longer I shall conclude.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has six minutes left.

Mr. VAUX. Oh, I am delighted. [Laughter.]

Several MEMBERS. So are we.

Mr. VAUX. I want only a few minutes more, to read a brief newspaper extract which I think may amuse some of the gentlemen on the other side. I read it for their benefit, for the benefit of the majority of the committee who reported this bill; not for gentlemen upon our side, because they are as familiar with the truths involved in it as they are with the truths of the Holy Bible. [Laughter.]

Gentlemen laugh, but, strange as it may seem to them, there is such a book. [Renewed laughter.] It may be that gentlemen on the other side are as unfamiliar with the truths of that book as they are with the principles of the Constitution, but truth is eternal. When it was asked aforetime, "What is truth?" an answer was given that has never been improved upon. The answer was, "God is truth;" and we on the Democratic side know that God is truth and that the truth is God. [Laughter.]

Now, this extract which I am about to read is from a Philadelphia morning newspaper. The statement in the paragraph is that Judge Harlan, of the United States Supreme Court (the nine gentlemen in black), in an address delivered before the University of Michigan, made use of this language:

While the national rights must be respected, it is no less important to recognize the existence and authority of State rights, for to the States we must look primarily for our liberty. The States are the foundation upon which rests the whole superstructure of the United States. Without the States under the Constitution we would have no Government.

"While the national rights must be respected, it is no less important to recognize the existence and authority of State rights, for to the States we must look primarily for our liberties."

Yes, Mr. Speaker, we must look to the States for the manner of holding elections, and for the right to hold elections, and for those who are to hold the elections, the people of the several States.

Judge Harlan continues:

The States are the foundation upon which rests the whole superstructure of the United States. Without the States under the Constitution we would have no Government.

No, Mr. Speaker, we would have no Government, except the bill which is presented by the majority of the Committee on Elections. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, the Government of the United States is founded upon the broad principle that the majority shall rule, and the manner of determining the will of the majority is plainly pointed out by our laws and determined by our Constitution.

Any attempt to subvert the will of the majority, in whatever manner made, is an attempt to overthrow and defeat the will of the people.

ple, and in a measure to destroy the very foundations of our republican institutions.

The safety of the Government itself largely depends upon the liberty and the safety of the individual citizen.

The minority may, and in most cases will, quietly submit to the rule of the majority when that majority is fairly and impartially determined.

It is even possible for those who are wronged and outraged to permit these outrages to continue for a season in the hope that wiser counsels will at last prevail, and that when reason asserts herself that ample and substantial justice will be done to all alike.

THE MINORITY, NOT THE MAJORITY, RULE.

It is idle for us to pretend that our Government for the last quarter of a century has been ruled impartially by the will of the majority. It stands to-day as the most splendid illustration of the patience and forbearance of the people, when we recall the fact that its ballot-boxes have been trampled under foot, that its elections have been conducted, not for the purpose of determining the will of the majority of its people, but rather for the purpose of defeating and defrauding them of the opportunity to exercise their constitutional rights.

DEMOCRACY NOT INDORSED BY THE MAJORITY.

It is useless to quibble about terms, and the claim that the Democratic party has within a quarter of a century, at any trial, commanded the confidence and support of a majority of the people of this country is as baseless as it is presumptuous.

Within that time, in almost one-half of the Union, the freedom of the ballot has been unknown, the right of the citizen to express himself without fear and without favor has been defeated and denied, and the minority has been able by means within its power to hold and to keep control of local and Federal representation.

He who is not aware of this is either willingly ignorant of the condition of things existing in that portion of the Union, or is so blindly bigoted as to be ready to permit them to exist in order that the party to which he belongs may for a brief period continue in power, even if it shall be necessary for this purpose to overturn the will of the majority.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE DEMOCRACY.

The claim that the Democratic party has at any election been indorsed by the popular vote is but another manner of expressing the fact that the Democratic party has been enabled in a large part of the Union to suppress the votes of a large number of those entitled to exercise the franchise and by this means to accomplish the overthrow of the will of the people.

CLEVELAND NOT ELECTED BY A MAJORITY.

The bald pretense that Grover Cleveland was elected President of the United States by a majority of the people of the United States is subject to the further statement that at this same election a large number of the qualified voters who would have registered their votes against him were not permitted to do so, and hence, by reason of intimidation and outrage, one who would of necessity have been defeated in a fair contest is declared to have been the choice of a majority.

To show that this statement is not made without authority, I ask you to briefly examine the returns of that election.

REPUBLICANS NOT PERMITTED TO VOTE IN THE SOUTH.

If the census returns are fair estimates of population, the natural increase since 1880 should show a growth in Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina, Georgia, and Alabama corresponding to the balance of the South of something over 10 per cent. in 1884, but taking the vote as computed upon the census returns of 1880, in the elections of 1884, and 556,357 voters were denied the privilege of registering their choice at the ballot-boxes in these States alone.

In the Southern States the total vote in 1884 was 4,397,112, and of this vote only 68 per cent. was permitted to be cast, while 94 per cent. of the Northern vote was cast at the same election. If a corresponding vote had been cast in the Southern States there would have been a total vote of 4,177,256. Instead of this there were cast only 3,034,007, and hence it appears that 1,134,249 voters were not permitted to vote at all.

As these votes were nearly all colored votes, it is not assuming too much to say that they were almost entirely Republican, and thus an apparent Democratic majority came from the suppression of the legally qualified voters of the land.

The following tabulated statement is interesting and instructive:

Table showing the total population, the total vote, and the vote cast in 1884.

States.	Population, 1880.	1884.
		Total vote.	For President.
Alabama.....	1,262,505	252,301	153,480
Georgia.....	1,542,180	309,424	143,543
Louisiana.....	939,946	187,987	106,234
Mississippi.....	1,131,597	226,319	120,019
South Carolina.....	966,571	190,119	91,578

This vote, as computed upon the population of 1880, should have been about 10 per cent. larger in 1884, but according to the vote as stated from the census of 1880, in these five States alone 556,357 voters were not permitted to make any expression at all at the ballot-boxes in the selection of a President of the United States, and this condition of affairs existed in a large portion of the Southern States, and under such circumstances and conditions the Democratic party, with an assurance passing all understanding, assumes to have been indorsed by the popular vote of the people of the United States.

REPUBLICANS IN A MAJORITY ON A FAIR VOTE.

There has never been a time since the year 1860 when the people of the whole country, if permitted to do so, would not have declared by their ballots in favor of the principles and policy of the Republican party.

REQUIRES MORE VOTES FOR REPUBLICAN THAN FOR DEMOCRATIC ELECTORS.

Look at this matter from another standpoint. The total vote of the North in 1884 was 8,492,723, and of the South 4,397,112. Of these grand totals 95 per cent. of the entire vote was cast in the North, and only 70 per cent. in the South in the election of 1888.

Thus you will see that in these Southern States, at the election of 1888, more than 1,570,000 voters were not permitted to cast their ballots into the boxes and to have them counted.

The 248 Presidential electors chosen in 1888 by the Northern States represented a total vote of 8,001,244, or 32,263 votes to each elector, while the 153 Southern electors represented a total vote of 3,351,682, or 21,981 to each elector.

In short, it cost 10,253 more votes in the Northern than in the Southern States to choose an elector for President of the United States.

PERCENTAGE OF VOTES NORTH AND SOUTH.

It is interesting in this connection to study and compare the vote cast in some of these States with the population. Taking an equal number of Northern and Southern States we find the following:

State.	Persons to voter.	State.	Persons to voter.
Georgia.....	9.9	Minnesota.....	5.2
Louisiana.....	9.6	Nebraska.....	5.2
Mississippi.....	9.6	Iowa.....	5.0
Alabama.....	8.3	Illinois.....	4.9
Arkansas.....	7.6	Kansas.....	4.9
Virginia.....	7.1	Pennsylvania.....	4.9
Texas.....	6.6	New York.....	4.6
Tennessee.....	6.4	Michigan.....	4.6
Kentucky.....	6.2	Indiana.....	4.6
North Carolina.....	5.7	Ohio.....	4.4

PATIENCE AND FORBEARANCE OF THE PEOPLE.

It is a matter which testifies to the patience and forbearance of the most enlightened people upon the face of the earth that in the midst of such fraud and outrage, in the face of the acknowledged and boastful trickery and open and notorious overthrow of the rights of the people neither anarchy nor bloodshed followed, but quiet submission to so great a wrong, with the hope that opportunity would soon present itself to correct by peaceable means these great evils and by legislative enactments and by wise provisions secure to every citizen of the Republic the rights guaranteed to him under the Constitution.

And in view of these facts, as if it was a matter of which to be proud and exultant, the Democratic party proceeds to glorify itself because it has not only suppressed the right of suffrage, but has been enabled by this means to obtain power and preferment.

CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS UNFAIR AND UNEQUAL.

In the election of Congressional Representatives the greatest inequality exists.

The five Southern States of Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, South Carolina, and Mississippi elected their Representatives with total votes in 1888 as follows: Alabama, 174,000; Georgia, 142,939; South Carolina, 70,941; Louisiana, 115,834; Mississippi, 115,788.

Thus you will see that Alabama elected eight Representatives with an average vote of 21,750; Georgia, ten, with an average vote of 14,290; Louisiana, six, with an average vote of 19,305; South Carolina, seven, with an average vote of 11,420, and Mississippi, seven, with an average Congressional vote of 16,540, while the five Northern States of Ohio, Indiana, New York, Iowa, and Michigan cast total votes in 1888 as follows: Ohio, 841,944; Indiana, 536,901; New York, 1,331,147; Iowa, 404,130; Michigan, 476,273.

The average vote cast in the election of each Congressional Representative in these States was as follows: In Ohio, 40,092; in Indiana, 41,300; in New York, 38,852; in Iowa, 36,470; in Michigan, 43,300.

The average vote cast for member of Congress in the five Southern States was as follows: Alabama, 21,750; Georgia, 14,293; South Carolina, 11,420; Louisiana, 19,305; Mississippi, 16,540.

The total vote cast in these five Northern States was 3,590,395.

The total vote cast in these five Southern States was 628,502.

The five Southern States, with a total vote of 628,502, elected thirty-eight members of Congress, with an average vote of 16,541, while the five Northern States, with a total vote of 3,590,395, elected ninety members of Congress, with an average vote of 39,893. It requires, therefore, 23,352 more votes in the Northern States to elect a member of Congress than it requires in the South.

ONE SOUTHERN VOTER HAS AS MUCH POWER AS 2.4 VOTERS IN THE NORTH.

In other words, every single voter in these five Southern States has as much power in the selection of members of Congress and members of the electoral college as 2.4 voters in the North.

If these five Northern States were only entitled to elect ninety Representatives by reason of the vote cast, then these five Southern States were only entitled to elect sixteen Representatives instead of electing thirty-eight, and by reason of such suppression of the ballots of the people the Democratic party secures, if it secures at all, supremacy in the House of Representatives and becomes supreme in the nation only by means of refusing the people an opportunity to make fair and honest expression of their political preferences, and by denying to them any opportunity of being heard in their own cause.

HOW LONG SHALL THIS CONTINUE?

How long are these inequalities to continue?

How long is it to be expected that the Northern States will quietly submit to these outrages upon the ballot?

How long is it to be supposed that the Northern voter will permit himself to be regarded as less than equal to one-half of a Southern voter?

How long is it presumed that independent and thinking men, regarding the ballot not only as the means of expressing the political opinions of the people, but as the only method of selecting their executive and legislative representatives, will consent to this absolute destruction of the elective powers?

How long will the patience and forbearance of an already outraged people quietly submit to this absolute rule of the minority?

Let me caution these States within whose borders the ballot has lost its lawful power and within whose domain the rights of the people and the majority have been trampled under foot, that they have reached the point where the roads divide; one leads to anarchy and ruin, the other leads to justice, equality, and safety.

THE MISSISSIPPI PLAN.

So completely have these attempts to suppress the votes of the Southern people succeeded that the "Mississippi plan" is one of the recognized and important factors to be relied upon in assuring the success and the continuance in power of the Democratic party.

To what extent the suppression of votes has been carried in these States you may judge by an examination of the following counties of Mississippi:

Counties.	Vote in 1872.		Vote in 1888.
	Grant.	Greeley.	Rep.	Dem.
Choctaw.....	328	397	3	743
Chalbone.....	3,240	439	14	599
Covington.....	270	341	4	638
Hawamba.....	48	838	50	1,880
Jones.....	72	324	3	671
Lawrence.....	547	407	836
Lee.....	645	1,040	27	1,508
Leflore.....	915	303	1	825
Lowndes.....	3,217	698	17	1,122
Marion.....	231	236	5	826
Neshoba.....	185	312	3	894
Noxubee.....	3,068	736	846
Perry.....	25	188	17	547
Smith.....	98	452	2	1,082
Winston.....	490	529	708
Yazoo.....	2,433	922	7	1,196
Total.....	14,751	7,783	152	14,891

The total vote in 1888 was 7,500 less in these three counties than in 1872; whereas, owing to the increase in population, it ought to have been at least 7,000 greater. Fourteen thousand votes were manifestly suppressed in 1888, and as the Republican vote of 14,751 in 1872 has been reduced by the count to 152, it is easy to understand what votes have been suppressed, even if we had no other evidence.

It was the member from Indiana, if I am not mistaken [Mr. BYNUM], who said that the Democratic party would come back into power in this Chamber. It may be possible, Mr. Speaker, that such may be the result, but it will not be because the people have spoken and so willed it, but because the opportunity to speak has been denied to the people.

DEMOCRATS NOT SENSITIVE AS TO THE MEANS.

Not only by such means is it intended to carry the Presidency, as it were by storm, but the two Houses of Congress are to be at the same time, by such measures, placed within the control of the Democratic party.

It is a matter passing all human understanding that men who are especially sensitive as to their honorable records, and who would scorn to do a dishonorable thing among their fellow-citizens for the purpose of financial or personal advancement, are ready and willing to be the beneficiaries of the most glaring and outrageous frauds when perpetrated for political or party purposes, and are ready to accept political power and preferment though it should come through the means of the most corrupt and degrading trickery and dishonesty and be covered all over with charges of unfairness and dishonor, or even if it should come to them stained with blood and crime.

Even so distinguished a Representative as the gentleman from Mississippi [Hon. Mr. CATCHINGS] has in the captured letter written to a personal friend made a remarkable suggestion, which at best is subject to an interpretation not at all favorable to the dignity and good name of himself, his party, or his State, when he writes:

I do not think it would hurt at all if one or two of them should disappear. It might have a very happy effect on Hill, his witnesses, and lawyers.

That the disappearance of one or two persons interested in a contested-election case might have a happy effect upon the contestant, the people, and his attorneys his unquestionably true, and that this Arkansas manner of appealing for discontinuance or silence might favorably avail, I can scarcely deny; but what shall we say of an enlightened leader who cries out against the dangerous ignorance of the people, and then suggests as a proper means of silencing opposition and political contest the removal of one or two of those who question his right to represent this dangerous ignorance of Mississippi.

I doubt if it will be determined by any fair-minded man that this dangerous ignorance is likely to be any more dangerous than this enlightened and distinguished Representative of Mississippi and his political friends.

That such measures are sometimes resorted to for the purposes of political advancement is unfortunately too true. It is a matter of national humiliation that success at the polls too frequently blots out the infamy and the crime which render that success at all possible; and it is a matter of national degradation that those who succeed by such methods are permitted to occupy positions of trust and to enjoy, not only undisturbed but in security and in honor, the highest places within the gift of the people.

That there are men brave enough in the midst of such surroundings and danger to denounce and condemn them is a matter of the greatest satisfaction, and gives some hope for the future. That such things exist I can not doubt, but I call as a witness one whose fearless language entitles him to the gratitude of the law-abiding people of the whole country. Judge Cunningham charged the grand jury in the Clayton murder and Plummerville ballot-box theft cases. The judge's words were blunt, but forcible. He says:

There is no man with three ideas above an oyster who does not know that murder and assassination are the results, and will continue to be the results, of the political methods that have been employed in this county to carry the last election, and the meanest man in the country is the professed politician who advocates or indorses such methods. You must stop this ballot-box stealing, force, and fraud, or the title to your property will not be worth the paper it is written on. Democracy means that the people shall rule, and we are told that it is undemocratic to denounce bulldozery, ballot stealing, and assassination. If this be true, then I am no Democrat. If apology for bulldozery, ballot stealing, and assassination constitute Democracy, then may the angels and ministers of grace protect me from such Democracy.

DEMOCRATIC PARTY OPPOSED TO ELECTION LAWS.

That the Democratic party should now array itself against an election law is entirely consistent with its record and is in accord with itself.

A fair election means Democratic defeat; a party which owes its success to the obliteration of its political opponents, not by fair and manly contest at the polls and in an honorable struggle for political supremacy, but by means of threats, intimidation, and violence; by seizing upon the ballot-boxes of the land, and by driving away from them those entitled under the law to exercise the rights of electors, would not be expected to demand such legislation as would give to all the people equal protection and fair elections.

The Democratic party is opposed to election laws, because wise and just election laws will not permit that party longer to control by the means of a small minority vote almost one-half of the Union.

The Democratic party is opposed to election laws because it recognizes the fact that under fair and just election laws the tissue ballot will be a thing of the past.

The Democratic party opposes election laws because it knows that under such laws every citizen, not legally disfranchised for sufficient cause, will be entitled to have his ballot put into the box and have it honestly counted.

It opposes election laws because it must know that under such laws the disfranchisement of the black man without due process of law will no longer be permitted or quietly submitted to.

It opposes election laws because it knows that under such laws it will be no longer possible in South Carolina to confuse the voter by a multiplicity of boxes into which by trickery and deceit he can be induced or defrauded into putting his ballot into the wrong box, and by this means losing the right to be counted as a voter in an election in which he has supposed himself to be taking part.

It opposes election laws because under such laws in Virginia he can no longer, by reason of dishonest judges and clerks of election, compel the black voter to stand from morning till night at the polls without an opportunity having been accorded him of casting an honest ballot.

It opposes election laws because in Arkansas it will forever put an end to the use of fraudulent ballot-boxes, and the "now-you-see-it" scheme, which puts a Democratic ticket into the box, and the "now-you-don't-see-it" scheme, which puts a Republican ticket out of the box, will become a part of the dishonest history of the Democratic party.

It opposes election laws because under any fair system of elections the Democratic minority can no longer out-vote, out-count, and out-wit the will of a fair and honest majority.

It opposes election laws because it prevents one vote in Democratic Georgia and in Democratic Mississippi from being equal to two or more votes in any other section of the land.

It opposes fair elections because fair elections do not mean the success of the Democratic ticket.

ALL PARTIES PRETEND TO FAVOR HONEST ELECTION LAWS.

All parties in this country pretend to favor fair and honest election laws. All parties in this country should be ready to unite in the passage of such laws as will insure to every citizen of the Republic the right to an honest ballot; without it he is denied the highest privilege of citizenship; without it he is not permitted to take part in the making and the execution of laws which he is bound to recognize and obey. As one of the parties to the compact he is entitled to be heard in establishing its terms and formulating its requirements.

Without such laws and without a proper execution of them the few rule over the many.

THE RULE OF THE MINORITY.

To what extent the rule of the minority prevails in our country we may be enabled to at least partially judge by an examination of the election returns of some of the States and districts.

The lower branch of Congress for a term of years was within the control of the Democratic party, and the States largely contributing to its supremacy were those south of the line once marked by the limitations of slavery.

FREEDOM INCREASED THE SOUTH'S POWER.

Under the days of slavery only three-fifths of the slave population were to be counted in the basis for Congressional and national representation.

When the slave became by the Constitution and the laws a citizen the entire population was counted, and the three-fifths of the days of slavery became by virtue of liberty and citizenship five-fifths, and thus there was added to the numerical power of the South by the emancipation of the slave about 1,600,000 citizens, upon whose numerical strength, from that time on, the South was to count her basis of representation.

Thus by virtue of the negro the Southern States were given a largely increased representative power.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISION.

The constitutional provision extending to all citizens of a State the right of suffrage also provided that in case the same should be at any time abridged or denied, that in such case the basis of representation should be proportionately reduced.

That such right has been abridged and denied, I think no one with a knowledge of the facts and candor enough to be moderately fair can for a moment deny.

Let us examine the returns from the five States of Louisiana, South Carolina, Mississippi, Georgia, and Alabama.

The election returns of 1898 show a largely increased vote in these States over the returns of 1886, so far as Congressional Representatives are concerned, and it is just and fair in making a Congressional apportionment among these States that the vote for Congressional Representatives should be the basis of that apportionment.

FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT.

It is plainly provided in the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution that the apportionment of Representatives shall be made among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed.

But where the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors, Representatives in Congress, executive or judicial officers of a State, or members of the Legislature is denied to any male inhabitant of such State, being twenty-one years of age and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.

With a view, therefore, to determining the number of voters who have been excluded from participation in such elections and have been denied the right to vote therein, let us examine the returns of these States and find, if possible, the proportion of those entitled to vote who have been excluded, and the proportion they bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in these States.

FIVE SOUTHERN STATES EXAMINED.

The returns of these five States for the last four Congressional elections show the following numbers as having been permitted to vote in these respective States:

Table showing the votes cast in 1882, 1884, 1886, and 1888, in the several Congressional districts of Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, and South Carolina

State and districts.	1882.	1884.	1886.	1888.
ALABAMA.
First district.....	16,785	15,274	4,220	11,534
Second district.....	21,944	20,322	5,659	14,041
Third district.....	12,787	15,314	4,662	16,216
Fourth district.....	11,751	22,376	20,958	24,493
Fifth district.....	15,462	10,993	6,333	19,418
Sixth district.....	9,108	10,307	12,300	24,370
Seventh district.....	9,611	22,404	12,177	26,973
Eighth district.....	23,573	24,471	20,333	21,861
Total.....	120,971	141,361	86,632	173,175
GEORGIA.
First district.....	9,939	18,600	3,078	16,896
Second district.....	12,200	7,828	3,411	11,009
Third district.....	4,450	14,335	1,704	12,750
Fourth district.....	7,065	30,227	8,280	13,941
Fifth district.....	16,544	14,138	2,900	16,008
Sixth district.....	8,540	7,922	1,722	9,059
Seventh district.....	22,544	14,786	6,680	12,269
Eighth district.....	4,569	11,084	2,877	9,651
Ninth district.....	28,436	8,677	2,846	21,190
Tenth district.....		10,630	1,944	7,378
Total.....	107,387	116,676	27,830	131,572
LOUISIANA.
First district.....	13,350	13,504	12,909	13,996
Second district.....	18,190	15,840	14,775	18,098
Third district.....	16,412	20,905	26,625	25,185
Fourth district.....	5,778	13,735	5,790	17,293
Fifth district.....	17,329	19,797	14,268	22,426
Sixth district.....	12,022	16,180	10,182	16,392
Total.....	78,060	100,640	84,743	113,242
MISSISSIPPI.
First district.....	7,806	14,519	3,167	13,085
Second district.....	18,098	24,279	12,648	19,795
Third district.....	6,373	14,144	6,900	16,238
Fourth district.....	9,061	18,923	8,066	16,251
Fifth district.....	6,190	15,600	4,316	20,239
Sixth district.....	14,324	16,760	12,117	15,044
Seventh district.....	16,374	16,431	4,514	15,564
Total.....	79,636	120,665	46,768	115,216
SOUTH CAROLINA.
First district.....	15,230	11,720	3,317	9,855
Second district.....	16,808	19,025	12,337	5,253
Third district.....	10,922	11,613	8,774	4,409
Fourth district.....	16,250	13,089	4,470	11,410
Fifth district.....	16,986	18,231	4,701	9,586
Sixth district.....	16,705	14,373	4,469	8,972
Seventh district.....	28,486	15,238	12,470	15,485
Total.....	121,390	90,689	50,544	64,920

FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT VIOLATED.

Thus we see that in the Congressional elections of 1882, 1884, 1886, and 1888 a large proportion of the male citizens of these States over twenty-one years of age were for some reason not permitted to vote, and by a fair computation, based upon the population of these States and the number of registered voters therein, it would seem that in 1882 Alabama, with a voting population of over 252,000, only permitted 48 per cent. of her citizens over twenty-one years of age to vote; in 1884 only 56 per cent. voted; in 1886 only 33 per cent., and in 1888 68 per cent.

In Louisiana, with a total male population of 187,987 over the age of twenty-one years, in 1882 only 41 per cent. voted; in 1884, only 51 per cent. voted; in 1886, only 45 per cent.; and in 1888, 60 per cent.

In Georgia, with a total voting population of 308,434, in 1882 only 35 per cent. voted; in 1884, 37 per cent.; in 1886, only 9 per cent.; in 1888, 42 per cent.

In Mississippi, with a total voting population of 226,319, in 1882 only 35 per cent. voted; in 1884, only 53 per cent.; in 1886, 20 per cent.; in 1888, 51 per cent.

In South Carolina, with a total male population of 199,119 over twenty-one years of age, entitled to vote under her laws, in 1882 only 61 per cent. voted; in 1884, only 46 per cent.; in 1886, 25 per cent.; in 1888, 33 per cent.

THE SOUTH HAS FORFEITED A LARGE PART OF HER REPRESENTATION.

Under the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution these States are only entitled to such number of Representatives based upon the number of male citizens voting as is proportioned to the whole number of their respective populations over twenty-one years of age, and entitled to vote under the laws and the Constitution.

Under the reasonable and just interpretation of the meaning of this wise and most necessary provision, these States were only entitled to such Representatives as were indicated by the fair number of votes cast, having by unjust and unfair discriminations and hindrances prevented a large percentage of their voters from exercising the right granted them by this constitutional amendment, and thus—

Alabama, instead of eight Representatives in 1882, should have had only four, in 1884 only five, in 1886 only three, and in 1888 only five.

Georgia, instead of ten Representatives, by her vote was only entitled in 1882 to four, in 1884 to four, in 1886 to one, and in 1888 to four.

Louisiana, instead of six Representatives, was entitled in 1882 to three, in 1884 to three, in 1886 to three, and in 1888 to four.

Mississippi, instead of seven Representatives, was entitled in 1882 to but three, in 1884 to four, in 1886 to two, and in 1888 to four.

South Carolina, instead of her seven Representatives, was entitled in 1882 to four, in 1884 to three, in 1886 to two, and in 1888 to but three.

Thus we see these five States, with a combined power in this Chamber of thirty-eight Representatives, by reason of their abridgment and denial of the rights of the citizens of their respective States to the ballot, under this constitutional provision forfeited a large part of that representative power, and were only entitled under the elections of 1882 to send eighteen Representatives, in 1884 only nineteen, in 1886 only eleven, and in 1888 only twenty.

PROVISIONS OF THE AMENDMENT MANDATORY.

This provision of the Constitution is a mandatory provision, and it becomes the duty of Congress to enforce the same.

It says plainly that if the right of the citizen over twenty-one years of age to vote is denied, "or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced." Can any language be more explicit and distinct? It therefore becomes the duty of Congress in making the apportionment under the new census to apportion the Representatives, not only to these States, but to all the States, upon the basis of the number of male citizens over the age of twenty-one years whose rights are not abridged or denied in these States, as proportioned to the number which these voters bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.

DUTY OF CONGRESS TO ENFORCE IT.

It is the duty of Congress to enforce this amendment, and if Congress shall do less it wantonly violates this plain and explicit provision of the Constitution.

If Alabama, Louisiana, Georgia, South Carolina, and Mississippi shall without the justification of law or by statute enactment, or by the wanton disregard of law by their citizens, prevent a large proportion of their voters from exercising the franchise, and shall rob them of the right plainly granted and assured under this amendment, then these States should be deprived of such representation as is based upon such vote or population, or is thus deprived of this plain constitutional right.

If Georgia permits only one voter in ten, and South Carolina only one in four to cast his ballot and to be a factor in the selection of Presidential electors and Congressional Representatives, then Georgia and South Carolina should only be permitted to occupy upon the floors of Congress and in the electoral college such number of places as will give to them fair representation for those who are permitted to take part in the settlement and the expression of their preferences.

It becomes the duty of Congress to enforce by legislation this provision of the Constitution and thus protect all the other sections of the Union.

Georgia, South Carolina, and Mississippi have no right under any shadow of law, or in the violation of plain constitutional provisions, or by trampling under foot the rights of their citizens, to impose upon the other sections of the Union an unfair and unequal distribution of political and representative power.

NOT A MATTER AFFECTING THE SOUTH ALONE.

It not only becomes a crime committed against their own people, but it becomes at the same time a crime committed against the people of the whole country. An outrage upon the voter of Georgia may only serve to deprive him of his individual right, but its far-reaching consequences may affect the peace and dignity of the nation; it may serve to change the course of legislation, or transfer the administration of governmental affairs; and thus it becomes a matter not of personal, but of national importance.

The only safe course to be pursued and the only one to be tolerated is to see that every citizen is protected in his rights, and when this can not be done, to see that no other citizen exercises the powers and privileges of which he has been deprived, and that no other citizen is clothed with additional power because he has assisted in robbing a fellow-citizen of his constitutional rights.

AMENDMENTS ENTIRELY CONSISTENT.

There is no need for confusion as between the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments.

The fifteenth amendment plainly provides that no person shall be disfranchised "on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude."

The fourteenth amendment provides that when the right of any male inhabitant of such State, twenty-one years of age, and a citizen of the United States, to vote is denied, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, then the basis of representation shall be reduced.

The distinction is clear and defined. The States shall not disfranchise because of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, but that they may for rebellion, or other crime, is unquestionably true. And it is equally true that they may require such qualifications upon the part of the voter, educational or otherwise, as is not inhibited by the Constitution, but such requirements must not be drawn upon the line of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, but must affect all citizens alike.

If, however, any State by law of requirement not inhibited by the constitutional provision, shall limit or deny the franchise, or if the right of the citizen to vote is "in any way abridged," then the basis of representation therein shall be reduced.

THE FOURTEENTH AND FIFTEENTH AMENDMENTS NOT IN CONFLICT.

These two amendments provide, one for the protection of the people, and the other for the protection of the voter.

The fourteenth amendment provides that if the right of the voter is abridged or denied, that the representative power shall be reduced.

Thus it is plainly provided that if any State by law, or by any requirement, shall prohibit any of its voters from exercising the right to vote, for any cause (except for participation in rebellion or other crime) at any of the elections therein named, that such State so prohibiting or denying or abridging its voters, in any manner, should have its representation reduced to correspond with the total number of persons so prohibited from voting.

The fifteenth amendment is clearly intended to protect the citizen and to unqualifiedly prohibit any State from disfranchising by law any of its voters because of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, and is a protection to the individual citizen.

The fourteenth amendment was intended to be a protection, not alone to the individual, but to the people of the whole country, and provides that when any State, by proper constitutional requirement, by law, or in any way denies or abridges the right of the citizen to vote, then that such State shall not exercise more power in the legislative branch of the Government than it would be entitled to exercise based on the number of those participating in its elections as compared with the whole number of citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.

To hold otherwise would be to claim that a State may not by legislative enactment deprive its citizens of a right to vote because inhibited by the constitutional provision from so doing; or that a State which is entitled to require certain qualifications of its voters by law, but which does not make any such requirement of them, may nevertheless permit its laws to be wantonly violated, its ballot-boxes destroyed, its citizens disfranchised by fraud and their rights trampled under foot; and then by reason of such wanton violation of law, and its failure to provide or to attempt to provide protection and remedy, that these States and their citizens so guilty of violations of law by such means may gain and keep such additional rights and powers as they would otherwise be deprived of if they attempted to accomplish the same by law. In other words, these States would by a wanton violation of the Constitution and the laws be enabled to accomplish the very thing which the Constitution itself denies and prohibits, and yet the laws and the Constitution are alike powerless to prevent.

Such a construction would leave the citizen at the mercy of the mob.

These two amendments are written indistinct, indefinite, and in conflict.

The fifteenth amendment was allotted consideration, growing out of the necessity of giving additional protection to those lately in servitude, and only served to limit the causes for which persons can be disfranchised by the States.

The power of abridging the right of any State which in any way denies the right of any citizen to vote is clear and distinct, and in view of the circumstances surrounding its passage and the causes demanding its submission, can not by any fair-minded person be otherwise construed. Any other construction would give to a wanton breaker or defier of the laws and violator of the Constitution more power by reason of his lawlessness and disregard of his obligations than it would enable him to have as an obedient and faithful citizen of the Republic.

ITS ENFORCEMENT DESTROYS THE POWER OF THE MINORITY.

Let Congress see that the fourteenth amendment is duly obeyed and enforced, and the rule of the minority vanishes forever from this Chamber. Let them obey, not only the spirit, but the plain letter of the law, and those States which have ruthlessly ridden over the rights of their citizens will call a halt and look about them for the purpose of regaining in some measure the rights they have lost, not through fraud and trickery and coercion, but by means of just treatment of all those entitled to the elective franchise.

HONEST ELECTIONS THE ISSUE.

Can any one at all familiar with Southern affairs claim that the elections of the past decade have been conducted in any spirit of fairness, with a view to obtaining a just and impartial expression of the people of those States?

The demand for honest elections has become so loud, and the determination to secure them at any cost so general, that it is idle to longer attempt to put off the issue.

The South must learn once for all that the day of ballot-box stuffing has passed; that the days of trickery and fraud are ended, and that the great majority which has so long and so quietly submitted and so patiently waited for the millennium of their political deliverance is determined that the ballot-boxes of the land shall register the will of the people, and that that will shall be determined by those entitled under the laws and the Constitution to vote at the elections and to have those votes fairly and honestly counted.

THE DEMANDS UPON CONGRESS.

This Congress has the power, and if it does not enact a fair and impartial election law, guarantying to every voter, black or white, the right to cast his ballot into an honest ballot-box, and protecting him in life, person, liberty, and property both before and after the election, then it shall have omitted to do one of the things expected of it by the people, and will have committed little less than a national crime.

Such a law as will protect every citizen, black and white, rich and poor, in the exercise of his political rights and enable him without fear, without favor, and without bloodshed to express his personal and political preferences at the polls will at one blow strike down the unjust rule of the minority and compel it to abdicate its political supremacy.

Such a law will enable the people of all the States to determine for themselves who shall be their rulers and representatives.

THE NEGRO MUST BE RECOGNIZED AND COUNTED.

It is of no longer use to cry out against the negro. He is a part of the country and a necessary part of its enumerated people, and it becomes necessary to treat him as a factor in our national affairs.

ONE-THIRD OF SOUTHERN POWER BASED UPON THE NEGRO.

Upon his enumeration more than one-third of the representative power of the South is based. In 1880 there were 11,947,876 whites in the Southern States, and 5,994,030 colored people, and thus by virtue of his presence and enumeration these States became entitled to thirty additional Representatives upon this floor. Of its ninety-two Representatives now occupying seats in this Chamber at least thirty of them are here because of the fact that the colored people of the Southern States were counted in the enumeration of its citizens under the census of 1880.

To strike them out and to no longer count them would materially reduce the representative power of the Southern States.

To omit them from the census of 1890 would be to take away from the States of the South the one-third of their political power and prestige.

NEGROES ONLY COUNTED, NOT VOTED.

And yet, notwithstanding that fact that they form so important a part in the political strength of these Southern States and that their enumeration is absolutely necessary to their political welfare, the only right granted them in the political arena is the right to be enumerated for the purpose of adding numerical strength and securing to the more lordly whites additional political power.

In this connection it is exceedingly refreshing to see the anxiety of the South for the full and complete enumeration of the colored people under the present census. Their solicitude lest the colored people be not fairly and fully counted, or that they may possibly be overlooked, is a matter of great concern, as witness the following:

CENSUS NOT COMPLETE.

MOBILE, ALA., June 18.

There is quite a general feeling that the census of this city is not being thoroughly taken. Many families, especially among the colored people, have been overlooked. The enumeration closes Friday, and it is feared that the time will not prove sufficient for the proper completion of the work.

Is there any one so ignorant as not to know that they desire their enumeration not for the purpose of doing them substantial justice and protecting them in their rights, but simply for the purpose of increasing their own political power? If these people were one-half as solicitous on election day in seeing that these same colored people were permitted to vote and in protecting them at the polls, the question of race conflicts would end at once.

DISFRANCHISEMENT OF COLORED PEOPLE JUSTIFIED BY THE SOUTH.

That they are robbed of the right to political privileges, and refused the right to cast their ballots and have them fairly counted, is no longer denied, but is readily admitted, and justified on the ground of political and personal safety.

To do otherwise, it is boldly claimed, would be to submit to negro domination. To permit them to take part in State and national elections would be to permit them to arbitrarily assume the control of all political affairs, to permit them to stand in the places of Representatives upon this floor, and to permit them to assume the control of all financial and business matters connected with the property interests of the people of the State.

If such was to be the actual condition arising from the recognition of their rights, can any one now determine that the affairs of State and nation would not be managed as successfully and honestly as now?

PROGRESS AMONG THE COLORED PEOPLE.

The progress among the colored people has been so great that the quarter of a century just passed has marked an era of advancement beyond all expectation.

From ignorant and degraded slavery they have bounded forward in intelligence, and whenever opportunity affords have not failed to improve their mental and moral status.

The school-houses have been crowded with black faces, and the churches have gathered within their folds every shade of color and opinion.

Not unmindful of their worldly needs, they have been equally diligent in husbanding the results of their labor. In the State of Georgia these people, who but a short time since were bought and sold as chattels themselves, in 1888 owned $9,632,271 of property, an increase of $4,000,000 over 1880, a gain of 48 per cent., while during the same period the taxable property of the white people only increased 29 per cent.

These people who scarcely a quarter of a century ago were homeless and homeless, without capital and without opportunity, are now the possessors of more than $100,000,000 of the wealth of the nation. Let those who constantly decry them beware that they do not outstrip them in the race for gain and in the march of progress.

COLORED MAN A PICTURE IN THE SOUTH.

Those who are making war upon the black race in the South are standing in the light of their own material advancement. He is a part of the country, firmly fixed as its rocks and hills; and his progress and improvement only add to the intelligence and wealth of her people. The further he is removed from ignorance and poverty the more powerful does he become as a factor in her material progress.

Give him and his children opportunity and the farm will testify to their growth and culture; the cabin will give way to the home of refinement and wealth, and the slave of yesterday, whose ignorance made him tractable and submissive, will to-morrow become the useful citizen, whose interests are identified with those of all her people and are to be protected by the same laws and governed by the same legislative enactments.

NO CONFLICT OF RACES.

There is no reason for conflict between the races; there is room enough for fair and honest labor and for opportunity and reward.

The South needs the colored man for her fields and mills, for her cotton and her cane; it needs him on her levees, in her department of labor. Inured to the hot suns of her southern skies, he is as necessary to her prosperity as she is necessary to his advancement.

Let them learn to treat him justly and fairly, and the growing strength of his new and enlightened manhood will but add the more and more to her wealth and progress.

HENRY W. GRADY'S SOUND ADVICE.

Henry W. Grady spoke words of wisdom and judgment when, in speaking of the condition of affairs and the requirements of the hour, he said:

As for the white people of the South, there is but one thing for them to do—that is, to do right; to protect the negro in his rights; to give him justice, and friendship, and counsel; to punish those who wrong him; to hold this course to the very last.

If you shall heed these words of this counselor you will find in the end that they are indeed the words of wisdom and foresight.

TREATMENT OF COLORED MEN SOUTH.

That the colored man has been denied his rights and has been deprived of his political privileges can not be denied. That he has been used as a most potent factor for the purpose of increasing the representative power of the South, while at the same time he has not been permitted to take part in the selection of Representatives based upon his own enumeration, is a part of the political history of the hour.

That he has not only been suppressed, but literally blotted out from the political contest, is true; and by reason of such suppression the Democratic party elects almost a solid delegation from these Southern States. With the negro in the majority in some of these States, yet he is so completely silenced that the returns made from them do not include his vote at all.

COLORED PEOPLE REFRUSTRATED.

That the colored people substantially belong to one party, and, if permitted to vote at all, would vote that ticket, is very generally agreed.

Governor Lee, of Virginia, said that "the negroes of the South vote all one way, and this drives the whites into one party." He also said that in the States of South Carolina, Louisiana, and Mississippi "the negroes are in the majority, yet the whites in those States will never submit to negro rule."

He might have gone further and said that in almost every district in the South, even including his own, Virginia, the blacks are not permitted to vie with the lordly whites in the matter of political controversy, and that the party to which he belongs owes its supremacy to the fact that it has succeeded by intimidation and violence in persuading the black man that his personal safety very largely depends upon his quieting and controlling his political opinions.

The Charleston News and Courier says that it was "appalled at thinking that the rising generation of white men in the South is being taught that elections are to be carried, not by the honest vote of a fair majority, but by rank intimidations, subterfuge, and evasion." Again, the Birmingham (Ala.) Age-Herald, another leading Democratic paper of that section, lately said:

There are no places where the negro is not allowed the unrestricted right of ballot, unless it be in those regions where he constitutes a majority.

And the Columbia Register added:

We have carried this sort of thing as far as it can possibly go, and the result is that we are fast getting to be a set of rascals within our party limits, if we have not got there already.

The New Orleans States, an influential organ, utterly partisan, said:

The people of Mississippi do not steal or rob ballot-boxes, as General Chalmers has charged, but they do suppress the negro vote, and this fact they make no effort to conceal.

VOTE IN ELECTORAL COLLEGE MATERIALLY CHANGED IF ALL PERMITTED TO VOTE.

In the electoral college a large number of the votes now cast for the Democratic party would be changed to the Republican side if the colored people of the South were permitted to cast a free and fair ballot, and to have it honestly counted.

By means, therefore, of the suppression of the colored votes of the South the Democratic party has gained and holds possession of a large vote in the electoral college by means of which it must and will succeed, if it succeeds at all, in the election of a President and Vice-President of the United States, and thus the very election of a Chief Magistrate will be challenged by fraud and founded upon outrage and suppression.

If the fourteenth amendment is enforced in its letter and its spirit the number of Southern Representatives will be, and must be, reduced to correspond with the number of voters whose rights have been "in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion or other crime."

With such a reduction the Democratic party becomes a hopeless minority, and can no longer assail and destroy the rights of the majority and trample upon the liberties of the people.

CONGRESSIONAL REPRESENTATION CHANGES IF THE COLORED PEOPLE COULD VOTE.

The representation upon this floor of Congress would be very materially changed if throughout all the Southern States all the legally qualified electors, black and white, were permitted to cast a free and untrammelled ballot.

There are upon this floor of the Fifty-first Congress twenty-six Democratic Representatives, not a single one of whom would be or could be elected in their respective districts if the colored voters were permitted to cast their votes and to have them honestly counted.

TWENTY-SIX SOUTHERN DISTRICTS, 1888.

There are twenty-six districts in the South where the colored vote largely exceeds the white vote, and yet these districts send Democratic Representatives by majorities obtained by the suppression and destruction of the colored votes, as follows:

State and district.	Representative.	Negro majority.
ALABAMA.
First district.....	R. H. Clarke.....	2,858
Second district.....	H. A. Herbert.....	249
Third district.....	W. C. Oates.....	2,149
Fourth district.....	L. W. Turpin.....	26,612
GEORGIA.
Second district.....	H. G. Turner.....	3,763
Third district.....	C. F. Crisp.....	2,431
Fourth district.....	T. M. Grimes.....	2,947
Sixth district.....	J. H. Blount.....	6,229
Eighth district.....	H. H. Carlton.....	4,180
Tenth district.....	G. T. Barnes.....	6,145
LOUISIANA.
Fourth district.....	N. C. Blanchard.....	5,732
Fifth district.....	C. J. Boatner.....	22,154
Sixth district.....	S. M. Robertson.....	4,545
MISSISSIPPI.
Second district.....	J. B. Morgan.....	2,468
Third district.....	T. C. Catchings.....	14,729
Fourth district.....	Clarke Lewis.....	5,773
Fifth district.....	C. L. Anderson.....	1,570
Sixth district.....	T. R. Stockdale.....	1,327
Seventh district.....	C. E. Hooker.....	6,440
SOUTH CAROLINA.
First district.....	Samuel Dibble.....	2,236
Second district.....	G. D. Tillman.....	6,643
Third district.....	J. D. Cothran.....	1,210
Fourth district.....	W. H. Perry.....	1,590
Fifth district.....	J. J. Hemphill.....	2,610
Sixth district.....	G. W. Dargan.....	3,296
Seventh district.....	William Elliott.....	24,890
TENNESSEE.
Tenth district.....	James Phelan.....	3,673

SENSITIVE IN ALL THINGS BUT POLITICS.

I presume every one of these gentlemen would resent an aspersion against his personal integrity and honor. Every one of them would protest, and loudly protest, if any charges of unfair dealing or dishonest practice were made against him. Every one of them would hasten to defend himself if his financial or personal honesty was called in question. And yet sensitiveness ends where political chicanery begins. Not a single one of these gentlemen has ever hesitated to receive the benefit of the political frauds and outrages which have been perpetrated in his interests against the people.

Not a single one of them has ever for a moment doubted the propriety of taking and receiving the benefit arising from the most glaring and outrageous frauds upon the ballot-boxes of the country.

Not one of them would for a moment consider the propriety of way-laying and attacking the weak and defenseless. Not one of them would even by implication have it understood that he is participating in the robbery of his fellow-citizens and profiting by their discomfiture, and yet the robberies are committed, the outrages are perpetrated, the defenseless are attacked, the weak are overthrown, and these gentlemen are receiving without question and keeping without objection the usufruct of these assaults upon the rights and liberties of the people.

THE WHITE MEN HAVE TO RULE.

These frauds have extended themselves into every election in these States, county, State, and national.

The minority, with high-handed insolence, have finally thrown off the mask of pretended fairness and announce that the lordly white man alone must rule, and that the ignorant and degraded colored men must be kept in political subjection and dependence forever.

The colored men, upon whose nominal strength thirty of them sit upon this floor, and thirty of them cast their votes in the electoral college, is to have no voice in either the election of Representatives or in the choice of Presidential electors.

NOT IGNORANCE, BUT COLOR, THE LINE DRAWN.

The line of ignorance is drawn not by any test of educational requirement, but by the test of color alone.

The ignorant white man is never so ignorant as to be disqualified by the Democratic rule of political incompetency.

The educated colored man is never so accomplished as to be permitted to exercise the privileges of a citizen.

As a test of ignorance, if the Democratic party should base its hopes of success upon intelligence alone, it would fall far short of triumphal supremacy.

IF IGNORANCE DISQUALIFIES IT SHOULD DISQUALIFY ALL ALIKE.

It is idle to talk of the ignorance of the colored man as a just cause for his political disfranchisement. If ignorance disqualifies it should at the same time disfranchise black ignorance and white ignorance alike.

If the black man is so ignorant as to endanger by his want of intelligence the safety and security of the State or the nation, let the laws of the State or the nation provide for the protection of the people, and let him be stricken from the enumerated list of her citizens entitled to representation, and with him let the ignorant white man be stricken from the list as well.

NOT IGNORANCE, BUT COLOR.

This cry of ignorance but serves to hide the real cause of the difficulty. It is not ignorance which disqualifies him, but color; and that color only serves to disqualify when he claims the right to vote for the party which is in opposition to the Democratic party. A black man in the South is an ignorant negro only when he assumes the right to place himself in antagonism to the white minority. If he is willing to sink his independence and political freedom and register his vote in favor of the Democratic party he becomes a distinguished colored fellow-citizen, and, no matter how dense his ignorance, is protected in his political rights.

You can hear of colored men too ignorant to be permitted to vote at any election for the Republican ticket, but the political history of the country has yet to register a single instance where a colored man has been found too ignorant to be permitted to vote the Democratic ticket. Nor yet has he been found too ignorant to be counted as an important factor in securing for the Democratic party, not only supremacy in this Chamber, but in national affairs as well.

NO DANGER OF NEGRO DOMINATION.

It is useless to talk of negro domination. In this country there are 65,000,000 people—8,800,000 are colored and 56,200,000 of them are white people.

Is this lordly Anglo-Saxon race to be dominated by a mere handful of the descendants of the African?

Is the intelligence of the nineteenth century to be outstripped in the race for conquest by the ignorance which it is claimed is too great to be entrusted for a single moment with political power?

There is not and there can not be danger of negro supremacy in America.

The educated black man at once becomes, by reason of his broader intelligence, an earnest and patriotic defender of our institutions.

IF IGNORANCE IS DANGEROUS, LET US EDUCATE.

If ignorance is the rock of danger, let us erect the light-houses of educational protection.

Let the doorways of our institutions of learning be opened, and the school-houses be builded, that this cloud of ignorance may be dispelled and these millions of new-born freemen be made equal to the dignity and the requirements of American citizens.

NO DANGER OF COLORED SUPREMACY.

* The 1,600,000 of colored voters can not, under any condition of affairs, endanger the liberties of the 56,000,000 of whites.

The mere local supremacy of the black man in a portion of the Union can not under any circumstances endanger the overwhelming majority of the whites in the entire country.

It is a more important question to be asked, and if possible to be answered, as to whether a minority of the whites shall longer be permitted to overawe and intimidate not only the colored voters of the country, but also the large majority of the whites themselves.

THE CONTEST ONLY POLITICAL.

The contest is, after all, but a political one between the parties; it is not a question of race domination.

The attempt to force an issue between the whites and blacks and to engender a strife between the races is as unwise as it must prove to be vain and unsuccessful.

COLORED MEN HERE TO STAY.

The negro is here to stay, and he will be a useful and important factor in the development of our great industries and our national advancement.

You can neither legislate him away nor can you drive him beyond the borders of our national domain; he is to the manner born, and he justly claims the right to enjoy the fruits of his labor and the reward of his toil.

THE SOUTH REQUIRES HIS AID.

But, beyond all this, the South demands and requires his aid in the building up of her prosperity and the lifting up of their country from its depressed condition.

His hands are strong and his arms are ready and willing to carry the burdens of her labor. Give him but a fair opportunity, and he will prove himself not a stumbling block in the way of advancement, but a sturdy and substantial help in her march to wealth and power.

Sweep away the pretended antagonisms, which do not exist, and permit him to aid in the development of your country, and he will but add to its growth, grandeur, and greatness.

A WHITE MAN'S PARTY.

The whites have long maintained a white man's party, and into this, by force or persuasion or necessity, have been driven all those who looked for political preferment or desired the advantages of social intercourse; to have stood over upon the other side, or to have allied themselves with the colored voter, meant not only political, but social ostracism. It required, therefore, not only the greatest courage, but the greatest individual independence of thought and the truest heroism, to become a member of any party other than the one controlled in the interest and to the advantage of the white minority.

Every means of chicanery, of fraud, of deception, of threat, of trickery, of outrage, and even of murder, if necessary, has been resorted to to keep this white minority in power, until at last it became known that further efforts of resistance were useless; and hence, almost without opposition, this same minority has been occupying the places of trust in the State and nation, while the great majority of the people upon whose numerical strength these same places were obtained were deprived of all right of choice or expression at the ballot-boxes; and this silent majority of unexercised political power has given us only discontented and unsatisfied protest, and has again and again applied for national protection and defense.

COLORED PEOPLE NOT WARLIKE.

It is known to every one at all familiar with the negro race that they are not an aggressive, warlike people. Brought up under the shadow of one hundred years of bondage, they are a quiet, inoffensive, and docile people, with convictions as strong and affections as lasting as any other people on the face of the earth; yet they are content to await their opportunity rather than with determined effort to assert their personal convictions and to demand their just rights; and hence they have awaited the coming of the dawn of their political, as they awaited in servitude the coming of the dawn of their personal, liberty.

They require leaders and organizers to form them into effective political parties; they require the aggressive force of the white character to be combined with their true and faithful patriotism, to render them a party of unalterable convictions and unconquerable loyalty.

AN ELECTION LAW WOULD DESTROY RACE CONTENTS.

Let Congress pass an election law so guarded by provisions that shall make it absolutely fair and impartial, giving to every man a right to an honest ballot, and the question of white supremacy and negro inferiority passes away forever; it then becomes a race for conquest and political preferment.

The white man who yesterday did not ask for negro assistance, because it could avail him nothing, to-morrow becomes the negro's ally in the political contest that must of necessity result in favor of the party which is able to put the most ballots into the boxes.

The whites who were but yesterday striving to drive away by threats, by fright, by intimidation and murder, the black man from the polls, will to-morrow become his allies and defenders and aid and protect him in the exercise of that political right by means of which they hope to gain power and preferment.

The white who but yesterday was seeking by every means within his power to deprive him of the right to the ballot will be ready to defend him, if need be, in the exercise of that franchise by the means of which and by that only he can himself hope to succeed.

The whites will no longer be on one side and the blacks on the other, but the white who has long believed in the justice of his cause, but who has been restrained by unfortunate surroundings from aiding him in his futile attempts to exercise his rights, and those who appreciate his political power and wish to profit by it, will be ready to join hands with him in this new political millennium of the South.

That this would be the result I have no doubt whatever.

WORDS OF WISDOM FROM HON. MR. CATCHINGS, OF MISSISSIPPI.

The whites and the blacks of the South have long been upon the most friendly terms upon all questions, save upon the question of the right of the negro to exercise the privilege of the ballot.

A distinguished and exceedingly able Democratic member of Congress from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] has recently borne unwilling testimony to this recognized condition of affairs, and in a private letter written to a friend, which most happily fell into the hands of his political enemies, he says:

You are mistaken, I think, in your idea that good would come of a general election law. In such an event, I fear that many of the whites would leave us, destroying our solidarity and cementing and making effective that of the negroes. I would regard it as a great calamity.

This Democratic leader would regard as a great calamity an election law which would disturb the harmony of that state of affairs which formerly existed, putting the whites all on one side and the blacks on the other, and thus enabling the Democratic party to control the elections in Mississippi by fraud and force and violence, and by preventing the blacks from exercising the rights of franchise.

He regards it as a calamity, because it would "destroy the solidarity" of the Democratic party, and because it would cement and make effective the negroes.

But, above all, he regards it as a calamity "because many of the whites would leave us," and thus the beginning of the end of the Democratic party would appear, and it would, indeed, be what Hon. Mr. CATCHINGS so aptly terms it, "a great calamity" to the party in the South.

RACE TROUBLES AT FIRST, BUT FINALLY PEACE.

But if it needed more testimony, Hon. Mr. CATCHINGS gives it in his letter, when he further says:

We would have race collisions at first, but gradually they would be allowed to vote and would capture everything and this would cause them to organize in county and State elections and give us additional trouble. I hope we will never have this law forced upon us.

Could anything be more logical and concise? The result, I have no doubt whatever, would be precisely as Mr. CATCHINGS, with unusual wisdom and foresight, predicts that it would be, and the result of such elections would, there can be no question, be a great calamity to the Democratic party of the South and the whole country, for it would deprive it of the power and supremacy it has held in the nation by reason of its ability to deprive the people of the Southern States of the right to exercise the franchise, and by means of which it has enabled a white minority to control in all, or nearly all, of its elections in that part of the country where a majority of the voters were not in accord with its creeds and doctrines, and were most earnestly opposed to its being intrusted with political power.

THE SOUTHERN STATES WOULD SOON BE REPRESENTED BY WHITES ELECTED BY NEGRO VOTES.

Mr. CATCHINGS has so plainly given us words of wisdom that I deem it proper to quote from him again, so that we may profit by the testimony he has so unintentionally offered, and if possible thus to convey his testimony to the North. He says:

With coercive election laws nearly all the Southern districts would soon be represented by white men, largely elected by the negro vote, and the negro would be more intense and aggressive than in Virginia, for they would be more numerous.

This, then, is the real reason for Hon. Mr. CATCHINGS's opposition to the enactment of an election law for the whole country. It would disrupt the white minority, it would make white leaders for the blacks, it would enable this new party, organized of the whites and negroes, to become supreme in many districts, and would thus enable them to send delegates to Congress elected by the white and negro vote. I am even informed that so impressed is Hon. Mr. CATCHINGS of the inevitable result of this prediction that he contemplates abandoning Mississippi and finding more congenial quarters in some other State of the Union.

I faithfully believe that the distinguished Representative of Mississippi has borne testimony in this matter most valuable for all, that an election law giving impartial judges, impartial clerks, impartial registrars, and impartial inspectors of election will enable the people to obtain everywhere an opportunity for a fair and impartial expression of their political preferences and their political rights, and when this is done who can doubt but that the days of Democratic supremacy are ended?

Enact such a law and the days of white supremacy and negro inferiority and subjugation are ended; enact such a law and the South, which has been bowed down in humility and covered with political and financial degradation, will lift her head and start on the march to a new and brighter future.

THE QUESTION OF THE LAWS.

Is there any one so blinded by party prejudice as to openly declare himself opposed to the freedom of the ballot and ready to assert himself as justifying the destruction of the system which recognizes the equality of all men before the law?

Is there any one so foolishly partisan as not to know that the safety of the Government and the liberty of the citizen depend upon the faithful execution of the law, and the submission of every individual member of the Republic to the wise provisions of its Constitution?

Is there any one so ignorant as not to know that the violations of laws and the disregard of constitutional provisions not only endanger the safety of those against whom they would hurl these broken and violated fragments, but endanger alike the property, the rights, and the liberty of every citizen of the Republic?

Is there any one who does not know that the only safe and sure ground upon which all can stand, the rock upon which all can make common defense, and share with equal and exact justice all the blessings of a Republic of the people is the recognized equality of all citizens under our Constitution and before the law?

Let us so legislate that in every section of the land every citizen shall be protected in all his rights and guaranteed the broadest freedom consistent with the liberty of all.

IF ELECTIONS ARE HONEST, NO HARM CAN COME FROM AN ELECTION LAW.

If elections are conducted fairly and honestly in the South, if it is true that there is neither race controversy nor race antagonism, if it is true that to every one the right to be not only counted, but also to vote, is accorded in every section of the Southern States, then by no possibility can any harm be done by the passage of an election law.

Under such circumstances such a law will only affirm by universal assent the rights which are already accorded to all the people. But if it is true that the rights of the people are in any manner abridged, if it is true that the people are only enumerated for the purpose of increasing the basis of Southern representation and Federal power, if it is true that by any means the right of those entitled to the ballot "is in any way abridged except for participation in rebellion or other crime," if it is true that the people are denied the right to fair and honest expression of political opinions at the ballot-box, if it is true that outrage and oppression prevail and fraud and violence are supreme, then the necessity for an election law, so framed as to be powerful enough to protect every citizen of the Republic in the exercise of his unabridged constitutional rights, is imperatively demanded of these Representatives of the people.

WHAT THE PEOPLE DEMAND.

What the people of the country demand is that there shall be absolute equality at the ballot-box; that a ballot in Georgia, or Mississippi, or South Carolina shall be the medium through which the people may express their political opinions without fear and without favor. They demand, and they will be content with nothing less, that the ballot shall be the instrument by means of which every citizen of the Republic, clothed with equal power in every section of the land, may share in the rights and liberties as well as in the duties and obligations of the citizen.

They demand equal and exact justice for all the people, and that no method of disfranchisement shall be recognized that is not based upon wisdom, justice, and law, and that is not meted out to all alike.

They demand that the amendments to the Constitution shall be faithfully and impartially observed, and that they shall be executed in the spirit and the letter, until the wisdom of the majority of the people shall, in the method pointed out for their alteration, determine to annul or amend them.

They demand that the people shall be protected in all their rights, and that this Government shall be, and remain for all time, as it was intended to be, and as it was proclaimed by the immortal Lincoln to be, "a government of the people, by the people, and for the people."

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I rise to make a privileged report from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. I send the report to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9806) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1891 submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon on said amendments as submitted in the accompanying report—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky (interrupting the reading). I trust the gentleman from Ohio will permit me to suggest that if he will allow this conference report to be printed in the RECORD and let us take it up at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning it will probably occupy a great deal less time than if we proceed with its consideration now; and time is quite important, for the period allowed for debate upon the pending election bill is very short and ought not to be interfered with except as a matter of necessity. While of course appropriation bills are excepted by the order, the general understanding was that we ought not to encroach upon the consideration of this measure unless there should be a necessity.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. My friend from Kentucky will observe that there are only two or three days of the fiscal year remaining; and unless we are to pass a resolution extending temporarily the appropriations as made for the current year, which would be a difficult thing to do in this case, this bill ought to be disposed of very speedily; and upon consultation with my associates on the conference committee I thought it proper to submit this report at the present time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I would not say what I do if it were not absolutely certain that we shall have to pass such an extending resolution anyhow; we can not get all the appropriation bills in before the beginning of the new fiscal year—

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Undoubtedly there will be a necessity for such a resolution as to some of the appropriation bills.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The time given for the matter now under discussion, which is an extremely important matter, is very much restricted; and, unless there is a necessity for presenting this report now, I submit to the gentleman whether it is generous to occupy the time in this way.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I take it for granted this bill will be disposed of in a very short time. The items concerning which we disagree are mainly those which appertain to the increase of the force employed by the Senate and the increase of salaries there. There are not many other matters about which I think the House feels greatly concerned. I believe that this report will lead to no general discussion, and I think we can dispose of it in a very short time. I have followed in this matter, as already stated, the suggestions of my associates on the conference committee.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. There were some matters which were cut out in this House on points of order—

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. And which have been restored.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I am aware they have been restored, and by bringing this matter up now you put those of us who are against those items in an attitude which, to say the least, it is not generous to force us into—either to submit to the adoption of those items without resistance, or to resist them with the understanding that we are occupying time that is important in connection with other matters.

The gentleman knows that the increase in the Attorney-General's force is believed by some of us to be connected with the very measure under discussion to-day, a part of the same scheme. We also do not believe that the increase in the board of review in the Pension Office is a proper thing.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That can not be connected with the pending election bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. No; but if we are forced into the attitude either of accepting without resistance a conference report which embraces matters that were cut out in the House on points of order, or of resisting this report with the knowledge that we are taking up time which is important in another aspect, I hardly think that is kind or generous, though certainly it is legitimate.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] will yield a moment, I want to say that when this order with regard to the election bill was made, and afterward when unanimous consent was given that the daily sessions should commence at 11 o'clock, it was expressly understood that these general appropriation bills should come up and be disposed of between the time of the adoption of that order and the 1st of July. It is important that the legislative bill should be disposed of promptly, because the passage of a joint resolution extending the appropriations of the current year would work great confusion in the service of the Government.

I apprehend further that the disposition of the legislative bill will not take a great deal of time. There are not a great many disagreements involved in the conference report; and I think if we get directly at it, we can possibly dispose of the matter upon its merits in less time than will be taken in talking about the propriety of bringing it up.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. There was no unanimous understanding at all. The order was an order adopted by the majority of the House, against the unanimous vote of the Democratic members; and under the order the gentleman has the right to bring up this bill—

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not deny the right of the gentleman to do it and to take up as much time as may be necessary to do it.

All I wish to say is that under the circumstances it does not seem to me that it is a generous use of power about a matter which is not of necessity to consume the time which has been allotted to the consideration of the pending measure. Therefore I submit it simply to the chairman of the committee and the gentleman having the report in charge, with an acknowledgment of their power to call it up if they so desire, with the single purpose of seeing whether the generous courtesy which should characterize such matters would not permit them to allow this report to wait, as I have indicated. And upon that I leave the matter with the House.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I wish again to call the attention of the gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from Tennessee to my statement, and I think they will confirm it, that not only was this exception made in the special order, but it was thoroughly discussed in the House when agreeing to the special order and to its terms. It was clearly understood then, and distinctly understood, that these bills should have the right of way; and unanimous consent was given to commence the sessions of the House at 11 o'clock with a view of compensating for the time which would probably be taken by such conference reports on general appropriation bills. Hence just such a contingency as this was provided for. It was understood that it might arise, and that provision was made to meet it, and I can not but admire the bland manner in which the gentleman from Kentucky comes forward upon this matter, as he always comes when he comes at all, and seeks in his effective, captivating way, by inference at least, to appeal to the courtesy of the members of the Committee on Appropriations, thereby placing them in the wrong, when as a matter of fact they are in the right. I hope therefore that the conference report will be considered.

Mr. BLAND. If gentlemen on the other side had, as they evidently had, the power to make the special order and power to make this exception to the special order, they had power over the whole matter. This side had no power whatever but to acquiesce in it. We voted against it; and consequently whatever wrong there is about it that side must be alone responsible for.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, the majority of this House have power to do anything.

Mr. BLAND. Certainly; and you seem disposed to do everything and anything right straight along.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman from Missouri had been able to exercise that power last week he would have been gratified, I do not doubt.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I have no disposition to do anything but to leave the disposition of this matter to the Committee on Appropriations. The gentleman from Illinois has made his statement. The House knows the facts; they know that the resolution is to be adopted. But while the majority of the House has power to do anything, as it seems, it has not the power to receive the commendations of those who think there ought to be a certain degree of courtesy in the transaction of the public business accorded to members in the minority.

Mr. CANNON. No possible question of courtesy comes up in this connection except as the gentleman himself chooses to make it. It is not a question of courtesy at all.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. There is this, Mr. Speaker, to be borne in mind: It appears—I was not present myself when the order was made—that when the allowance of time was fixed for the consideration of the Federal election bill an express provision was made for the reception of conference reports, and in order to meet the time that would probably be occupied in such reports the House agreed by unanimous consent to meet at 11 o'clock. The order itself, therefore, provides for the exception of appropriation bills from its operation and for their consideration.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. And I will say beyond that that there is no new matter that the committee on conference report; nothing but what was fully discussed in the House.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, let us get to the consideration of the report, and not consume all of the time in preliminaries.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That is exactly what I want to do. I was simply replying to the criticism of the gentleman from Kentucky and his amiable observations as to what he seemed to regard as a want of courtesy on this side of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that unanimous consent be asked to dispense with the reading of the report, and let the statement of the effect of the report be read instead, which will inform gentlemen of the contents of the report.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Very well, Mr. Speaker; I will make that request.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope that will be done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the reading of the report will be omitted.

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9066) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 43, 44, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 71, 76, 77, 78, 79, 90, 91, 98, 100, 101, 108, 104, 108, 110, 114, 116, 117, 128, 129, 130, 131, 133, 134, 135, 136, 139, 140, 141, 144, 145, 146, 147, 149, 150, 164, 166, 167, 175, 176, 177, 178, 189, 194, 198, 199, 200, 203, 204, 205, 207, and 208.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 40, 41, 42, 47, 48, 50, 51, 53, 56, 57, 72, 73, 74, 75, 82, 89, 92, 94, 95, 97, 98, 102, 105, 107, 109, 115, 118, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 128, 143, 148, 149, 153, 156, 160, 161, 162, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 178, 174, 179, 201, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 225, and 227, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 89: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 89, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"Provided: That hereafter every application for examination before the Civil Service Commission for appointment in the departmental service in the District of Columbia shall be accompanied by a certificate of an officer, with his official seal attached, of the county and State of which the applicant claims to be a citizen, that such applicant was, at the time of making such application, an actual and bona fide resident of said county, and had been such resident for a period of not less than six months next preceding; but this provision shall not apply to persons who may be in the service and seek promotion or appointment in other branches of the Government."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$117,670;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 52: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "two;" and insert, after the word "each," on page 17, in line 18 of the bill, the following:

"For an additional Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive a compensation at the rate of $4,500 per annum, $4,500."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 85: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 85, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "thirteen;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 86: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 86, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "four;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 87: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 87, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$181,490;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 111: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 111, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "five;" and on page 82 of the bill, in line 15, strike out "one stenographer" and insert in lieu thereof "two stenographers;" and on same page, in line 16 of the bill, after the word "dollars," insert the word "each;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 112: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 112, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$108,150;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 119: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 119, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$154,920;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 157: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 157, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For an Assistant Secretary of the Navy, to be appointed from civil life, by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive a compensation at the rate of $4,500 per annum, $4,500."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 157: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 157, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 68, in line 5 of the bill, strike out "thirteen" and insert in lieu thereof "twelve;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 158: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 158, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$38,950;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 180: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 180, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$21,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 181: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 181, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$5,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 182: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 182, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$7,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 183: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 183, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$7,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 184: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 184, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$9,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 185: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 185, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 186: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 186, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 187: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 187, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$7,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 148: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 138, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$9,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 190: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 190, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 191: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 191, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$5,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 192: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 192, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$7,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 193: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 193, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$10,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 195: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 195, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "2;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 197: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 197, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$11,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 202: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 202, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$19,970;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 206: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 206, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$12,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 210, 211, 212, 213, and 214: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 210, 211, 212, 213, and 214, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"For rent of topographer's office, $1,500; for rent of suitable building or buildings for the use of the money-order office of the Post-Office Department, $8,000; for rent of building for use of the money-order division of the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department at the rate of $4,000 per annum until not later than February 1, 1891, $2,334, and the building known as Marini Hall shall be vacated by said division not later than that date; for rent of building for use of said money-order division for balance of the fiscal year, at a rate not exceeding $9,000 per annum, $3,750; for expenses of removal of said division to new location, $900; for rent of a suitable building for the storage of post-office supplies, $4,000; in all, $20,384."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 215: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 215, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "three" and insert after the word "each," on page 45, in line 3 of the bill, the following:

"For an additional Assistant Attorney-General, to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive a compensation at the rate of $5,000 per annum, $5,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

On the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 34, 159, and 163 the committees of conference have been unable to agree.

BENJ. BUTTERWORTH,
J. G. CANNON,
WM. H. FORNEY,
Managers on the part of the House.
H. L. DAWES,
P. B. PLUMB,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the statement accompanying the report.

The statement was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9096) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1891 submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon on said amendments, as submitted in the accompanying report:

On the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, the Senate agrees to the proposition of the House to provide for an Assistant Official Reporter at $1,000 instead of an Assistant Official Reporter under the Chief Official Reporter at the same salary.

On amendments 40, 41, and 42, provides for an additional assistant librarian in the Library of Congress at $1,200.

On amendments 43 and 44, strikes out proposed increase in the number of clerks of class 3, from two to three, for the Civil Service Commission.

On amendment 46, in lieu of the provision inserted by the House, it is agreed to insert the following:

"Provided, That hereafter every application for examination before the Civil Service Commission for appointment in the departmental service in the District of Columbia shall be accompanied by a certificate of an officer, with his official seal attached, of the county and State of which the applicant claims to be a citizen, that such applicant was at the time of making such application an actual and bona fide resident of said county, and had been such resident for a period of not less than six months next preceding; but this provision shall not apply to persons who may be in the service and seek promotion or appointment in other branches of the Government."

On amendments 47, 48, and 49: Provides for a clerk to the Secretary of State at $2,000, instead of a stenographer at $1,800, as proposed by the House.

On amendments 50 and 51: Authorizes the purchase of an official carriage for the Secretary of State, and increases the amount for the contingent expenses of the Senate from $4,800, as proposed by the House, to $6,300, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments 52 and 53: Provides for an additional Assistant Secretary of the Treasury at $4,500, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments 56 and 57: Provides for six special watchmen in the Treasury Department at $720 each.

On amendments 59 and 60: Strikes out increase of clerks of class 1 from ten to twelve in the Second Comptroller's Office, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments 61 and 62: Strikes out increase of clerks of class 4 from two to three in the Fourth Auditor's Office, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments 63 and 64: Strikes out increase of clerks of class 1 from fifteen to seventeen in the redemption division of the Treasurer's Office, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment 71: Restores the provisions of the House that certain employees in the office of the Light-House Board shall be paid from the appropriations for the Light-House Establishment, instead of making a direct appropriation therefor, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments 72 and 73: Increases the salary of the chief clerk of the Bureau of Statistics from $2,000 to $2,250, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment 74: Increases the amount for collection of facts relative to the internal and foreign commerce from $1,000 to $1,500, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment 75: Appropriates $1,500 for the construction of standard gallens and their subdivisions for the use of the States and Territories which have not received the same.

On amendment 76: Appropriates for stationery for the Treasury Department $23,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $20,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment 77: Appropriates $700, as proposed by the House, instead of $1,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the investigation of accounts and records under the Treasury Department.

On amendment 78: Appropriates $6,500, as proposed by the House, instead of $5,500, as proposed by the Senate, for purchase of carpets, etc., for the Treasury Department.

On amendment 79: Appropriates $10,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $9,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the purchase of articles of furniture for the use of the Treasury Department.

On amendment 83: Appropriates $1,800,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1,750,000, as proposed by the House, for the salaries and expenses of collectors and deputy collectors of internal revenue.

On amendments 85, 86, and 87: Provides for one clerk at $1,400 and one clerk at $1,200, additional to the number proposed by the House, in the office of the assistant treasurer at New York.

On amendment 89: Reappropriates the unexpended balance of the appropriation for 1890 for the compensation of special agents to examine the books, accounts, etc., of the several subtreasuries.

On amendment 90: Appropriates $30,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $60,000, as proposed by the Senate, for wages of workmen in the mint at Carson City, Nev.

On amendment 91: Appropriates $12,500, as proposed by the House, instead of $25,000, as proposed by the Senate, for contingent expenses of the mint at Carson City, Nev.

On amendment 92: Appropriates $6,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $3,000, as proposed by the House, for contingent expenses of the mint at Denver, Colo.

On amendment 93: Appropriates $80,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $100,000, as proposed by the Senate, for contingent expenses of the mint at Philadelphia.

On amendment 94: Appropriates $7,500, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $6,000, as proposed by the House, for contingent expenses of the assay office at Boise City, Idaho.

On amendment 95: Appropriates $5,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $4,000, as proposed by the House, for contingent expenses of the assay office at Helena, Mont.

On amendments 97 and 98: Provides for six deputy marshals, as proposed by the Senate, for the Territory of Alaska, instead of four, as proposed by the House, at $750 each.

On amendments 100 and 101: Strikes out proposed increase by the Senate of one associate judge for the Territory of Arizona.

On amendment 102: Appropriates $1,000, as proposed by the Senate, for legislative expenses of the Territory of Idaho.

On amendments 103 and 104: Strikes out proposed increase by the Senate of one associate judge for the Territory of New Mexico.

On amendments 106 and 107: Appropriates $2,100 for legislative expenses and $1,500 for contingent expenses of the Territory of Oklahoma, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment 108: Appropriates $500, as proposed by the House, instead of $1,000, as proposed by the Senate, for contingent expenses of the Territory of Utah.

On amendment 109: Appropriates $1,000 for legislative expenses of the Territory of Wyoming, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments 110, 111, and 112: Appropriates for three chiefs of division at $2,000, as proposed by the House, instead of four, as proposed by the Senate, and for one additional stenographer at $1,900, instead of one additional clerk of class 4, as proposed by the Senate, in the office of the Secretary of War.

On amendments 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, and 119: In lieu of the increase in the force in the Signal Office proposed by the Senate, provides for one additional watchman at $720 and one additional char-woman at $240.

On amendment 120: Provides that certain printing for the office of the Surgeon-General may be done in the office of the Adjutant-General or the Chief of Ordnance.

On amendment 121: Authorizes the employment of civil engineers in the office of the Chief of Engineers of the War Department, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments 122, 123, 124, and 125: In addition to the force authorized by the House in the office of Records of the Rebellion, provides for the following additional employees, as proposed by the Senate, namely: One clerk of class 4, one clerk of class 2, and one pressman and compositor at $1,200.

On amendment 128: Appropriates $25,000 for stationery for the War Department, as proposed by the House, instead of $30,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments 129, 130, and 131: Strikes out increase in rent for the Rebellion Records Office from $1,200 to $3,000, as proposed by the Senate, and $150 for expenses of removal of that office.

On amendment 133: Strikes out provision proposed by the Senate for one night watchman in Garfield Park at $720.

On amendments 134, 135, and 136: Strikes out provision proposed by the Senate for four leading char-women, at $300 each, in the State, War, and Navy building.

On amendments 137 and 138: Provides for an Assistant Secretary of the Navy at $4,500, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments 139 and 140: Strikes out proposed increase of one clerk of class 4 in the Bureau of Navigation, Navy Department, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment 141: Appropriates $30,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $35,000, as proposed by the Senate, for miscellaneous expenses in the Hydrographic Office.

On amendments 142, 143, and 144: Provides for the establishment of branch offices of the Hydrographic Office at Portland, Me., and Chicago, Ill., as proposed by the Senate, and appropriates $12,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $18,000, as proposed by the Senate, for contingent expenses of all the branch offices.

On amendments 145, 146, and 147: Strikes out increase proposed by the Senate in the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting, Navy Department, of one clerk of class 3 and one clerk of class 1.

On amendment 148: Appropriates $1,000 as proposed by the Senate for rent of building for the Nautical Almanac Office.

On amendments 149 and 150: Strikes out increase proposed by the Senate of one assistant librarian at $1,200 and one copyist at $720 in the Naval Observatory.

On amendments 155 and 156: Provides for nine members of the board of pension appeals at $2,000 each in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments 157 and 158: Provides for a reporter of land decisions at $2,250, as proposed by the Senate, in the Interior Department, and reduces the number of law clerks at $2,500 from thirteen to twelve.

On amendments 160, 161, and 162: Provides, as proposed by the Senate, in the General Land Office for three principal clerks at $2,000 each, and eight chiefs of division at $2,000 each, and for a reduction of clerks of class 4 from forty to thirty-two.

On amendment 164: Provides that of the United States maps prepared in the General Land Office 1,000 copies thereof shall be retained in the office as proposed by the House, instead of 2,500 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments 165 and 167: Provides for eighteen medical examiners at $1,800 each in the Pension Office, as proposed by the House, instead of thirty-six as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments 168 and 169: Increases the salary of thirty principal examiners in the Patent Office from $2,400 to $2,500 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments 170, 171, 172, 173, and 174: Provides, as proposed by the Senate, for one specialist in foreign educational systems at $1,500 in the Bureau of Education, and increases the amount for collecting statistics from $2,500 to $3,000.

On amendment 175: Appropriates $75,000 as proposed by the House, instead of $90,000 as proposed by the Senate, for contingent expenses of the Interior Department.

On amendment 176: Appropriates $50,000 as proposed by the House, instead of $70,000 as proposed by the Senate, for stationery for the Interior Department.

On amendments 177 and 178: Appropriates $4,000 as proposed by the House, instead of $5,000 as proposed by the Senate, for rent of building for the Bureau of Education, and $5,500 as proposed by the House, instead of $6,000 as proposed by the Senate, for rent of building for the Indian Office.

On amendments 179 and 180: Appropriates $2,000 as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1,500 as proposed by the House, for rent of building for the General Land Office.

On amendments 181 and 182: Appropriates $5,000 for clerks in the surveyor-general's office of North Dakota, instead of $3,500 as proposed by the House and $7,000 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments 183 and 184: Appropriates $7,500 for clerks in the surveyor-general's office of South Dakota, instead of $3,500 as proposed by the House and $12,700 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments 185 and 186: Appropriates $2,000 for clerks in the surveyor-general's office of Idaho, instead of $1,500 as proposed by the House and $3,000 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments 187 and 188: Appropriates $7,000 for clerks in the surveyor-general's office of Montana, instead of $5,000 as proposed by the House and $9,000 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment 189: Appropriates $3,000 as proposed by the House, instead of $2,500 as proposed by the Senate, for rent and contingent expenses of the surveyor-general's office of Montana.

On amendments 190 and 191: Appropriates $2,000 for the salary of the surveyor-general of Oregon, instead of $1,500 as proposed by the House and $2,500 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments 192 and 193: Appropriates $7,500 for the clerks in the surveyor-general's office of Washington, instead of $5,500 as proposed by the House and $10,500 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment 194: Strikes out provision proposed by the Senate for twenty temporary clerks in the Post-Office Department to tabulate the returns from all post-offices of a general count of the several classes of mail matter for one week.

On amendments 195, 196, and 197: Of the increase in the force proposed by the Senate in the office of the Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department, provides only for one additional clerk of class 1.

On amendments 198 and 199: Strikes out increase proposed by the Senate in the salary of the chief of the salary and allowance division from $2,300 to $2,500.

On amendments 200, 201, and 202: Of the increase of the force of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General proposed by the Senate, provides only for one clerk additional of class 2.

On amendments 203 and 204: Strikes out increase proposed by the Senate of two additional firemen, at $720 each, for the Post-Office Department.

On amendment 205: Makes verbal correction in the title of the appropriations for contingent expenses of the Post-Office Department.

On amendment 206: Appropriates $12,000 for stationery for the Post-Office Department, instead of $11,000 as proposed by the House and $20,000 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment 207: Appropriates $3,000 as proposed by the House, instead of $4,000 as proposed by the Senate, for carpets and matting for the Post-Office Department.

On amendment 208: Appropriates $3,000 as proposed by the House, instead of $4,000 as proposed by the Senate, for furniture for the Post-Office Department.

On amendments 210, 211, 212, 213, and 214: Provides for the rent of the Marine Hall building for the use of the money-order division of the Sixth Auditor's Office until February 1, 1891, and requires that that building shall be vacated not later than that date by the said division; appropriates at the rate of $9,000 per annum for another building for the said division for the balance of the fiscal year, and $900 for the expenses of the removal of the office; and appropriates $4,000, instead of $3,000 as proposed by the House and $5,000 proposed by the Senate, for rent of building for post-office supplies.

On amendments 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, and 221, as proposed by the Senate: Appropriates in the Department of Justice for one additional Assistant Attorney-General at $5,000; increases the salary of the chief clerk of that Department from $2,200 to $2,500, and the salary of the clerk in charge of pardons from $2,000 to $2,400.

On amendment 222: Increases the amount for foreign postage for the Department of Labor from $200 to $230 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment 227: Appropriates $5,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the investigation of and report upon the various industrial school systems and also technical school systems of the United States and foreign countries by the Department of Labor.

On amendments 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 34, 180, and 163, relating to the proposed increase in the number of employees in the Senate, and the increase in the compensation of certain employees in that body, and the proposed increase in certain items of the contingent expenses of the Senate, and the proposed increase in the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office from $4,000 to $5,000, and of the Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office from $3,000 to $3,500, the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

The bill as it passed the House appropriated $20,842,446.75. As it passed the Senate it appropriated $21,353,768.75, being an increase by the Senate of $496,322. This sum has been reduced $123,246, so far as the Senate amendments have been agreed upon by the conference committee, the House yielding $160,498, and leaving $107,575 in dispute on the amendments upon which the conference committee are unable to agree.

BENJ. BUTTERWORTH,
J. G. CANNON,
WM. H. FORNEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio, who has this bill in charge, one or two questions. I came into the Hall while that part of the report was being read which relates to the amount of money appropriated for the land offices in the new States and I was struck with the large difference between the amounts named in the original bill by the House and the increases made by the Senate. I would like to know how it happens, if the House made the bill upon recommendations from the Department, that the Senate can find any justification for such large increase as appears—in one instance 100 per cent. I have assumed that the Committee on Appropriations made the original bill upon the estimates coming from the Interior Department.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I would say to my friend that the bill was made upon the estimates submitted and the information obtained by the Appropriations Committee touching the necessities which existed for making the appropriations. The House did not make as full an appropriation as was asked by the Commissioner of Public Lands. The Senate increased the amount appropriated very considerably, and on a full conference, in the presence of additional testimony touching the necessity for it, an increase was made. While we were not clear that such an increase as demanded ought to be made, nevertheless we acceded to the demands of the Land Office and reached a conclusion satisfactory, at least to the conferees, as to the increased amount.

There is a question as to whether there is a fund in the several land offices available for continuing surveys resulting from the old deposit system.

In some instances that fund has been completely exhausted. In others it has not been wholly exhausted, and we have made these appropriations and fixed these amounts with reference to the work to be done and the practicability of doing it and completing it. There are several branches to these surveys, as my friend is aware. First, the lines which are run, the original base lines, memoranda of courses and distances, etc., gathered together, and that must be approved by an agent who goes upon the ground, and then the work is submitted for a revision and for platting. I can only say, in summing up, that after a careful review of every fact that ought to have any influence in fixing the amount, we agreed upon the amounts as set forth in this report, doubling in one or two instances, as my friend has said, the amount allowed.

Mr. DUNNELL. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, there must have been a great deal of guess-work on the part of heads of Departments that came before the committee of the House. I think the committee of the House does not preserve its dignity or its character in making an appropriation for specific and well-known expenses of the Government, estimated and reported in the Book of Estimates, and then be compelled to back down and accept Senate amendments that ought not to be passed, upon no better evidence than came to the House committee originally.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I can only say in response to my friend that it is always well to back down, and to back down gracefully, when we find we ought to do so. And it often occurs, sometimes from the persistency of the Department and sometimes through additional evidence which we did not have as to the amount of the fund which was available. We are sometimes misled here as to that. And when we find that we have fallen into an error we ought to correct it.

Mr. DOCKERY. We on this side of the House did not hear what the issue was between the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL].

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. My honored friend from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] asked why we increased the appropriation for the Land Department so largely—that is, for surveying the public lands.

Mr. DUNNELL. That is, so largely over the amount originally appropriated.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. So largely over the amount reported in the bill originally, and my friend wanted to know if there was any new fact or new evidence presented to the Senate, which came to our attention subsequently, which induced us to allow the increased amount.

Mr. DOCKERY. So I understand my friend to say that the amount for surveys is increased over the estimate?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Not over the estimate, but over the amount originally in the bill.

Mr. SAYERS. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question? I notice that in the report the amendment which was put upon the bill in the House in regard to applicants for examination before the Civil Service Commission has been somewhat changed. The question which I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] is this: Under the agreement between the conferees of the Senate and the House, is it true that the applicants for certificates within the Departments in the District of Columbia alone come under the operation of the rule?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. We find that the main complaint, in fact probably the only complaint, has resulted from the fact that persons were constantly employed claiming to be from one State when in point of fact they were not from that State and possibly never saw that State, and the result not only breeding confusion, but committing a fraud upon the citizens of the State from which these persons not having the right yet nevertheless pretend to hail, and that trouble arises only in reference to appointments made in the District of Columbia. At least that was our information. We looked into that matter quite fully, and we only modified the amendment which was presented by my friend in order to make it specific. We have not in any wise diluted it nor made it less effective. I yield to my friend from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY].

Mr. FORNEY. Mr. Speaker, there is no very great change in this bill. The Senate increased it some $496,000, and they have receded $228,000. The House has yielded to $160,000, and there is still unsettled $107,000, which relates principally to the employes of the Senate. Now, the only increases of any importance that the House yielded to were the appointment of an Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and also an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury and an Assistant Attorney-General and nine members of the board of pension review.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Will my friend allow me to ask him why did the House yield to an Assistant Secretary of the Navy? None has been appointed yet by law.

Mr. FORNEY. This bill appoints him by law. The Senate passed it and we acceded to the amendment, and this bill appoints him.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Creates the position?

Mr. FORNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. You admit the creation of the position?

Mr. FORNEY. Yes; the Senate added it. We did not have the power to do so, but the Senate added it and the House concurred in it. Now, there has been an increase in the Surveyor-General's Office. The only increase in the Surveyor-General's Office is about $9,000, and it goes principally to North and South Dakota, Minnesota, Washington, and Idaho. That increase is for the officers in the Surveyor-General's Office, and those are about all the increases there are in this bill. There is still in dispute $107,000. The principal increase, as I said, is the increase of nine members of the board of pensions.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, for one, as an individual member, I can not agree to this report, for the reason that it creates an Assistant Secretary of the Navy, at a salary of $4,500; an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, at a salary of $4,500, and an Assistant Attorney-General, at a salary of $5,000. It also increases the salary of the chief clerk of the Department of Justice from $2,200 to $2,500, and makes other increases in the clerical force of that bureau that I will not now stop to enumerate. It provides for nine members of the board of pension appeals, which, in my judgment, is a number in excess of the real demands of that service. But one of my principal objections to this conference report is the fact that the conferees have receded—and I very much regret that they should have done so without instructions from the House—from the House amendment in respect to the salaries of the principal examiners of the Patent Office.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that our friends are really subject to criticism in respect to this item, because, after a free and full discussion, the House by a vote of 71 to 44 struck down the salaries from $2,500 to $2,400, continuing them at the rate which has obtained since the memorable Forty-fourth Congress. I do not believe that the conferees ought to have agreed to that increase of the Senate unless directed to do so by a vote of the House.

Another objection I have to this report—and I shall merely state my objections, and not occupy the time of the House in elaborating them—is the appropriation in general and indefinite terms of $70,500 for the mints and assay offices of the country. The Senate very properly appropriated this sum of $70,500 as a specific amount, but it seems that the Senate has receded on the demand of the majority of the House conferees. The effect of this recession is that the bill carries $70,500 less on its face than it ought to carry, but which in fact it does carry though not named in specific terms. Yet another objection, Mr. Speaker, to the bill is that it increases the salary of the three principal clerks of the Land Office from $1,800 to $2,000, whilst at the same time providing eight chiefs of division in the Land Office at the same salary.

Mr. FORNEY. The only increase there is an increase of their salaries. They are already chiefs of division in fact, but without that name, and this increases their salaries $200 each.

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes; but they are now carried as clerks of class 4 at a salary of $1,800, and this makes them chiefs of division at $2,000. Three principal examiners, as I stated, are provided for at a salary of $2,000 each.

Mr. FORNEY. Principal clerks.

Mr. DOCKERY. Very well; but the effect of this change is to take these officers without the purview of the civil service.

Mr. FORNEY. There were out of that before.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Oh, no.

Mr. DOCKERY. Three of them only—the three principal clerks.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. We recommended the appointment of these chiefs of division in the Land Office but they went out on a point of order when the bill was under consideration in the House. The Senate inserted it again, and we concur in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The majority of the Committee on Appropriations recommended it in the bill, but some of the minority rose and objected, and it went out on a point of order.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Now, I want to submit two suggestions in the matter. The first is that, without saying it in any sense except with the utmost respect, it is one of the things which is not entirely, it seems to me, in keeping with the dignity of the House, that when a matter is put in the hands of the conferees they should be vigilant and quick to agree to a provision put in by the Senate which the House had stricken out, as this was stricken out.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. On a point of order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It leaves upon it a flavor that it was put back in the Senate not altogether without the knowledge or without information to gentlemen on that side of the House. The objection is one which applies to this bill and a good deal of other legislation. It is an appointment of officers outside of the civil-service laws by which indirectly the civil-service law is impaired, when the House will not repeal it directly, and that under the leadership of gentlemen who are exceedingly forcible and exceedingly eloquent in advocating the civil-service law when it is directly attacked. Indirectly it takes these officers from under the provisions of the civil-service law and impairs the civil-service law that much; but it also impairs the relations of the House to the Senate by letting it be understood in the Senate that these matters which are cut out under the rules of the House if put in by the Senate will be agreed upon by the House.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I will say to my friend that these divisions of the Land Office are all organized and have been for a long time. There is no question, and I think my friend will not question, that there ought to be an authoritative head in each division. Without some one of rank and authority to speak to them they stand on the same plane with fifty or one hundred; and without any executive head it does not work as smoothly nor is the administration as successful as it would be otherwise. These men are simply discharging the duties that appertain to their positions, and have an additional rank and a slight additional pay given them. The propriety of it was impressed upon the committee originally when they reported the bill, and they believed it was in the interest of economy and proper administration. There was some opposition on the part of the minority in the committee, and of course when the point of order was made it was ruled out by the occupant of the chair on the ground that it was obnoxious to the twenty-first rule.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Now, my friend will bear in mind that this is not a new proposition. It was made in the Forty-ninth and in the Fiftieth Congresses, but failed in both. It was renewed in the Fifty-first Congress, and passed in the committee, brought into the House, and was defeated in the House. The House therefore instructed the conferees, so far as it could be done, and the conferees should not have receded without further instructions from the House. Now, the smallness of the salary is just sufficient to take these officers from under the civil service and put them outside of it. The matter is not, therefore, insignificant, because it is giving to the chief of that division or department the political power of appointing nine persons where before he did not have it, or rather five persons, for I believe there were three or four that he had the appointment of before.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I should say to my friend that we looked into that matter and that we would not have recommended it for the purpose he intimates, nor would it have been recommended at all, as we understood, if the appointees were to be brought in from outside; but they had the men already designated and well-fitted by long experience for the discharge of the duties; so in point of fact this opens no places for appointment, because, these men being promoted, their places will be filled under the civil-service law.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not mean to say that this was done for the purpose of taking them outside the operation of law. What I do mean to say is, that it accomplishes that end, that it does take them out, and that it takes them out at a time and under circumstances which do not require this change any more than it was required in the Forty-ninth and the Fiftieth Congresses, which refused to make it; and the change is now made when the party in power has the Executive and both branches of Congress, so as to get the benefit of the change.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Our friends over there should remember that "all things come to those who wait." [Laughter.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Yes; and they do not wait any longer than the minute when they have the power to change the law so as to get what they want. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I do not think my friend will say that this arrangement is not a wise one.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I am not prepared to say that it is a wise one. I am not prepared to say that the increase of rank and pay of an officer without changing the duties of the office is not an improper step. When you do not enlarge the duties, or increase the responsibility, or place upon the man any additional burden, I think this is an unwise precedent in a Government that employs as many persons as ours does, with our divisions and limitations. I think it is unwise to establish such a precedent, so that every other person holding an office can come to us and say: "You did this for that particular division, now why can not you do it for us?" So that, on the principle involved, I was opposed to the proposition in both the Forty-ninth and the Fiftieth Congresses, even without regard to the civil-service law.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of my friend also to the board of pensions, which stands in the same way. The board of pensions, which was created by an order of the Executive Department and then legalized by an appropriation bill, was reduced, when the present Administration came into power, from nine to three members. The business of the Pension Office was then as large as it is now. The reasons for having nine were about as great then as now, but by adopting that course they could get rid of a certain number and consolidate the pension-appeal courts. This House, on the judgment of the Chair, held that it was not in order to increase those offices; but the Senate has put the provision back precisely as we had it in our bill when it came from the committee, and has put it back under such circumstances as to raise a slight suspicion that perhaps it was done with some sort of belief that it would be agreed to by the House. Now, the creation of the offices is exactly the same as in the other case. It puts these offices outside of the civil-service law and gives the filling of them to the officer in charge.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That is true; but my friend is aware that the House did not vote that this increase of pension examiners ought not to be allowed; but, the point of order being made, the provision went out on that point of order. It was not, therefore, the judgment of the House that these officials should not be appointed, but the Chair ruled that whether they should be appointed or not, the manner of providing for the appointment was obnoxious to the rule.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. But my friend will remember that on this side of the House, so far as we could, we tendered to the gentleman an offer to increase the clerical force of that Department by giving a number of clerks of class 4 at $1,800 salary; so that the Secretary of the Interior should have the power, if he thought fit, to have a flexible court and to detail men for that purpose. This would have brought these appointments under the civil-service law. My friend declined that; and therefore I say that, taking everything into consideration, it looks as if the rules of the House were to be, in a manner not altogether unpremeditated, gotten around for the purpose of accomplishing this end.

